Mr. A. Quinn of Ayr, visited friends in Markdale last week.

Notice.—Those who are indebted to the undersigned either by note or book account, are requested to pay at once. I am determined to collect all outstanding accounts. W. Dundas.

The best time for a young man to take his girl sleighing is during a "driving snow storm." He can use both his arms to hold his girl in the sleigh, and let the snow storm do the "driving."

Mr. Madill, of Corbetton, preached both morning and evening in the Presbyterian church last Sabbath. His sermons were listened to with wrapt attention by the congregation, and well appreciated.

New Music.—A song with music on "The Wreck of the Algoma" has been composed by A. E. Davies of Port Arthur, and may now be had in sheet music form. It is well gotten up and should be very popular.

The brass band intends giving a grand concert on the 22nd instant. They are sparing no pains to make this the best concert ever given in Markdale. It will, no doubt, far surpass their last one, which was highly spoken of.

Bruce County Council passed a by-law imposing a license of $75 for hawkers and pedlars. Grey County Council also passed a similar by law, making $25 the fee for such a license. If this is put in force, there will be fewer shoddy pedlars,

Little Boy—"Mamma, they call all the Wall street men bulls or bears. Which is papa?" Mamma—"Oh, dear Willie, don't ask so many questions; go and ride your velocipede." Little Boy—"Well I just want to know whether I am a calf or a cub."

The social given by the ladies of Presbyterian church in Haskett's Hall on Monday evening last was well attended considering that the evening was very inclement. At the usual hour the company dispersed, feeling well pleased with their evening's enjoyment.

There should be a large attendance at the meetings of the Farmers' Institute to-morrow and next day, (Friday and Saturday). The meeting first day will commence at half-past one p. m., and the following day at ten o'clock. we hope to see a full house. Admission free.

The annual meeting of all Township Agricultural Societies, according to statute, is the second Thursday in January. Glenelg Society will hold their annual meeting in Haskett's hall next Thursday at 2 o'clock. A full attendance is desirable. All are welcome, but only members can vote.

Mr. L. Knapp, late liquor dealer of Shelburne, has purchased the grocery and liquor business from Mr. Wm. Hanbury of this place, and is now in possession. Mr. K. comes to us well recommended as an upright, straight forward business man in all his dealings, with several years experience in this line of business.

What are the qualities in which Triumphant Tea, Imported Direct from the growers by W. J. McFarland, signally Triumphs over other brands of pure uncolored Tea? We should point to its superior invigorating properties and fragrant aroma which are perfectly retained in their entirety by the Perfection Tea Can.

Notice.—A public meeting of the Reformers of East Grey will be held in the Township Hall. Flesherton, on Tuesday, 19th January. 1885, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of re-organization, &c., &c. Dr. Landerkin, M. P., South Grey, is expected. Friends of Reform and Good Government are cordially invited. Wm. Brown, Sec. Reform Association, East Grey.

QUINSY.

At this season of the year Quinsy and various forms of Throat Complaints prevail. Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam is an excellent throat and lung medicine, that cures Quinsy, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, and all throat and lung troubles.

Dr. Christoe's majority is 247.

Scrofula is known by swelling of the glands of the neck, abscesses, sores, a pale countenance, low vitality, and general signs of bad blood. Burdock Blood Bitters cures the scrofulous condition by making pure healthy blood.

Farmers' Institute.—A meeting of Centre Grey Farmers Institute will be held in Markdale on the 8th and 9th January when Professors Brown, Grenside, and Barre, from the Agricultural College, will deliver addresses on subjects of deep interest to the farmer. Those meetings will be free, and every farmer in the neighborhood should make it a point to be present. The meetings commence at half past one.

Hagyard's Yellow Oil is positively guaranteed to relieve or cure Rheumatic Pains, Sore Throat, Croup, Deafness, Colds, Cramps, Aches, Pains, Bruises, Frostbites, Chilblains, Stiff Cords, and all lameness and soreness, when used internally and externally according to directions.

Tannery.—We are pleased to state that we are to have an addition to our village in the person of Mr. H. McCay and family of Mono Road. He and Mr. H. D. Irwin, one of our most prosperous and influential farmers, have entered into partnership for the purpose of carrying on the tanning business, and from what we know of Mr. Irwin and what we have learned of Mr. McCay, the enterprise is sure to be a success.

Grain Thieves.—On Tuesday night last week the premises of A. Scott, A. Culbertson and W. Nichol, of Glenelg, were visited by parties who no doubt ment mischief. From Mr. Scott's barn a quantity of wheat was taken, but at the other place the thieves were driven off. On the same night a clothes line was cut but no clothes taken away. The thieves must have been green at the business by appearances.—[Grey Review.

Thousands owe their recovery from that fell destroyer Consumption, to West's Cough Syrup. Its success is unparalled in the annals of medicine. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Druggists. Jan. 7

Notice.—We regret to state that we shall be unable to furnish our Canadian patrons with Ayer's Almanacs for 1886. It was our intention to issue the usual Canadian editions, but their publication was unavoidably deferred, pending the adjustment of our difficulties with the Dominion Customs Department, and the delay has been, unfortunately, so protracted that it is now too late to print and distribute the books. Respectfully, J. C. Ayer & Co.

"What are you doing, Mary?" asked a Staten Island husband, addressing his wife.

"I'm sewing on a crazy quilt," she replied.

"Are there any buttons on it?"

"No."

"I thought not." he said; "it wouldn't be like you to be sewing on anything that needed buttons," and, drawing a deep sigh, he proceeded to fasten his suspenders with a half burned match.

The annual meeting of South Grey Teachers' Institute will be held in Durham on the 29th and 30th Sept. and 1st Oct., 1886 From circulars recently issued by the Minister of Education, we learn that Dr. McLellan will be present and will take "Outlines of the Study of Man"—Hopkins, and Lectures—Fitch, as the groundwork of some of his lectures. These works are from the Course of Reading recommended by the Minister of Education, and they should be read by teachers before the Institute is held, so that they will be prepared to discuss them.

I had for years been a miserable sufferer from Dyspepsia, and tried all known remedies and the best medical skill of my acquaintance, but still grew worse, until unable to eat any thing without great suffering, or do any kind of work. I began to think there was no hope for me. and that I must surely die; when, like a drowning man catching at a straw, I determined to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial, I at once began to Improve so rapidly that in two months I was as well as I had ever been in my life.—Wm. Evers Leamington. Sold by Hill Bro's. Free trial bottles. 6

In the multitude of things to be mentioned last week in our notice of the church opening, we entirely omitted the new organ, and the organist. Numerous were the remarks anent the beautiful tone of the organ one of Doherty's celebrated instruments which are so popular; and Mrs. T. Hill deserves the highest praise, not only for rare ability as an organist, but for self denial, patience and regular attendance. She is never from her post, rain or shine, at practice or puplic service. We have never known her to disappoint, or her place to be vacant since she took charge.

Fluid Lightning is simply a marvellous Rheumatic Remedy. I was for two months a cripple, unable to get out of the house from Sciatica. One bottle gave me instant relief, and placed me on my feet again. I have driven fourteen miles to-day (something I could not possibly have done were it not for Fluid Lightning(for the express purpose of procuring another bottle. So says Wm. Dixon, Gananoque. Only 25 cents per bottle at Hill Bro's. 6

Even in Canada, says the Hamilton Spectator, we are accustomed to speak of the Canadian Pacific railway as Canada's greatest work. But a correspondent of the London Echo calls attention to the fact that this is very far short of the truth. "Let me tell you," he says, "that it is not alone Canaday's great work, but the greatest work ever done under the British flag, or any other flag, or by any other people in any time, unless perchance the Chinese wall might be held to vie with it. Whether it be considered from an engineering, military, or political point of view it is at least three times as important as any other work in the British empire, or in the United States."

Anniversary. — The Presbyterian anniversary tea-meeting was held in Haskett's hall on the evening of New Year's day, and was a decided success. The hall was completely packed rendering it very difficult to serve tea. After the good things provided by the ladies were demolished, a lengthy programme was entered upon; Rev. Mr. Wilson presiding. The speakers were Revs. Grandy, Casson, and a gentleman from Toronto, we failed to get his name; also Mr. Steer, Mr. Madill and Dr. Sproule, M. P., and Mr. Crowthers who gave a reading and a song. The programme was well sustained and the renderings appropriate, the song by Mr. Crowthers especially brought down the house mightily. The music by the choir led by Mr. J. R. Anderson, was one of the chief features of the entertainment. Proceeds, $50.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Dability and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, Frence or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Boots! Boots! Boots!

SAVING MONEY.

Your life may now be bright and clear
And sweet as honey,
Yet some day sorrow may appear,
So save your money.
Cash is King o'er young and old,
Cash makes friends that ne'er grow cold,
Cash brings please ne'er untold—
So save your money.

If you would make your burden light
And times seem sunny;
If you would keep things going right,
Why, save your money
Buy what will only last you long—
Boots that are neat, yet cheap and strong,
Buy of McLeod, then you can't get wrong—
And so save your money

If you have jolly boys and girls,
Happy and funny,
If you would give them sterling joys
For little money,
Buy them boots that's good and smart,
That fit the feet and charm the heart,
At Wm. McLeod's, that's the spot
Where you'll save money

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Roads very bad.

An open winter expected.

Business rather dull at present as people don't like to come out through the mud.

Nothing like business.—We can now boast of a bakery, fruit and confectionary store in our village, opened by Mr. W. F. Kerton of this place, and the bread is A 1.

The Gospel Army have done good work on this circuit, but not as good as other places. About 60 have been brought into the fold in Maxwell, 40 at Providence; and they have now commenced operations at Buckingham where we wish them great success.

Mr. W. H. Milne, of Queen's University, occupied the pulpit of the C. M. church on Sabbath evening last.

Miss Phoebe Allison, of Alliston, is visiting her brother, Jas. Allison, of this place.

The election passed off very quietly and as the day was very unpleasant and the roads very bad, a large number of the voters remained at home. The following gentlemen were elected for the ensuing year:—A. McGirr, Reeve; A. McIntyre, Deputy-Reeve. Councillors — Joseph Taylor, John Hudson, John Speers. We hope they will do all they can to benefit the township while they remain in the council,

At the December meeting of Maxwell L. O. L., No, 666, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Master, A. Sharpe; Deputy-Master, John Little; Chaplain, D. A. Holman; Rec.-Sec., Chas. Little; Fin.-Sec., Geo. Burke; D. of C., Jas. Coutts; Lecturer, Wm. Stokes. Committee—R. Y. Burke, Robt. Menzie, Geo, Colgan, Silas Udell, D. Madill.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Tested Receipts.

A COTTAGE PUDDING is a cake with a sauce to it, and it is made as a cup cake, with a cup of sweet milk, three eggs, half a cup of butter beaten first to a cream, with a cup of sugar, and three cups of flour into which has been put two tea-spoonfuls of cream of tartar, and one of soda. The flavoring is lemon, and hot fruit sauce should be provided with it.

AN OYSTER PIE is a nice luncheon or side-dish at this season, and is easily made from fresh or canned oysters. Fill a pudding dish with oysters, small split crackers, cream, more oysters, pepper, salt, and butter. Let them stand on the top of the stove until boiling; then cover the top of the dish with a rich crust quite thick, and bake until the crust is browned delicately. Serve hot. This is a good dish to accompany any kind of fowl or game.

Try the following receipt for one superior lemon pie: Four yolks and two whites of eggs, four dessert spoonfuls of sugar to each egg, a lump of butter the size of a walnut, and two lemons. Strain the juice of both and grate the rind of one, which strain with the juice. Beat all together, and bake quickly in a rich under-crust. The two remaining whites may be used with four dessert spoonfuls of powdered sugar, and the grated rind of one lemon to make a meringue for the top.

ROAST CHICKEN are a delicacy, if the chickens are of good quality. Obtain, if possible, chickens with a whole breast-bone, truss them neatly, and let them be carefully singed; put celery dressing inside each chicken; tie a piece of buttered paper or a slice of bacon over the breast, and roast in a moderate oven, basting frequently. Time of roasting, about an hour. About ten minutes before they are done remove the paper or bacon, and sprinkle them freely with salt. Serve with plain gravy in a boat, not in the dish; garnish with thin slices of broiled bacon rolled up.

TREACLE (MOLASSES) PUDDING.—Half a pound of flour, quarter of a pound of suet, half a tea-spoonful of carbonate of soda, salt, one tea spoonful of ground ginger, tea-cupful of treacle, quarter of a pint of milk, one egg. Chop the suet as finely as possible, and put it into a basin with the flour, carbonate of soda and ginger. Beat up the egg, mix the treacle and milk with it and stir this into the mixture in the basin, add more milk if required to make the pudding moist. Grease a basin thoroughly, put the pudding mixture into it, cover with a greased paper. Have enough boiling water to come half-way up the basin in a saucepan, and steam for two hours.

BAKED CHICKEN PIE.—Prepare two or three plump chickens, by careful drawing, singeing, cleaning, and cutting off necks, wings and drumsticks. Joint the breasts, sides, and back-bones, and put them in an earthen stew-pot, into which has been previously placed three slices of sweet, fat, salt pork. Simmer till tender. Take out the chicken, stain off the liquor and lay the chicken in layers in a deep dish, alternating with oysters, a few bits of cracker, butter and seasoning to taste. Over the whole pour the strained stock, and cover with a rich paste half an inch thick before baking. Make incisions in the form of leaves and bake slowly one hour. The remainder of a chicken will make a fine soup, with stock in which a veal-bone has been cooked for a base, and celery root for an ingredient.

CRANBERRIES are a winter luxury; stewed and eaten with granulated oatmeal for breakfast every morning, they will make a new liver, or at least make over an old one, so that it is as good as new. For sauce, pick over one quart of sound fruit, to this put two gills of water; cover and let them simmer till the cranberries are tender, then add a good half-pound of granulated sugar, and stir all together till the sauce is a rich mass, and serve in an amber glass dish. A famous housekeeper gives the following as an excellent formula for cranberries: To two quarts of cranberries allow two and a half cups of sugar. First boil the cranberries in a pint of water for a few moments, mash them against the sides of the kettle, then add the sugar; stir continually until they boil up twice, then pour them out to cool.

BEEFSTEAK PUDDING.—("Cheshire Cheese" receipt)—Make a crust of chopped and sifted kidney suet, in the proportion of a half of a pound of suet, freed from skin, to a pound of flour, prepared by mixing with it a small salt-spoon of salt and teaspoonful of Royal Baking Powder—mix thoroughly, wet with cold water, roll out with as little flour as possible, and line a pudding-mold which has been well buttered. Take two or three pounds of juicy rump-steak, two or three lamb's kidneys, and a small can of of mushrooms; cut up the steak, and put a thick layer in the mold. Season to taste, adding a tablespoonful of walnut catsup. Add next a layer of mushrooms, then a layer of kidney, then beef, then mushrooms again, which will fill the mold. Season, adding another table spoonful of the catsup, if preferred, and cover with paste, wetting the edge, so that it will close tight, and allowing a little room for the swelling of the pastry. Tie in a cloth which has been dipped in boiling water and floured, and steam two hours; or boil gently for the same time, keeping the pot replenished with boiling water. Oysters may be employed in place of mushrooms, but it will not then be "Cheshire Cheese" Beefsteak Pudding, though it may be very good.

PLUM PUDDING.—One half pound of kidney suet, half pound of raisins (Smyrna and Malaga mixed), half a pound of fresh bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of flour, six ounces brown sugar, four ounces orange peel and citron mixed, a little salt, one-fourth of a grated nutmeg, a pinch of pulverized ginger, half dozen eggs, a small cup of sweet cream, and one of currant jelly. This is sufficient for a good sized pudding. Stone the raisins, and soak them in the melted currant jelly. Now trim the beef kidney-fat and chop it very fine, with one spoonful of flour, mix it well with the crumbs of bread, brown sugar, and the eggs; then add the the raisins, the peel, the salt, nutmeg, ginger, and last of all, and after it is all well mixed, add the cream. Spread all this in a napkin, well buttered, fold up the corners of the napkin and tie to the level of the pudding, so as to make it round; then plunge the pudding into a saucepan of boiling water, and let it boil at least four hours—constant boiling. Take out and let drain in a sieve; cut it from the top so as to keep on a level, then turn it out on a dish, removing the napkin carefully, so as not to disturb the fine part of the pudding. Sprinkle with a little alcohol. You may apply a match to the pudding when it is on the table. Serve the sauce separate. This pudding may be cooked in a mould, the mould well buttered, and the pudding tied in a napkin, also well buttered. Boil four hours.

Mr. Chas. Canniff James, B. A., classical master of the Cobourg collegiate institute, has been appointed professor of chemistry and geology in the Guelph Agricultural College. Mr. James took honors in science in Victoria University, having been the gold medalist of this year.

The fine statue of Queen Victoria, which has been placed in a niche on the west front of Lichfield Cathedral, is the work of the Princess Louise. It represents Her Majesty clad in mediæval costume, wearing a diadem and veil thrown back, and holding in her right hand a scepter and in her left a globe.

A Michigan girl outdid her companions in a craze for autograph albums by having about one hundred letters from the same number of men bound in a volume for her parlor table. As the missives represented her extensive and unusually sentimental correspondence since she had arrived at the age of chirography, the collection proved very interesting to callers.

The late M. Perrin of the Comedie Francais when a young man was betrothed to a remarkably beautiful young woman. She fell ill with smallpox and was disfigured for life. The first person to visit her when she was allowed to receive any one was M. Perrin. "Ah!" said she, with a smile, "you have come to be set free from your engagement" "I have come," said he, "to hasten the day of our marriage!"

Tewfik Pasha, the Turkish Minister at Washington, seems to be fully alive to the fact that his country will shortly need more guns. He came on from Washington last week to inspect Lieutenant Zalinski's new dynamite cartridges, and insisted upon every detail of the manufacture being explained to him. He expressed his satisfaction and a wish to order some for Turkey, should his Government consent.

William E. Cramer, editor of the Milwaukee Wisconsin, is one of the most remarkable journalists of the Northwest. He has been deaf since boyhood and is totally blind, yet he is one of the hardest workers and most thoroughly posted men in the profession. He has been in harness nearly fifty years, and his office hours are as regular as when he was young. He knows the city thoroughly, and can without difficulty go alone to any point or house he may desire to visit.

The richest woman in South America is Isadora Cousino, of Santiago, Chili. The people call her the Countess of Monte Cristo, and she traces her ancestry back to the days of the Conquest. She inherited from her husbands millions of acres, millions of money, flocks and herds, coal, copper and silver mines, a fleet of iron steamships, smelting works and a railroad, all yielding her an income of several millions a year. From her coal mines alone she has an income of $80,000 per month. The house in which she lives cost $1,000,000, and the grounds are a marvel of beauty and magnificence.

The misery of illness is nearly manifest in high life as in the rags and filth of extreme poverty.

Railroads in Every Land.

By the completion last month of the railroad from Cape Town to the South African diamond mines at Kimberley, steam cars have supplanted the tiresome stages and great ox wagons of the Dutch and British traders for about 700 miles along the direct route toward the Zambesi. The advent of the locomotive into the very region where MOFFATT and LIVINGSTONE lived among benighted savages is not only an evidence of the substantial progress of South Africa, but also illustrates the impulse that is now moving civilized nations to penetrate new fields of commerce with railroads.

These enterprises seem to be justified by similar ventures already completed. South Africa's 1,562 miles of lines, all owned by Cape Colony, paid all working expenses and maintenance during the first six months this year, and three and a half per cent. to apply on the interest account. The British Burmah railroads returned six per cent. dividends last year, and have paid good interest since the day they were opened. Gen. Strachey, the greatest authority on Indian railroads, estimates that the benefits accruing from her railways to India amount to over £30,000,000 per annum.

It is found also that immense and promising regions will continue to be isolated until they are tapped by railroads. Mr. Holt Hallett has shown that the cost of caravan traffic in Indo-China is from fifty to one hundred times as much as by railroads. The Glasgow Chamber of Commerce has declared that railroads are indispensable to open new markets for British commerce in Burmah, Siam, and western China. Gen. Gordon wrote in 1882: "A belt of arid sand of 280 miles separates the Egyptian Soudan from civilization, and till this is spanned no real progress can be made. The route from Suakim to Berber is the natural route to be opened. When that railway is completed an entire change will take place in the whole of this country." What Gordon said of the Soudan the International Association now says of the Congo—that the populous and fertile up-river regions will not be worth a penny to commerce until the worthless district of the lower river is spanned by rail.

The fact also that railroads are needed to further the political purposes of some great nations is giving a remarkable impulse to certain large enterprises. Had Khartoum been placed within easy reach of Europe by the completion of Ismail's railroad from Wady Halfa past the Nile cataracts, England would have been spared the waste of treasure and blood that her failure in the Soudan involved. No fresh war cloud between England and Russia on the Afghan border will catch them with railroads projected but unbuilt. England's iron route from the Arabian Sea to Afghanistan has this month reached the Quetta plateau through the Bolan Pass. The work on Russia's transcaspian road is advancing day and night. It is now approaching Merv, and Russia expects to carry it on to Bokhara and Tashkend. For the purpose of giving facilities to her troops, England loaned the money to Cape Colony with which the railroad to Kimberley has just been completed.

From all corners of the world we are hearing of railroads projected, surveyed, or in course of building. In Venezuela, for instance, eight or nine different lines of greater or less extent are under contract, surveys are in progress, grading and track laying are considerably advanced on two lines, and are soon to commence on others. Portugal has granted a concession for a railroad from Delagoa Bay in East Africa to the Transvaal border to connect with the Transvaal railroad which it is reported will be built by German capital. The more progressive among the Boers say they must have railroad connection with the sea. To its railroads is largely due to fact that South Africa now stands tenth on the list of the chief foreign nations dealing with England.

It is in the Oriental world, however, that new railroad schemes are most rapidly advancing. The King of Siam is eager to connect his capital with the Chinese frontier by rail, and has promised to build this road if the Indian Government will build a road through Burmah to meet the Siamese system at the frontier. The leading Chambers of Commerce in Great Britian sent agents to report upon the feasibility of this project, and Messrs. Hallett and Colquhoun have returned home with enthusiastic endorsements of the scheme. In China the powerful Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, has for some time been urging the need of railreads and telegraphs. His influence, aided by the support of other able statesmen, has already given to China over 3,000 miles of telegraphs, manned by Chinese operators, and the little nine-mile railroad near Tientsin, and is paving the way for railroad schemes that, it is believed, will in the course of time reach a large development in China. The railroad that is to connect the chief towns of Siberia is slowly advancing eastward, and surveys for projected lines are in progress in Asia Minor, the Euphrates valley, and Persia.

The development of some of these projects will be the work of many years, and some of them will doubtless utterly fail. Yet it is one of the most significant signs of the times that these schemes have entered so largely into the purposes and ambitions of the commercial world. It may yet be one of the chief glories of this century that it introduced on a large scale among the less progressive race those inventions and facilities which have assisted Western civilization to outstrip all others.

Men who complain most loudly about the inequalities of the human lot are generally a little blind to those great stores of wealth and blessing that no class can monopolize, and no wealth can buy.

A lady of fashion, while passing by a crowd looming from the Opera House had her bustle pushed from its proper position, which made the wearer look ridiculous. A gallant young tar seeing the misfortune calmly addressed her thus: "Please, missus, yer starn what-ye-may-call-it is a-all adrift on the starboard side!"

During the long French war two old ladies in Scotland ware going to the kirk. The one said to the other, "Was it no a wonderfu' thing that the Breetish were aye victorious over the French in the battle?' "Not a bit," said the other lady; "dinna you ken the Breetish aye say their prayers before gain into battle!" The other replied, "But canna the French say their prayers as weel?" The reply was most characteristic. "Hoot! Sic jabberin' bodies; wha could understan' them?"

MAXIMS FOR MERCHANTS.

True bravery is shown by performing without witnesses what one might be capable of doing before all the world.

He that talks big and arrogantly of himself, is universally condemned as a troublesome and ill-bred companion.

Beware of carelessness; no fortune will stand it long. You are on the high road to ruin the moment you think yourself rich enough to be careless.

Affectation in any part of our carriage is lighting up a candle to our defects, and never fails to make us be taken notice of, either as wanting sense or wanting sincerity.

The man who never failed in business can not possibly know whether he has any "grit" in him, or is worth a button. It is the man who fails, then rises, who is really great in his way.

There is nothing with which men are so liberal as advice. It may benefit or blight a life, or save or ruin a man. Good advice is better than gold. It should be given with wisdom and received with caution.

Every man is a debtor to his business, from which as men do, of course, seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves, by way of amends, to be a help and ornament thereunto.

Character is a fabric. Every faculty is a spinner, spinning every day its threads, and almost every day threads of a different color; and character is made up by the weaving together of all these innumerable threads of daily life.

The generality of mankind create to themselves a thousand needless anxieties by vain search after things that never, nor never will be found upon earth. Let us be contented with our lot, and endeavor to make it as happy as we can.

Signal Revenge.

Thirty-six years ago occurred the battle of Chillianwallah, at which the English ran an appalingly narrow chance of being defeated by the courageous Sikhs opposed to them. Though England did gain the day, it was only by an enormous expenditure of brave men's lives. A commemoration pillar is erected to their memory, in the garden of the Chelsa hospital.

This battle however one of the severest ever fought by the British on the soil of India, is also noteworthy because of the shadow of misfortune and disgrace overhanging it. The fourteenth regiment of dragoons, in the midst of the engagement, suddenly turned in retreat, and nearly caused a panic in the army. Its commander, Capt. King, overcome by shame afterwards committed suicide.

Previous to his death he repeatedly declared that he gave no order for retreat, and knew no reason why his troops should have fled. But the order was heard by many officers and men, and the captain's word was not believed. Public opinion gave a verdict of cowardice against him.

The circumstances of the battle have, however, been recently revived, and new evidence has come in, which, if true, frees both officer and men from the worst charge which can be preferred against soldiers.

In the regiment, says this exonerating voice, was a private who, for some reason, bore a grudge against his colonel. Though he had sought for an opportunity of taking revenge, none had presented itself. But the man was a ventriloquist! and at last his chance came.

On the day of the battle, at the critical moment, when it was infamy to take one backward step, the ventriloquist threw his voice close to the colonel and called,—

"Threes about!"

It was the signal for retreat

The regiment was a model of discipline, and had always obeyed as one man. It did so now with fatal promptitude, and in the melee of the battle-field, its retreat was soon converted into helter-skelter flight. The soldier had avenged his wrong at the expense of his comrade's honor, and at the risk of defeat to his country.

Lake Glazier, the newly discovered source of the Mississippi, is a sparkling little lake, which nestles among the pines of a wild and unfrequented region of Minnesota, just on the dividing ridge which forms the great watershed of North America. It is about a mile and a half in greatest diameter. The waters of the lake are exceedingly pure, coming from springs.

WISDOM'S WORDS.

The more you say, the less people remember.

Simplicity of character is the natural result of profound thought.

The plant of happiness cannot thrive without the air of cheerfulness.

The innocence of the intention shows nothing of the mischief of the example.

Make friends with your creditors, if you can, but never make a creditor of your friend.

The harvest gathered in the fields of the past is to be brought home for the use of the present.

Many people mistake stubbornness for bravery, meanness for economy, and vileness for wit.

Promises made in the time of affliction require a better memory than people commonly possess.

Deprive the people of the means of proper subsistence and you enslave and destroy the nation.

Cheerfulness is an excellent wearing quality. It has been called the bright weather of the heart.

We should be as cheerful of our words of our actions, and as far from speaking ill as from doing ill.

For a gold currency the people are encouraged to sacrifice their goods, their liberties, their children and themselves.

Gold and silver would be better as medals of commerce than as fluctuating legal tenders in the hands of speculators.

Give no quarter to those vices which of thine inward family, and having a right in temper plead a right and property in thee.

To avenge one's self is to confess that one has been wounded; but it is not the part of a noble mind to be wounded by an injury.

Who is wise? He that learns from every one. Who is powerful? He that governs his passions. Who is rich? He that is content.

Those that would be safe have need to be suspicious of the tempter. The garrison that surrounds a party is not far from being surrendered.

He who expresses in his conduct justice and charity accomplishes the most beautiful works; the good man is, in his way, the greatest of all artists.

Public opinion is a weak tyrant compared with our own private opinion; what a man thinks of himself, that it is which determines, or rather indicates, his fate.

It does us good to admire what is great and beautiful; but it does us infinitely more good to love it. We grow like what we admire, but we become one with what we love.

The foundation of good labor in any sphere is a good man, and all that is done to give breadth, depth and fullness to life will react in ultimate improvement upon his work.

Knowledge must be made vital in the heart before it can blossom into conduct, and the continual passing of right feeling into right action alone can form a noble character.

A Swindler's Sharp Trick.

A French nobleman played a game of ecarte with a foreign Count. The latter won and the Frenchman pulled out 10,000 francs and handed them to the winner, who quietly secured them in his pocketbook and went home. Early next morning a gentleman of aristocratic bearing and decorated with the order of the Legion d'Honneur was shown into the apartment of the foreign Count, who was still asleep. "Monsieur," he said, his tones trembling with excitement, "you have in your hands the honor of a whole family." "Indeed!" "Kindly tell me, was it you who played with M. de H.?" "Yes." "And won 10,000 francs and he paid you." "Yes, in bank notes, and I have them here." "Well, sir, the notes are false. Last night we found out the nefarious practices of our relative, and I came in heaven's name to ask you to exchange them for ten others I have brought." The noble foreigner at once changed the notes. In the evening he was not a little surprised to meet his opponent at the club, and to be asked to give him his revenge. The foreigner curtly refused, which led to an explanation. The Count drew from his pocket the exchanged notes he had received in the morning. They were false. The gentleman with the decorations was a notorious French swindler.

Hostess (to gentleman her husband has brought home to dinner): HOW WELL SPEAK ENGLISH, MR. ——.

Mr. —— (not understanding): YES, I "OUGHT TO."

Hostess: BUT YOU SPEAK REMARKABLY WELL.

Mr. ——: I OUGHT. I HAVE LIVED HERE ALL MY LIFE. IN FACT, I WAS BORN IN TORONTO.

Hostess: WHY, HOW STRANGE! I AM SURE MY HUSBAND TOLD ME THAT YOU WERE A BOHEMIAN.

AN EGYPTIAN ROMANCE.

CHAPTER XIX.

ARABI PASHA TELLS AS SECRETS WHAT HE WISHES TO BE MADE PUBLIC.

But no sooner had he accepted the war minister's offer than it struck Mr. Trezarr that by the act he, the leading European banker in Cairo, had more or less allied himself with an arch-rebel and in a manner even identified himself with the rebellion.

If it were to take the form of a successful revolution, of course this would be immaterial, for to the successful all things are forgiven, but what if the movement never rose above the dignity of a rebellion and, on its being stamped out, its leaders were shot or sent to the galleys, how would he then escape the shame of he and his family having been the arch-rebel's guests? Why, the entire European community of Cairo would curse him, that, at least, was evident.

So, instead of at once departing with the expression of security and gratitude on his face that had for a brief while dwelt there whilst receiving and accepting the war minister's invitation, he still sat on the edge of his chair, puffing and blowing with both the inward and outward heat (for the thermometer marked more than a hundred degrees), whilst he mopped his bald head with his yellow bandana handkerchief in a state of the most pitiable perplexity.

Arabi Pasha read his thoughts as clearly as though they had been expressed in words, and despising the old time server in his heart, said blandly:

"Oh, I see you are anxious to know how the good movement speeds. I say good movement unreservedly, for unless you deemed it to be such I am convinced that you would not have affianced your lovely child to its chief promoter—myself."

Mr. Trezarr fancied that a silent bow would be the best answer to this speech.

"Well, you shall know, my dear sir, for I have no secrets from one who is so soon to be my father-in-law. Of course I speak in confidence." (Here Arabi Pasha smiled involuntarily, for in hearing he wished that all that he was about to say might be circulated far and wide, and knew that his auditor was just the person to confide it in similar confidence to a hundred or so of his acquaintances, who in like manner would inform theirs in turn, until at last all Cairo was in the secret.) "You are doubtless already aware that the Khedive is no longer the ruler of Egypt save in name?"

"I have heard the rumor that your excellency has imprisoned him in his own palace."

"That is a hard way of putting it, Mr. Trezarr. My devoted soldiery are guarding him in his palace against possible harm from those who are enraged against him for the predelection that he has shown for foreigners over his own people, and equally for his safety they prevent those foreigners from compromising him further by approaching him."

Then he proceeded rapidly but explicitly to detail all that had taken place between himself and the consuls of all the leading European nations, in which he told them that Tewfik was his prisoner, adding that he had received the Sultan's approval for all that he had done and that he had received fresh instructions from his sovereign by that morning's mail.

"In evidence of their genuineness," said Arabi, "here is the diamond Order of the Medjida, the highest honor which the Sultan can bestow upon a subject. It is welcome to me chiefly because it prevents his Majesty from again altering his mind. With the guarantees that I at present hold for his active alliance, he dares not do so; and the united Turkish and Egyptian armies, with France neutral, Germany and Austria secretly supplying us and Russia and Italy almost daring England to draw the sword, what can she do, except, perhaps, make a fiasco with her ironclads as she did at Dulcigno, like a great dog barking in its kennel but unable to break the chain that holds it back from biting? If Tewfik yields to all our demands he can but remain a puppet king, and I shall be for years the real ruler of Egypt; whilst if he is obstinate, and has to fly the realm and seek safety in Europe, I shall sit on the ivory footstool and guard the silver throne for Prince Halim, even should he not appear for years."

Mr. Trezarr was by now thoroughly convinced that, to use his own inelegant similie, though Arabi Pasha had shot up like a rocket, he would not come down like the stick, that in fact events had made him the foremost man in Egypt, and that he would make a most unexceptional and brilliant match for his only child.

Again therefore he accepted the war minister's invitation that his entire family should accept the shelter of his palace from the possible violence of the mob.

But when a few minutes later he had taken his departure Arabi Pasha muttered to himself: "Ah, even he is ready to snap at me. Little does he think that I no longer dare marry his daughter."

Mr. Trezarr re-entered his carriage and drove back to his bank, meeting with no further misadventure on the way than having his hat knocked off by a stone, another missile cutting his coachman's face open a little later.

Having alighted he sent the vehicle away to the Hotel Coulomb, in the Esbekiah, with instructions to call for him as usual at four o'clock, for to a man of Mr. Trezarr's temperament the safety of his bank came before that of even wife and child.

The doors and shutters were of course tightly closed and all business suspended, but Mr. Trezarr kept his clerks hard at their books, and pretended to be equally closely engaged in his own. His ears, however, were on the alert to catch what his underlings thought of the situation, but they were a set of intrepid and adventurous young fellows, whose chief regret seemed to be that the emissaries of Toulba Pasha had visited the bank during their principal's absence to search the place and their persons for weapons, taking away with them all that they had been able to find.

"All the better," thought Mr. Trezarr, "for one incautious act might have been our ruin."

Hour after hour passed in the gaslit bank, with naught but the scratching of pens and the subdued buzz of occasional conversation within and a strange, discordant medley of sounds without; now soft, now loud, something resembling the monotonous murmur of a Summer's sea, but ever and anon rising to the shrieking wail of the Winter's tempest.

At last there was a knocking at the street door and the result of an espial through the keyhole showing that the applicant for admission was an emissary from the war office he was at once let in and the door again securely fastened in his rear.

He salaamed in silence and handed Mr. Trezarr a note, which he tore open and eagerly perused.

It was from the war minister and its purport was as follows:

"I much fear that the populace are slipping out of my grasp. I have as yet only three thousand troops wherewith to hold three hundred thousand excitable and easily maddened people in check. My advice to you is that you brick up the front windows and door of the bank and send me the keys, when I will hold myself accountable for the safety of its contents (you told me, I think that you had the necessary materials at hand in case of emergency?). I also counsel you as soon as ever this is done to get home as quietly and unostentatiously as you can, and there comfort the ladies with assurances of safety and with them quietly abide the hour when I shall send an adequate escort to conduct you to my palace, as well as Egyptian dresses wherewith to place even the risks of insult on account of your creed and race out of the range of possibility. Expect the escort soon after darkness has set in nor fear the danger in the meantime, but if the mob should unfortunately get the upper hand of me the warehouses and shops of the Europeans in the city will appeal to their cupidity and invite their attack before the private residences in the suburbs. I have still, however, a strong hope of being able to check outrage, and by to-morrow I shall have five thousand extra troops in the city and then strict order will be enforced and the European population will no longer have anything to fear."

This letter caused Mr. Trezarr considerable uneasiness. He, however, dismissed the Canvass who had brought it with a handsome present, and then at once proceeded to follow the advice that it had contained.

An abundance of bricks and ready-mixed mortar had been kept on the premises for days, owing to the possibility of a crisis like the present arriving, and now the spruce clerks pulled off their coats, tucked up their sleeves and went to work with a will, the consequence being that in something under three hours the door and all the front ground floor windows of the bank were thickly bricked up on the inside, whilst yet another hour saw the back door and all the windows save one treated in like manner, the solitary exception having to be bricked up from the outside as a matter of course, since 'twas through it that the occupants of the bank had been constrained to make their exit therefrom.

There existed a hundred chances to one, however, that the populace would never think of approaching the building from the rear, for it was only to be reached in that direction through a perfect labyrinth of ruins, and it was through this labyrinth that Mr. Trezarr and his clerks now retreated for the greater security in different directions, the banker eventually turning up at the Hotel Coulombe about the same time as one of his employes reached the war office in order to hand the bank keys and a short note of thanks to Arabi Pasha.

A few minutes later Mr. Trezarr once more re-entered his carriage and uttered the welcome word, "Home."

The blood horses spurned the dusty soil with their hoofs, and away flew the well-appointed equipage through an avenue of mimosa trees as big as English oaks in full flower.

CHAPTER XX.

NELLIE FINDS HERSELF IN A QUANDARY.

Everything was so quiet in that part of Cairo through which Mr. Trezarr passed that he began to hope that the worst was over.

The sole cause of the quietude, however, was that the aroused population had swarmed to other quarters of their huge city, leaving this portion all but deserted.

It was fortunate for the banker that it was so, and also that all the way home he encountered none of the rioters.

Arrived at Mount Carmel, Mr. Trezarr alighted from the carriage, and then entered his sumptuous residence with an almost unruffled countenance.

But instead of, as usual, proceeding to his chamber and his valet in order to make himself more presentable ere joining the ladies, he walked straight to the drawing-room, where he discovered his comely wife and lovely daughter already dressed for dinner; for all he was somewhat late, and society generally dines at five P. M. at Cairo, so as to have the entire cool of the evening at disposal for the promenade, the ride or the drive.

But there were to be no more pleasant rides, drives or promenades in its locality for a long while, and this was an intelligence that Mr. Trezarr had to break to his family.

"You look worried and tired, Paul," was Mrs. Trezarr's first observation.

At the remark Nellie glanced anxiously toward her father, but said nothing.

"Well, my dear, I own to be a little fagged, but I am about to take a holiday."

"A holiday, with matters as they are?" queried the lady of the house.

"Yes, my love, for the bank is not only locked up, it is bricked up as well, and the keys are handed over to our excellent friend, the war minister, who has promised to be responsible for the safety of everything," replied Mr. Trezarr unctuously.

"Isn't that very like intrusting a hungry fox with the charge of a poultry yard, papa?" inquired Nellie maliciously.

It was Mr. Trezarr's turn this time to wear an anxious glance, but to say nothing.

"I don't see the similitude at all, Nellie," said Mr. Trezarr severely. "His excellency Arabi Pasha is at this moment supreme ruler of Egypt, and, mark my word, he will remain so. The joint control is at an end, and while France will do nothing to oppose him. Turkey will actively help him, and I cannot believe that a British liberal government will really make war on a nation for simply supporting the freedom of its own parliament against a despot who has certainly tried hard to overthrow it. No, England will assuredly come to terms with the only man who cares for Egypt, who is cared for by Egypt or whom the Egyptian people will allow to rule over them. I am now fully convinced that this is a genuine national uprising, if ever there was one, and so directly Egypt's champion and benefactor invited us to be his guests for a few days, I accepted the invitation."

"Invited us to be his guests, papa? Why does he want us to be his guests?"

The question came from Nellie, who had suddenly turned as pale as death.

"Because, my dear," rejoined the father, "a disorganized time like the present is the rogue's harvest, and Egyptian rogues are bloodthirsty as well as dishonest. There are hundreds of religious enthusiasts also in the city who would consider it a meritorious act to shed Christian blood and to stir up others to do so as well, and as the war minister has not yet sufficient troops to keep this turbulent element in abeyance, he has offered us the shelter of his roof, under which we shall be as safe as though we were at home in old England."

"But mamma and I should be shut up in his harem and guarded by monstrous negroes as though we were prisoners, for in no other part of a Moslem habitation are our sex allowed to set foot. You would never be permitted to see us, papa, from the moment that we entered his palace."

"My dear, I think I could bear the ordeal, and besides it would only be for a few days."

"I am sure I could bear it very well, and should delight in the change," echoed Mrs. Trezarr. "Remember the pasha has already one wife, and I've no doubt that she would receive us and do the honors very creditably, or at all events according to her lights."

"Knowing that I was intended to supersede her in her husband's affections, that I was to be his second and, of course, favorite wife. And thee, once a prisoner in his harem, how could I save myself from becoming his wife if you and he determine to force me to the step? Papa, I will not accept the Pasha's invitation. You and mamma may go if you like, but I will stay here. Nothing shall force me into his harem!" exclaimed Nellie excitedly.

"But when does he expect us?" she quickly added, for it suddenly struck the lovely girl that if the removal was not to be until the morrow there would be no need of her so fearfully exciting herself, since in half a dozen hours more she would have eloped with her lover, and long ere dawn be out of reach of all further persecution.

But her father's answer knocked this hope entirely on the head, for it was:

"His excellency will send a special escort for us during the evening, and disguises to wear in addition, in order that we may be quite safe from the fury or the fanaticism of the populace as we pass along. And now, Nellie, I have only to add that you must do as your parents wish you, believing that they have your best interests at heart. I am convinced that you will be as secure in the pasha's harem as in your own bedchamber at home, for he is a highly honorable man, and, besides, matters of such importance at present engross his attention that I doubt if he will bestow on you a single thought. Ah! dinner at last."

Scarcity of Servant Girls.

The agricultural returns to the Ontario Bureau of Industries are just published for the month of November in a pamphlet of fifty pages, and very instructive reading it is. The great difficulty which the farmers of Ontario have to endure is the scarcity of servant girls. The wages of hired men have fallen from $20 to $17 per month, while girls' wages have risen fifty per cent.; but young women are scarcely to be hired at all. "Girls for housework are hard to be got at any price, says Mr. C. H. Kitchen of Townsend; "it would be a good idea to import good girls." "Plenty of girls to marry," says George Buskin of Artemesia, "but not to work in farm houses at milking cows." "Domestic servants are very scarce," writes Thomas Loyd Jones of Burford, "which is a great drawback to our wives, who are nothing better than white slaves. What with raising a family and doing the drudgery of a farm house, this state of things will have a most damaging effect on the rising generation." The case in North Grimsby is still more interesting. According to Mr. J. W. Van Dozer, "servant girls are scarce, and those we have are getting to be good organ players." So in Whitchurch, according to Mr. M. Jones, "there is a lack of domestic servants. The agent convinces a family that an organ is the only thing to afford uninterrupted happiness, and when a girl can play 'Old Grimes is Dead' she is no longer a domestic servant." At Haldimand, as we are told by George Kennedy, "the girls have all got above hiring; we cannot get them for love or money." At Yonge also, according to Mr. Thomas Moulton, "girls for servants are scarce, but for wives they are plenty."

"Continued in our neck's as the fellow said when he poured out a glass of wine.

A silver quarter was found in the intestines of a four-pound trout which was being dressed for the table at Virginia City, Nev., a short time ago. It was covered with a black coating nearly an eighth of an inch thick, and had evidently been in the trout's stomach for a long time. The coin was probably dropped by some fisherman, and the fish, seeing the glittering coin, darted at and swallowed it.

THE WORLD OVER.

The revenue of the widowed Queen of Spain is now reduced to $50,000 a year.

Adelaide Rudolph, a niece of Mr. Garfield, has been elected Latin professor of the Kansas State University.

Mr. H. F. Billing, who has just returned from Honduras, declares that in that land three crops of corn can be grown in a year.

Glue is rendered waterproof by first soaking it in water until it becomes soft, and then melting it, with gentle heat, in linseed oil.

An Indian runner ran a mile race in Wyandotte, Kansas, last week against two champions on roller skates and beat both with ease.

Prairie chickens have this year appeared in abundance in the valley of the Colorado, Western Texas, where they have never been seen hitherto.

A negro, overtaken upon a railway trestle by a train, a few days ago, jumped down sixty feet into the Etowah River, and escaped without serious hurt.

Some of the medical papers say that a great deal of quiet tippling, especially among women, is carried on by means of the quasi-medicament called "beef, iron, and wine."

An organization has been formed in Madison Valley, M. T., with this significant motto, "You had better mind whose range you are on and whose cattle you are branding."

An interesting relic of the famous Sir Walter Raleigh was sold in London the other day. It consists of Sir Walter's original tobacco pipe, which on a certain memorable occasion excited the disgust of Queen Elizabeth.

A gigantic engineering scheme is to connect the Caspian Sea with the Persian Gulf by way of the valley of the Euphrates. This would make Asia an island, and would change the tides of travel and business throughout the Eastern world.

The British Museum has now a department entirely devoted to newspapers, which is a great convenience. The number of readers, by special ticket, has now increased so largely that although only adults are admitted, more room will soon have to be provided or the admission limited.

Doctors say that women should be cautious how they call to offer sympathy to neighbors having sick children. Women's clothing offers inducements to fugitive bacteria, and several instances have been recorded lately in which contagious diseases are known to have been brought about by germs carried into the household in the folds of heavy woollen fabrics.

An excursion of 400 people, on its way to California, stopped at El Paso, Texas, one day last week. Nearly every one immediately crossed to El Paso del Norte, on the Mexican side, to witness the bull fights in progress at a festival. They were chiefly Boston people, and explained that they went out of purely scientific curiosity; but the Mexicans, who observed their enthusiasm, think otherwise.

Lord Waterford, Master of the Buckhounds, is so crippled by a fall from his horse last year that he cannot ride or even walk without difficulty. His uncle, the third Marquis, was killed out hunting, as was the eldest son of a former holder of the title. Since the Irish people interferred with his hounds, Lord W. has lived in England. He had previously resided eight months of the year in Ireland.

An Indiana Congressman recently found in his mail one letter from a woman who complained that her husband had left her seven years ago, and requested the Congressman to go to the Census Office, get her recreant spouse's address, and send it to her. A second letter requested the Representative to require the United States Minister at Rome to send the writer, by mail, a living Italian queen bee.

A new law in Georgia enjoins that poisons must be put up in scarlet wrappers, and the bottles labelled with paper of the same color, the printing to be in white letters. "Of all the hard papers to find in this market," said a wholesale druggist, "scarlet is the most difficult, and three printers to whom I have applied say that they cannot print in white upon such a surface. Those lawmakers could not have hit upon a more difficult problem in the way of packing for us to solve."

The belief that agricultural dullness in England has been greatly exaggerated for party purposes finds support in the fact that an official return from the Bankruptcy Court shows that in the past fourteen years, out of a total of 1,175 bankrupts in East Kent, only 59 were farmers and dairymen, while under the act of 1883 only four farmers in East Kent have filed petitions in the Bankruptcy Court. Yet the farmers howl piteously for a duty on American imports, which will not be imposed, howl they never so loudly.

According to a lately issued department report of the British army in 1883, the number of applicants for military service was 59 436. Of these, 35,976 were laborers; 8,636 were manufacturing artisans, and 9,389 were mechanics. The clerks numbered 3 203 and the professional men or students 645. An improvement over former years in the education of the men was especially noted. Of the 57,844 reported upon, 4 553 are described as well educated, 41,608 could read and write, 4,507 could read only, and 7,179 were unable to read. Among the 81,677 men serving in the United Kingdom, only six cases of smallpox occurred, with one death, during the year.

It is said that a large part of the popcorn used in the world comes from Bloomington, Ill., where the farmers' wives and children used to consider it their perquisite. In 1884 the crop was so large that the price fell to two cents a pound, and then experiments were made to use it as a food rather than a confection. A farmer who fed his cows with popcorn says they gave more milk than ever before. Others made "mush" of it, and found it more palatable and nourishing than the ordinary article. Then the chemists analyzed it and declared it to contain more albuminoids than most of the other cereals; so popcorn bids fair to become a recognized diet.

A singular sort of manure for potato fields has been introduced on a Pomeranian model farm. Hitherto herrings and potatoes have been known as a palatable dish in family households. The manager of the farm in question has hit upon the idea of blending them from the start by planting his seed potatoes with a herring placed in every heap, and with so decided a success as to cause him to increase the area thus planted from twenty acres last year to sixty in the present one. The expense he calculates at about nine marks per acre, which is cheaper than the cost of any other kind of manure, and amply repays the outlay. Of course it can only be employed near the sea coast.

The King of Bavaria keeps carefully out of sight, but contrives to provide matter for more chroniques about his private doings than any of the visible monarchs of Europe. King Ludwig's latest eccentricity is remarkable even for him; he has been photographed. During one of his solitary walks in the Bavarian Alps he encountered an unamiable ox, which barred the way and refused to allow his Majesty to pass. For a bovine subject to make himself so unpleasantly conspicuous was not to be endured; wherefore the King seized a plank which happened to be at hand, and, placing himself in a position of attack, as with a bayonet, he prepared to charge. Then, of course, the surly ox sheered off and allowed the King to pass, and he was so pleased with his own exploit that he had himself photographed in the attitude of charging.

Ignorance Regarding Hydrophobia.

There is probably more ignorance abroad in the land relative to hydrophobia than almost any other disease that man or beast is heir to. It is quite safe to say that on an average of fifty dogs killed as rabid not more than one had the real rabies or hydrophobia. Most of the dogs killed as mad are simply afflicted with fits. A dog is seen running around aimlessly, snapping its jaws, from which foam is exuding, and immediately the cry of "mad dog" is raised, and the animal is killed. Should anyone be bitten visions of a horrible death from hydrophobia are conjured up, and for weeks and months the victim lives in a constant torture of fear. Now dogs are subject to fits, especially in certain stages of distemper, and from other causes, and the symptoms of the disease are as above stated. Dogs never become mad suddenly. The disease progresses slowly, and the symptoms are readily discernible to one posted. The dog shows a great fear of light, hiding away in dark places, and comes out very reluctantly and only at the stern commands of its master. It develops an abnormal appetite, eating boards, and even pieces of old sheet iron, tin, &c. It shows great nervousness, starting suddenly in apparent great fear of nothing. Its coat becomes dull and rough. Finally, it shows a great horror for water, and then begins to wander around snapping at objects aimlessly. It seldom moves with much speed. Its head is generally held low, its tail carried well between its legs, and its back arched. One who has seen a real mad dog will never confound it with the animal charging around with fits. When three or four of the above symptoms develop themselves, it is the part of prudence to kill the dog.

Give the Boys a Chance.

Frank and trustworthy boys carry their honesty on their faces, and when such are needed for services, or desire any favor, an intelligent person is not only excusable for putting faith in them, but may confer a great encouragement and benefit by doing so. A gentleman of wealth and high official position says:

Somewhat more than fifty years ago I was appointed midshipman in the navy and sent to New York. I was only 14 years old, and being of a delicate make and small stature, did not look more than 11. My previous life had been spent in the country, and I knew nothing of city ways or business proceedings. Payday was the 30th of the month, but I wanted some money on the 20th, and passing through Wall street I went in a broker's office and said:

"You lend money here, do you not?"

"Yes."

"I want to borrow $20 for ten days," I said.

I did not then understand the quizzical manner with which the broker looked at me before replying:

"You shall have it and I won't charge you any interest for it either."

He gave me the money and I signed the receipt; and I need not add, the twenty dollars were promptly returned at the expiration of ten days. I am sorry that I have forgot the name of the broker. I mentioned the incident many years afterward to a gentleman who said it was the most extraordinary story he had ever heard of a Wall street broker, of all men.

Another case happened in Washington about fifteen years ago. I was standing on the porch of Willard's Hotel, when a little boy with a bright, honest face said to me:

"Please, sir, lend me twenty-five cents to set me up in business. I want to buy some newspapers to sell."

I replied:

"My boy, I haven't got twenty-five cents, but here are fifty cents, and when you want to return it you will find me at this hotel."

"Thank you," said the little lad, "I will bring it back."

I never expected to see him or the money again, and considered it a donation; but in the evening as I was walking up and down, in the entrance hall, my coat was pulled by a little newsboy, and I turned and beheld the youngster who had applied for a loan in the morning, with the same bright face that had attracted me then.

"Well, my little man, what is it?" I said, as though I didn't know him.

"I have brought back your fifty cents, sir," said he, "and I am ever so much obliged to you. I have made more than a dollar clear profit with your money."

Killed His Father and a Mule With One Shot.

The other night at Haddock's, thirteen miles from Macon, Ga., John Thomas, 11 years old, heard a noise in the lot, and supposing it to be made by the cows fired his gun twice in the direction of the noise. On Sunday morning the dead body of Bob Thomas, the father of the boy, was found with the top of his head shot off. A mule was killed by the other shot.

MARKDALE JANUARY 7 1886

VARIOUS MATTERS.

Notwithstanding the municipal elections with all their attendant excitement, there appears to be an insufficient stock of news to supply the demand. The results of many of the elections are a surprise to the ratepayers, proving to a demonstration how little any one can foretell results under the ballot system of voting. One thing is, however, strongly in its favor, it brings quietness and order. The struggle is now over for 1886, and it becomes every ratepayer to forget past differences, and all pull togethor for the right. Glenelg has a bran new council with one exception, that is Mr. McCuaig. Holland has re-elected all the old council. Euphrasia council all re-elected except one, Mr. Erskine takes Mr. Shepherdson's place. Artemesia has two new men, J. Boland and W. G. Pickell.

The public schools have opened after the holidays, and are well attended. We regret to say that Miss Ford, teacher of the 2nd department, is ill, not being able to teach for the present.

At a meeting of the candidates for Village Police, held at the Revere Hotel on Saturday evening, the question of village improvements was freely discussed, and schemes proposed and strongly favored to erect a town hall and lock-up, procure a fire engine, have a hook-and-ladder company, drain the village, and other undertakings at a cost in all of $14,000. Should all those improvements go on the coming summer, there will be employment for a large number of laborers.

WHOLESALE SERENADE.

Our village was treated to a serenade on the last night of the old year, which was prolonged well nigh to daylight the following morning. They commenced about eleven on Mill St., and between their brilliant torch lights, excellent music and gentlemanly and jovial demeanor, captured and captivated nearly every dwelling in town, not excepting the parsons. They were banquetted five times during the seven hours, and had their treasury replenished to the tune of $47 in cash and since then they have received $8 more which makes the handsome sum of $55. Many of the citizens were awakened from their peaceful slumber, and in their excitement took them for burglars, or Fenians, or Gabriel's last trump. They, however, tried to console themselves on first thought, that they had little or no money to loose, and on the second, that some of the children had a revolver, or if not there was surely broken broom sticks which had done service in domestic battles; but if it is Gabriel's last trump, we have no chance, not at all prepared to meet our doom; would'nt it be a good time to turn over a new leaf on the first morning of the new year? Wish we had commenced a year earlier, but now it's too late, and so they shook in terror until some one would whisper "it's the brass band," and then they would commence to breathe easy; what a relief came when the fact was known that it was "our jolly band."

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—In connection with the opening of your new Methodist church, the general expression of satisfaction is highly gratifying to me, and I thankfully acknowledge the measure of praise intended for myself, but it also becomes me to award honor where it is due. While I have endeavored to please my patrons and the public, and what is more difficult, to satisfy myself, my labors would have been more severe and less successful had I not been so fortunate as to have for a contractor, a competent and conscientious man, such as Mr. Richards has proved himself to be. Considering his previous inexperience and the certainty of financial loss, his determined and successful effort to give satisfaction, entitles him to the highest praise and the utmost confidence of his fellow-townsmen. His work would be a credit to any mechanic, and his handling of materials, sub-contractors and workmen has been most businesslike. But neither Architect nor contractor could demonstrate their ability without the consent and co-operation of a building committee who have discharged their trust in the most sagacious and agreeable manner. They have been liberal, and at the same time economical, and in every way rendered our labors easy and pleasant; while in their turn, it is evident, they have represented a generous and united community.

I shall long bear in grateful remembrance my pleasant business and social relations with the Markdale people; and now wishing all a happy New Year, and trusting they may long and peacefully enjoy the fruit of their labors and liberality, I remain,

Ever at your service,

M. B. AYLSWORTH, Arch't,

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Dear Editor, to you and your numerous readers a happy New Year.

Another Christmas day has come and gone, and we think was very pleasantly spent by the residents of our town. Large numbers enjoyed themselves skating on the beautiful sheet of ice on W. H. Flesher's pond. In the evening there was a good turnout to the Presbyterian Sabbath School anniversary. After all had enjoyed a comfortable tea, and the people had assembled in the audience room of the church, a very interesting programme was rendersd, principally by the school. A cantata — "Merry Christmas"—in which about 35 persons took part, was well rendered, and duly appreciated by the audience. Proceeds of the evening over $60.00.

Rev. Mr. Howell, of Owen Sound, delivered a very impressive Sabbath School anniversary sermon in the Presbyterian church here on Sabbath evening last.

CRUTCHES RENDERED USELESS.

The poor cripple who has to use crutches on account of Rheumatism, stiff and swollen joints, contracted cords, and other aches, pains and lameness, may throw aside his crutches if he will try Hagyard's Yellow Oil faithfully.

From our own correspondent.

The holiday season has come and ; the municipal elections are ; and everybody has again got ly settled down to the duties of . The Sabbath School anniversary connection with the Methodist ch here, held their annual iversary on New Year's evening was well attended. After the al tea, a very good program was through; almost two hours up by the pupils of the school. part of the entertainment was er tiresome to the audience as the t of what was given by the ldren could not be heard at the k of the church. The entertain- was closed by a cantata which very well rendered. Much to discomfort and disappointment of audience several gave their parts to too low to be heard by those at a distance.

Although Monday (election day) so wet and unpleasant every voter stir and out in good time to ake his mark for who he or she ought to be the best man. The test in this and Eugenia wards councillors was keen. Mr. McKee ill has the confidence of the rate- yers of No. 4 and was returned by a jority of 13 over his opponent Mr. ollar. Mr. Pickell in this ward ected by a majority of 14 over his pponent Mr. G. Moore. For Reeve, r. Christoe still carries the plume, turned by a much larger majority an the most sanguine friends and pporters expected (over 250) thus owing the confidence the ratepayers Artemesia still repose in the Dr.; d thus for the present year the fight over and the composition of our ouncil is good therefore we may look r great and good things from them. r Mr. Elliott we hope that from large majority with which he was ected to stay at home, he will feel mfortable, as he evidently wished know the opinion of his constituency the question and the answer is nclusive. Our brass band serenaded successful candidates in the even- , after which a large gathering sembled in the town hall and ddresses were delivered by the Reeve, r. Serious Row at Proton Station

SEVERAL ARRESTS.

On Saturday morning last a dastardly melee took place near Proton Station between a family named Rutherford, who runs the brick yard, and Robt. Neilson. It appears Neilson sold Rutherford the property as well as house where both families live, Neilson having the right to dwell in a portion of said house until a stated time. It would appear that Rutherford wished Neilson to leave the house before his time was up, and notified him to that effect, but Neilson could not procure, or erect a place at this season of the year, so Rutherford endeavered to make things so unpleasant that he would be forced to leave for peace sake. Not being successful, he threatened to "clean him out," and on the above morning undertook to do so, he and his two sons and hired man, with iron poker and clubs. Neilson's man came to his assistance, but both were badly belabored by the other four, The four were arrested and taken to Owen Sound on Tuesday, where a magistrates court was to be held yesterday.

GREAT IMPROVEMENTS FOR 1886!

The aim of "GRIP" is to set forth, in an impartial and independent manner, the passing events of Canadian political and social life. Its Cartoons speak more definitely and more pleasingly than whole columns of editorial. In this pungent, easily appreciable, and artistic style of presenting a subject, the whole situation is revealed at a glance. The success of Grip shows how well this fact is appreciated—its Cartoons on the passing political events of the country being even more eagerly sought after than the chaste and humorous letter-press of the paper,—though the latter is equal to that of any similar publication on the continent.

The publishers of Grip are making extensive improvements for 1886. The old cover is to be discarded, and the journal will hereafter comprise 12 pages, and be printed on heavy toned and calendered paper,—every number being so artistically executed as to compare favorably with the best papers of the kind on the continent. The advts. will be compressed and more systematically arranged; while similar improvements will be made as to the letter-press. A new and handsome design will adorn the title-page; while the Cartoons will certainly not suffer from extensive improvements in the artistic department.

The price of Grip will hereafter be $3 a year, which is lower than any paper of its kind in America.—most of them selling for $5. Single numbers of Grip will be 10 cents.

Twice a year at Midsummer and Christmas, a beautiful special number will be issued, the number of pages being increased, and pleasing features introduced.—particulars of which will be given in preceding issues. These numbers will be presented to subscribers without extra charge.

THE FARM.

Swampy Lots.—Not so Bad as They Look

When land can be drained, and yet is left year after year, to grow sedges and swamp grass, there ought to be a good reason for it, or else it shows negligent farming. I have just such a lot—three acres or more in extent, with hardly a square rod of dry ground on it, except just along one edge, where the cows go to find a dry spot to lie upon. A tall willow hedge fences it on a part of one side, and there is a brook and many springs of never failing water in it. Here the bog-grass is green earlier than anywhere else, and my Jersey cows get enough of it to color their butter a month or two earlier than they otherwise would. In fact, as soon as the green shows, be it in March or February, they have a chance at it, and we get golden butter from that time on. There is not much nutriment in the grass, or whatever the vegetation is—I think sedge or carex is the name for it— but it contains chlorophyl all the same, which, though green in the plant is yellow in the butter. It does not take many days of mild weather to start the tussocks sprouting, by day, and the peepers piping by night, all over the swamp, and very soon the cows will need very little, if any other fodder. I do not think there is as much butter in these sedges, even though tender, succulent and abundant, as there is in poor upland pasture. Still, the butter comes abundantly, and it has not only good color, but a fresh grassy flavor.

The warm weather comes on, and the sedge becomes tough and wiry. The cows gnaw the upland grasses, which grow on the few patches of hard ground, down to the roots, so after the grass starts well on the upland, the cows of course "go to grass," and leave the sedge to grow. Well, it does grow, and after the hay crop is all in, we mow this, and it gives me a big stack of several tons of at least good bedding. Young stock will eat a good part of it, and cows and horses nibble at it. It is rich in ash constituents, and goes a great ways toward making a big manure pile. If I were to "reclaim" the meadows, I should hardly know what to do. It would change my whole system—no yellow butter in March, and very little in April. I would have to raise more rye for straw, get less and not so valuable manure, and not have such an easy time with my haying. No doubt the meadow would yield splendid timothy and orchard grass, and there would be more money in it, but now, as for a good many years past, I am not quite ready to give up the only swamp meadow I have left.

Timely Suggestions.

We find the following plan floating among our exchanges: Have a strap in halter long enough to pass through ring in post or manger and reach to the hind feet when the horse stands as naturally tied. Fasten a strap around the ankle of one hind foot, pass the halter-strap through the ring, between the fore legs, and fasten to the strap around ankle; pass a surcingle around the horse to hold up the strap. Let him pull; he will sit down like a dog, only to get up the worst beat horse you ever saw. A few attempts will break the most inveterate halter-breaker.

Probably posts and timbers cut now will not prove as durable as if cut at midsummer. Such is said to be the experience of those who have tried cutting at both seasons, but few want to spend time then to cut fence-posts, and it is well to save out all such as are suitable for that purpose when cutting fuel. Bean poles and pea-brush may also be saved out now, which will save time in getting them at planting time.

There is great economy in feeding cornstalks which have first been cut into as short pieces as possible. If the stalks are cut before frost injures them, cattle will devour nearly the entire stalk. An acre of stalks thus managed will keep a cow three months, but it will pay to add some corn-meal, especially if the cow is giving milk for butter. If milk only is desired, bran made into a slop with warm water is better than corn-meal, which is likely to fatten rather than increase the milk yield.

The Homestead finds no trouble in making a hog fence of wire. Use six wires, and posts about a rod apart. Use hog wire for the lower strands, and pull the lower wire quite close to the ground, and the second four inches above the first. They are cheaper than boards and in every way better.

Most of the farming that can be done in winter is in the barnyard. Before cold weather it should be covered two or more feet deep with straw, which will be trampled down while the ground is soft, and will help to save the droppings of stock from waste. Successive layers of straw may be added at times, especially if there is stock enough to make a due proportion of manure.

Live Stock Notes.

January is a critical month with all kinds of live stock. They should be kept comfortable and gaining. If they begin to fall off in condition, they will be almost sure to lose rapidly, and will require more food and better care to keep them up, than if well housed, and continuously well fed. Be systematic and regular, then they will not stand and worry for food or water, and will take time to feed, to ruminate, and to rest. Look after sheds and stables, to keep them clean and warm. Water ought not to freeze in cow or horse stables, on the coldest nights, and at the same time the ventilation should be such, that the air is always sweet. Pigs suffer greatly with the cold, and should have dry, well-littered nests, always. Litter them with straw or swamp hay, enough so that they can cover themselves out of sight in it. Sheep should have dry sheds; they bear a great deal of cold, but should not have wet nor dirty straw to lie in. Where much straw is to be thrown into their sheds, provide a few movable platforms, like old barn doors, for them to stand upon. They will be a great comfort to them, and they are easily turned over when fresh straw is thrown in, or they get dirty. Fowls will lay if they have warm houses, are well fed, and have a chance to exercise. The free range of the cattle sheds, sheep sheds, and the barnyards, gives usually sufficient exercise. If debarred from these, they must have sheltered runs and bare ground. Ducks need to be well fed, but not allowed to get too fat if they are to begin laying early. Too much corn is always bad, except for fattening poultry, as it produces internal fat, stops laying, and makes the fowls lazy. No exercise, no eggs.

Glints of Home Life.

BY ANNIE L. JACK.

There are many lessons to be learned by the children at Christmas that we hardly realize at the time, but often see afterward in the wise ordering of a Providence that guides all things.

The blessedness of giving should be inculcated more than that of receiving, for it is part of the privilege of the season.

There is a lesson of patience, too, in the waiting for the day and its enjoyments and a lesson of faith in the trust that it will bring happiness; so the three graces are taught by the advent of the Christmas morning.

To the housekeeper it is a busy season and in the country there is as much work as at midsummer. Generally a touch of house-cleaning precedes it; then the canning for extra meat, and attention to fowls and the condiments of mince pies, and plum pudding; and when about the Christmas pudding it is as well to make up sufficient to divide into two or three. Boil them all for five hours, then hang in a cool place.

They are better for the keeping, and an hour's boiling prepares them for the table, and gives a nice change during New Year festivities. There is a grain called corn flour that the children of one household are fond of, and in the form of porridge it makes a good supper for little ones, when eaten with sugar and milk It is white, and wholesome, and preferable to corn starch as being more nutritious, and requiring no additions to make it palatable. Children's appetites are often variable about these times, but there is really nothing better than to wrap them well up and give them plenty of air and exercise. But there must be warm underwear for all in this Canadian climate if one would have health. Then, while the long evenings last, let there be an hour before bed time when they can play and sing with you—let it be games, or any other pleasant way, and let the singing be from their hearts and something they will remember in after years.

About holiday time, when friends drop in, it is often desirable to dispense hospitality. There is nothing better than a cup of coffee, with a simple cake and a dish of good fruit. A very agreeable style of coffee is "Cafe au Lait," made by straining a quart of clear strong coffee through muslin and boiling a quart of milk. Scald the coffee urn and pour in coffee and milk alternately stirring the while. Prepare a pint of whipped cream, and beat stiff the whites of two eggs with a tablespoonful of powdered sugar. Wrap a cloth around the urn for five minutes and when sent to table put a large spoonful of the sweetened whites and cream upon each cup. The simple hospitality we extend at this time does not depend so much on the quantity of the viands, as the manner of the hostess. Given with a truly pleasant appreciation of one's guest the plainest food becomes ambrosial. The holidays are the children's time of enjoyment, too, and if their home is made pleasant they will not seek to stray from it. Let the New Year be ushered in with good wishes and resolves, but also with kindly deeds, and mutual forbearance in the family circle. While we are busy with the rich food the season makes fashionable, let us not forget that plenty of fruit is a corrective to the system, and much more healthful for children than a surplus of sweets. An orange after dinner is better than pastry, and apples are always wholesome. A very nice way to use apple sauce is to take a quart of it, fine and smooth, rub into it while hot sugar to make it quite sweet, nutmeg, and a spoonful of butter; make a heap of it in a dish, wet it all over with beaten egg, and sift rolled cracker thickly over it. Bake half an hour and eat hot. It is not the sumptuous fare or extravagant expenditure for provisions that makes food palatable, it is the knowing how to make the most of it and to serve it to the best advantage.

A Specimen Spiritualist.

A noted spiritualist of New York visited Montreal some time ago, and before leaving had several conferences with some of the leading dead of that City. His acquaintanceship in the other world extends back to gentlemen who lived at the time of the deluge; and he has been enlightening some of the people in the United States, as we perceive by a New York paper, upon certain Scriptural problems. He is perfectly well acquainted, he says, with Jonah, whom he describes as a person of wavering character, though "extremely sociable;" and he declares that "the gentleman never was swallowed by a whale." The Scriptures are true he, maintains, but "the incident with respect to my friend Jonah was this: He was fleeing away from certain people, and God put in his way a ship whose name was The Whale. Into that vessel my friend went; and after the days mentioned in Holy Writ, he was delivered from the ship, which was cast upon dry land." The New York papers seem to delight in his irreverence; and a large number of persons accept the new version of Jonah, and ask all manner of questions respecting his personal appearance &c. The spiritualist, however, is allowing his mind to wander away from sacred things, and he spends his time, at latest accounts, raving about a beautiful Egyptian Princess, a daughter of one of the Pharoahs, who, he declares, reciprocates his affection. Two obstacles are in the way of his marrying the Eastern beauty with the large, dusky eyes, namely, he has a wife in New York, and he has not the advantage of being dead. He prays for his release from life hourly, and the only cloud that stands upon the exquisite horizon of the other world is the dread that when his wife follows, she may seek to separate him from his beautiful bride, with her lotus buds, and her divine Scarabei. He was seized with an illness last week, which he believed would be fatal, and as he lay upon his couch, with rigid eyes, he repeated in an ecstacy of delight,

"I am dying, Egypt, dying;
Ebbs the crimson life-blood fast—"

The glorious vision was broken up by the voice of his wife, "You're dhrunk agin, you baist, are ye?' The princess tripped back into the "vasty deeps," and the spiritualist sat up and looked in speechless woe upon his fat and ugly wife.

The Chemist and Druggist tells how an astute rascal has been playing "what the Americans would call the disinfecting racket." Then he blows up his furnace and creates so outrageous a stink that the servants leave the house, and he soon follows them with everything he can lay his hands on.

Referring to the decision of the Roman Church declaring the operation of craniotomy to constitute homicide, Dr. Mielziner writes to the Medical Record that according to the Mishna—the earliest collection of rabbinical decisions—"it is justifiable to kill the unborn infant in order to save the mother, as her life precedes his life. If the child be partially born, however, the rule does not apply, as "one human life must not be set aside on account of another.

In the Chinese maritime reports it is stated that the Amis savages of South Formosa "harden their children" by bathing. The infant is thrown into a tub of cold water on the day of his birth, and a month afterward is taken to the river or sea and allowed to struggle until tired out. The Amis children can swim long before they are able to walk. It is said that the "hardened" ones become strong because they were born so; the treatment knocks out the weak ones.

A Connecticut deacon received a slight injury to one of his eyes, which gave the organ a peculiar, fixed expression. Hence, when he asked the village drug clerk for soda water, that experienced person believed he recognized the mute request for superior old pale which prevails in many temperance villages. He acted on this belief. The deacon was really surprised, and flushed slightly as he drained the glass, but he has become a regular customer for "soda," and the salary of the clerk has been raised.

The late Lord Ranelagh left three illegitimate daughters by a woman of great beauty but obscure birth. One of them married the Hon. Mark Napier, second son of Lord Napier, remembered as a boy in Washington when his father was British Minister there, immediately preceding Lord Lyons, and who is now the very able barrister who conducted Arabi's defence. Another is wedded in Australia, and the other is Mrs. Langtry's sister-in-law, having married Mr. Le Breton, her brother, of Jersey Island.

A writer in the People's Health Journal tells of a debilitated patient who did not do at all well on beef tea, but was easily restored to health on a diet of bean soup. The only remarkable thing about this is that the patient never expected to derive strength and nourishment from beef tea alone. Considering that we have upward of a hundred thousand doctors, and that a very large proportion of them are fully agreed that beef tea is almost valueless except as a stimulant, it is surprising that people continue to look upon it as a feod.

A bee's working tools comprize a variety equal to that of the average mechanic. The feet of the common working bee exhibit the combination of a basket, a brush, and a pair of pincers. The brush, the hairs of which are arranged in symmetrical rows, is only to be seen with the microscope. With this brush of fairy delicacy the bee brushes its velvet robe to remove the pollen dust with which it becomes loaded while sucking up the nectar. Another article, hollowed like a spoon, receives all the gleanings the insect carries to the hive.

The cause of cold waves, Lieut. Woodruff of the U. S Signal Service Bureau says, is not yet understood. He explains that in various investigations and studies it has been shown that "a fall of temperature succeeds or follows an area of low barometer and a rise precedes such an area," and asks the following question: "Is the cold the effect of an area of high barometer, or is the area of high barometer due to decrease of temperature?" The prediction of the approach or progress of cold waves is as yet apt to go wrong nine times out of ten. The most intense cold waves follow severe storms.

The London Medical Press learns that "an American lady is driving in a carriage and six horses through our provincial towns, attracting people by means of her brass band to accept her device and medicine as from the world renowned American lady doctor." The same paper tells of an English quack "now travelling in America with a very lovely young woman, whom he exhibits as a result of his medicine, which, he declares, causes the perfection of her complexion. He sells a tonic, too, to which he attributes the abundance of her hair, and drugs for the increase or reduction of flesh to her standard."

"Gat" Howard Slandered.

A Montreal newspaper published the other day, in what purported to be a special from Toronto, a charge against Howard, the Gatling man, of having scalped a dead Indian at Fish Creek. That this story is as false as many others which have been spitefully circulated about Captain Howard will be borne out by any who were at Fish Creek. HEALTH.

Fatigue and Indigestion.

The following wise remarks on this subject we quote from Health, an English journal devoted to scientific hygiene :—

Another cause of imperfect digestion is fatigue. When we start on a walk, it does not matter much whether the road be rough or smooth, any little obstacle is avoided with ease, and we tread our way over rough ground, through tangled heather, or over a quaking bog, without difficulty. Our nervous system is in full vigor, and preserves perfect co-ordination among the movements of the different parts of the body; so that they help the other, and all difficulties are overcome. But when we are tired, the case is very different; a little roughness in the road will cause us to stumble, and an unexpected stone may give us a sudden fall. The wearied nervous system no longer co-ordinates the movements of the various parts of the body, so that they no longer work together for a common end.

The same thing occurs with the various organs of the intestinal canal. The mechanism by which the acts of chewing and swallowing appear to act as stimulants to the digestion and nervous system, thus insuring proper co-ordination between the functions of the mouth, the stomach, intestines, and liver has been described. But if the nervous system be exhausted by previous fatigue, or debilitated by illness, the requisite co-ordination may not take place, and indigestion or biliousness may be the result. How often do we find that the meal taken by a man immediately after a long railway journey disagrees with him, and either causes sickness or diarrhœa, or a bilious headache! Forty winks after dinner is not always a bad thing; but forty winks before dinner is certainly much better.

How often do men who have worked hard all day, with their mental faculties continually on the stretch, go home and have dinner forthwith! Exhausted as they are, can they expect to digest properly what they eat? Almost the only saving point is, that many of them live some distance from their places of business, and have a short time during the homeward drive to sit still and rest. This is sufficient for some, especially young men; but it is insufficient for many men, and they ought to make a point of having a little rest at home before dinner. Some men, unfortunately, are so deluded as to believe that exercise after their day's work will do them good; and instead of utilizing the little time they have to rest after a day's labors are over, they take a three or four miles, or take a tricycle-ride of several more, before dinner. The consequence is that, under the combined mental and physical strain, their digestion is impaired and their strength broken down.

There is grave truth it these remarks, and they should be well laid to heart by those who are compelled to work at high pressure, and who fail in that due repair of the bodily tissues which lies at the root and foundation of health. But mental emotions and the state of mind may in their turn produce disturbances of the body's duties in the way of indigestion. Here, again, the views expressed teem with a common sense and philosophy which commend them to the thorough consideration of those who find digestion to suffer from the nervous influences that chase one another and career over the surface of the mental atmosphere :—

"Effects, somewhat similar so those of fatigue, may be produced by depressing or disturbing mental emotions, or bodily conditions. We know how readily excitement of almost any kind will destroy the appetite in some people, and depressing emotions will do in almost every case. We not unfrequently hear of girls in whom consumption appears to have been brought on by an unfortunate love affair. If we accept the view that consumption depends upon the presence of the tubercle-bacillus (or living germ), we must, at first sight, think that there can be little or no connection between consumption and disappointed love; but the depressing effect of the disappointment will lessen the digestion, impair the nutrition, and render the body more likely to afford a suitable nidus (or soil) for the bacillus."

From this it would seem to be equally probable that various emotions affect special portions of the digestive system. A strong impression of disgust may excite vomiting; depression is said to produce movements of worms in the small intestine; worry is known to affect the liver; and Dr. Brunton gives countenance to the popular notion that indigestion may be brought on through a mental shock, illustrated, for example, by auxiliary the old adage respecting the wisdom of retaining an easy mind if we would grow fat, therefore, a physical basis. It is full of inferences that the mind and nervous system which are allowed to remain calm and unruffled are most likely to be found presiding over a body and processes that respectfully live, and act in a healthy and normal fashion. If care really kills, it seems provable that its method of slaughter is largely that of destroying the harmony of those functions on which the proper nutrition of our bodies depends. The foregoing considerations have paved the way for the discussion of the practical question that faces us at the close of the preceding lectures we have been engaged in hearing. We have seen, in the first place, how very varied are the causes which produce the disordered states collectively known as "indigestion." The whole subject is a complex one, and these papers may have accomplished at least one useful result if readers have been led to note that each case requires personal study before the exact cause of the digestive disturbance can be cured. There is no greater or more foolish error against which one might be tempted to warn in strong terms, than that which regards the idea that all cases and classes of indigestion are of similar nature and origin. It is this idea which encourages that deplorable habit of indiscriminate drug-swallowing which characterizes our age. Given dyspepsia, the "puff" of any drug or preparation, and the "great army of martyrs" (to dyspepsia) will fly thereto for relief,—only, however, to experience the trebly bitter disappointment which attends the dashing to the ground of hopes of renewed health and returning vigor. If people would only study, slightly, the particulars of their mode of life, habits, diet, work, and other details, and acquire even a rudimentary knowledge of the physiology of digestion, we should at once find them infinitely less liable to pour down drugs, of which they know little, into frames of which they know less.

Let us clearly recognize that there is no panacea, no universal healer, no one unfailing remedy, no sovereign specific, for the many-headed ailment we have named "dyspepsia," or "indigestion." Those who labor under such an idea are only to be compared to the deluded persons who, believing in the absurdities of the quack, are found to purchase a pill or ointment which, if the ordinary statements puffing the wares in question are to be credited, will as readily heal cancer as cure consumption; as unfailingly cure scrofula as dissipate a tumor of serious nature. Recognizing the true and scientific aspects and phases of the digestive process and its disturbances, we shall be the better able to appreciate the nature of the means which are to be relied on for the relief of the latter conditions

The most serious incident during the British election was the savage attempt on the life of the great landowner, Sir Watkin Wynn, is noted, and not without satisfaction, that the legal element will not be too numerous in the new House of Commons.

The House of Commons has sent many a valuable man to a premature grave. Lord Lansdowne's brother, Lord E. Fitzmaurice, had for an indefinite time to abandon political life, and Lord Dalhousie and Sir A. Otway have since been warned by doctors to keep away from Westminster.

The Duke of Somerset, who died lately, left no son, but had adopted the illegitimate son and daughter of his eldest son, who had formed a lasting attachment to a woman of very respectable connections, to whom he was attracted by her extraordinary resemblance to a lady whom he had wooed in vain.

When Spain held despotic sway over South America, from Panama to Cape Horn, some of her ablest viceroys and bravest and most brilliant soldiers were of Irish blood, the men or their descendants who, after the disastrous Cromwellian and Williamite wars disdained to take service under the conquerors, and went in thousands to swell the armies of Spain.

The new statues of Beaconsfield and Gladstone, by which the architect designed to mark the era of the erection of the new gateway at Magdalen College, Oxford, were mutilated during the recent election. That of Lord Beaconsfield was first defaced, and then, by way of retaliation, Mr. Gladstone's was decapitated "by certain undergraduates and other roughs," says an Oxford paper.

It lately come to light in the English probate Court that a man named Pound had lived with two wives for fifteen years. He divided his time between them, and each thought when he was absent that he was away on business. He was on the happiest terms with both. He passed with one wife as Mr. Jackson, and bequeathed her money under that name. It was agreed that the property he acquired under the name of Pound should go to wife Pound, and that under Jackson to wife Jackson. But for his testamentary dispositions, the women would probably have been in ignorance of the real state of things to this hour.

The other day there left Dublin for Galway by the Midland Railroad a social phenomenon, viz. : a respectable young man who could not speak or understand one word of English, having never spoken any other language than Irish. He had been a fortnight in Dublin, and during that time required in the capital of his native country to be accompanied everywhere by an interpreter. The young man is a native of the Island of Boffin, off the Connemara coast, where, out of some six or seven hundred inhabitants, only nine speak English. On this island they possess a rich treasure of traditional folk lore, old poems, &c. Fifty years ago on a large estate in West Galway there was not one tenant who spoke English.

Somersby, the birthplace of Lord Tennyson, is a parish containing but sixty souls, six miles from Spilsby in Lincolnshire. It has, however, a commodious rectory house in which the poet was born, his father being then parson. The Tennysons are of ancient Lincolnshire stock. Admiral Tennyson, the poet's cousin, has a magnificent place, Bayon's Manor, in another part of the country. It was granted by William the Conqueror to Walter d'Eyncourt, but being subsequently forfeited by the late Baron d'Eyncourt, was purchased back by his kinsman, Mr. Tennyson. The late Rt. Hon. C. Tennyson d'Eyncourt assumed the latter name in addition to his own in compliance with his father's will to mark his descent from the d'Eyncourts.

Queen Victoria has a great financial advantage over her heir apparent in the circumstance that, whether times are good or bad, her Majesty's snug little revenue of over £7,000 a week is paid just the same, while it is well known that the Prince has for years past been obliged to make heavy abatements in his duchy of Cornwall property—not so much, perhaps, in the duchy proper as in its outlying estates in other counties. His allowance from Parliament of £40,000 a year is just what the Queen receives from her duchy of Lancaster as a little extra pocket money, in addition to her £1,000 a day. The Prince, moreover, has no country seat kept up for him, while the Queen has half a dozen besides her own house.

Herr Hager, the wealthy German banker, is the most punctual man in the world, and always carries a couple of chronometers about with him. Thanks to this habit he is a frequent victim to pickpockets, as not a week passes without his losing one of his watches. At first he had recourse to all kinds of safety chains; then one fine morning he took no precaution whatever, and quietly allowed himself to be robbed. At night, on returning from business, he took up the evening paper, when he uttered an exclamation of delight, and at once started off to the police station. This is what he had read: "To-day, about 2 P. M., a violent explosion took place in a house in B— street, occupied by Mr. S —, a wealthy townsman. The hands of the victim are shattered and the left eye gone." The crafty banker had filled the watchcase with dynamite, which exploded during the operation of winding. Since that time no more watches have been stolen from the person of Herr Hager.

Is Hydrophobia Preventible?

Louis Pasteur, an eminent chemist of Paris, determined, about five years ago, to find a remedy for perhaps the most dreaded of all diseases. He had previously discovered a method of inoculation which prevented splenic fever in cattle and sheep, and experimented in the expectation of making the great discovery that hydrophobia could be prevented by inoculation with the virus of rabies. In October last Pasteur announced that by the means stated hydrophobia was preventible in human beings. Previously, in June, 1884, he had published the success of his plan in the treatment of dogs bitten or scratched by mad animals.

At the present time M. Pasteur has more than seventy persons under his care. They are both male and female, and of all ages, ranging from infancy to an advanced period of life. The French Government has placed the Hotel Dieu Hospital at Pasteur's disposal for patients whose wounds require dressing. Most patients live near his laboratory and call to be inoculated as often as need be. The discoverer of what promises to prove a great boon to mankind, is neither a surgeon nor physician, and employs a surgeon to operate under his instructions.

M. Pasteur is a native of Dole, in the Jura, and is about 60 years of age. He is an honorary Fellow of the Royal Society of London, and is personally well-known to English men of science. Perhaps the best way of stating his methods of procedure in the matter which gives him notoriety throughout the world, is to give a translation of what he himself said of it, in a recent interview :

"I first take the poison from the brain of a mad dog. With this I vaccinate a rabbit, which will die within fourteen days, and this gives the poison for a second one, which is vaccinated the same way. I continue this practice until I have reached the twentieth or twenty-fifth. From there up to the fiftieth the rabbit will die in eight days, and after the fiftieth the animal will become mad within seven days. This procedure enables me to determine the most important feature of the treatment, namely: the duration of the period of incutation. There were people who were afflicted with the fatal disease several years after the accident, while others died after a few weeks."

The Value of Hip-Pockets.

The general practioner is frequently asked by anxious parents: "What shall I do for my boy; he is getting so awfully stoop shouldered that I am afraid he will get consumption I will have to get him a brace. What kind would you recommend?"

It requires no extended argument to prove the importance of a well expanded chest. Apart from the incalculable benefits to health, an erect carriage and graceful movements attract the attention of the most humble. It causes them to correct as far as they are able, in their children any tendency to awkward stooping, or ungainly positions. Apart from the cost and inconvenience of expensive instruments, but few meet the requirements. In many cases better results may be obtained by attending to a few simple details, within the reach of every one, in the ordinary clothing.

The boy's pockets are to him a very important part of his dress, and the natural tendency to keep his hands in them. When not actively engaged, there they are usually found, and if the pockets are properly placed, they will inadvertently cause him to throw back the shoulders and more or less expand the chest. For instance, the jacket or overcoat should have what is called breast pockets, the opening should be high and as far back as possible, parallel with and in the line of the body, instead of low down and transverse as usually found in the ordinary jacket or overcoat.

The pants should have what are called "hip-pockets," and no others. It will then be apparent that, whilst the hands are in the pockets a better if not a perfect, position will be assumed and the boy spared the many admonitions to "Keep your hands out of your pockets," and the accompanying box on the ear.

To Cure a Corn.

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. It is a simple matter to remove corns without pain, for if you will go to any druggist or any medicine dealer and buy a bottle of Putnam's Corn Extractor and apply it as directed the thing is done. Get "Putnam's and no other.

An electric boy is reported at Youngstown, Ohio—Frank Burnett. A special to the Cincinnati Enquirer says: "On his approach chairs and tables dance and heavy articles totter that his natural strength could not move. The lad is unable to explain his unnatural power, and has always enjoyed good health. The tests made thus far show the lad to be able to do more than he has claimed. It is probable medical experts will examine him to ascertain if possible the secret of his power." He is described as being 15 years old and slight of build, and lives with his mother.

The man who will not execute his resolutions when they are fresh upon him can have no hope of them afterwards; they will be dissipated, lost, and perish in the hurry of the world) or in the slough of indolence.

Mark Twain has written to a Boston paper and gives himself only two years more to live. There was a story lately that he was beginning to lose the use of his reason; and that he imagined he had been turned into a tombstone. But we suppose that the thing is a fabrication, just as was the statement that during the appearance of the late comet he sat upon the roof of his house all night with a long pole in his hand, to ward off the errant star.

What "Old Fritz" Said.

It was an aphorism of Frederick the Great's that "Facts are divine things." An undisputed fact is that Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the most powerful liver vitalizer extant, and by its characteristic and searching action will cure dyspepsia, constipation, dropsy, kidney disease sick-headache, and other maladies which, popular opinion to the contrary notwithstanding, are directly traceable to a diseased condition of the liver, by which its work as purifier of the blood is made incomplete. All druggists.

"Plenty of room at the top," remarked a dealer as he opened an apple barrel and found it only half-full.

was the actual exclamation of an honest physician, spoken of one of his patients to whom he had given calomel for the cure of biliousness and a diseased liver. And he had salivated him for certain, from which he never recovered. All these distressing consequences are avoided by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," a purely vegetable remedy that will not salivate, but produce the most pleasing effect, invogorate the liver, cure headache, dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation and piles. By druggists.

Wild coffee, which proved to be of good quality when roasted and made up, has been found growing in Butte county, Cal.

The worst cases cured by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

All doctors agree that to enjoy good health the mind must be kept in a cheerful condition. But no doctor can give a man points that will make him joyous when his collar don't fit.

No means have been takenby the manufacturers to push the sale of their "Myrtle Navy" tobacco except giving from time to time a simple statement of the facts connected with it in the public press. The large and rapidly increasing demand for it has been the result of the experience of smokers which these statements suggested. Their advice to business men is to advertise largely if they have the right article to keep up the advertisement with.

Grand Opening. — The Markdale Roller Skating Rink will be opened on Wednesday evening at 7:30. The rink is commodious and well arranged. The Brass Band will be in attendance, and everything will be done to make it a grand success. Prof. Simpson has accepted an invitation, and will be present at the opening, also on Thursday afternoon and evening. He is a fancy skater of prominence. He was also one of the rescued on the late Algoma wreck. There is a large number of strangers expected, and fancy skaters from a distance. Admission, 10 cents; Skates, 10 cents.

DYSPEPSIA.

This prevalent malady is the parent of most of our bodily ills. One of the best remedies known for Dyspepsia is Burdock Blood Bitters, it having cured the worst chronic forms, after all else had failed.

Hymeneal.—On Wednesday evening last, Mr. Hugh Mercer, of Hill Bros. establishment, and Miss Dorcas Dundas, daughter of Wm. Dundas, Esq., of this place, were made one. The happy event took place at the residence of the bride's parents, when a few of the friends were present. Rev. J. Ward officiated. The brass band escorted them to the railway depot, rendering some very fine selections, when the happy couple took the 9:10 p. m. train going north. Mr. M. and lady have been among our most respected young people, and we now tender them our sincere wishes for a happy and prosperous life.

A Memorable Day—August 15th, 1860, should be recorded in history, as one of the most memorable days of the century. On that date, after years of careful study and experiments for some remedy to check the rapid growth of Consumption, West's Cough Syrup was introduced to the world. Since then its history has been a continuous series of triumphs, as it has cured an unlimited number of cases of Consumption in its early stages, Throat and Lung diseases, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Bronchitis, Asthma and Whooping Cough. Sold by A. Turner & Co., Druggists. Price 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00 per bottle.

CHOLERA PREVENTATIVE.

In order to withstand Cholera and such like epidemics a perfect purity of blood, and the proper action of the stomach are required. To insure that end, in the cheapest, most available and complete manner, use McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, and Impure Blood. There is no purer, safer or more reliable remedy in existence for indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, etc. Ask your neighbor or any person who has used it. Sold by Hill Bro's. Trial bottle given free. 1

Saugeen.—The presbytery met in Mount Forest on 15th December. Mr. Straith presented a call from the Durham congregation, signed by 106 members and 61 adherents, in favor of Mr. Robert McNair, licentiate; salary $900 per annum without manse. The call was sustained, and the clerk instructed to forward it to Mr. McNair. Mr. Nichol tendered his resignation of North Luther, Ross and Gordonville on account of an effection of the throat. The representatives from the congregations, while deeply regretting that he had been compelled to do so, could not under the circumstances offer any objections. His resignation was accepted, and Mr. Thom was appointed to declare the pastoral charge vacant on the first Sabbath of January. Delegates from Alton, East Normanby, North Luther and Ross were present, asking for more satisfactory connections then they had at present. After considering the different positions and conditions of all the fields concerned, it was agreed to cite all parties to appear for their interests at next meeting. Mr. Ross, of Dundalk, was appointed to organize Corbetton and Riverview into mission stations. The Aged and infirm Ministers' Fund, Manitoba College and the Augmentation Scheme were all duly considered. A committee was appointed to take charge of the Augmentation Scheme, and parties were appointed to visit supplemented congregations. It was agreed that in view of the financial difficulties of the college, and in view of the fact that a committee on consolidation of the colleges, has been appointed by the Assembly, the system of lectureships should be continued for the present. The next meeting of presbytery was appointed to be held in Knox church, Harrison, on the 16th day of March next, at 11 a. m. —[Presbyterian Review.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Boots! Boots! Boots!

SAVING MONEY.

Your life may now be bright and clear
And sweet as honey,
Yet some day sorrow may appear,
So save your money.
Cash is King o'er young and old,
Cash makes friends that ne'er grow cold,
Cash brings pleasure ne'er untold—
So save your money.

If you would make your burden light
And times seem sunny;
If you would keep things going right,
Why, save your money
Buy what will only last you long—
Boots that are neat, yet cheap and strong,
Buy of McLeod, then you can't get wrong—
And so save your money

If you have jolly boys and girls,
Happy and funny,
If you would give them sterling joys
For little money,
Buy them boots that's good and smart,
That fit the feet and charm the heart,
At Wm. McLeod's, that's the spot
Where you'll save money

The Use of Oil at Sea.

The following particulars concerning the use of oil at sea are given in the North Atlantic Pilot Chart for November:

The use of mineral oil is not recommended, while the importance of carrying a supply of animal or vegetable oil to be used in emergencies cannot be overrated.

Capt. E. L. Arey, of the schooner Jenny A. Cheney, writes: "I used oil with very satisfactory results during the late severe hurricane of Aug. 25 in latitude 31° north, longitude 79° west. The wind having carried away the mainsail, I bent a storm trysail and continued under that sail until it also blew away. During this time the vessel was shipping large quantities of water, the sea being very irregular, nearly every one breaking. After the sails were blown away, finding it necessary to do something to save the ship and crew, I took a small canvas bag and turned about five gallons of linseed oil into it and hung it over the starboard quarter. The wash of the sea caused a little of the oil to leak out and smooth the surface so that for ten hours no water broke aboard. I consider that the oil used during the last and heaviest part of the hurricane saved vessel and crew."

Capt J. H. Parke reports that in 1876, "while in command of the Carrie E. Long, from Sicily to Portland, Me., laden with salt, the ship would have foundered had I not used kerosene oil. The ship, lying to under fore and main lower topsails, did very well until the main lower topsail blew away. This caused the vessel to fall off in the trough of the sea, which boarded her and did great damage. The ship was put before the wind, but leaked so badly and the seas still breaking on board so that the men could not work the pumps, it was evident that something must be done to keep her from foundering. Having picked up two barrels of crude oil on the voyage east I poured this down the closet pipes. This calmed the sea so much that we could go to the pumps and had no trouble afterward. The waves were clearly seen to break all around the oil-covered spot. I fully believe had I not used the oil the vessel would never have stood it, and at least I should have had most of the crew washed overboard. It is my opinion that crude oil is better than kerosene, but the latter will do in an emergency."

Capt. Dawson, master of the British ship Halloween, states that when he was in command of the British bark Zenobia, on a passage from India to London, in February, 1872, off the Western Islands, he encountered a terrific gale with immense sea; wind between E. by S. and S. SE. The Zenobia was deeply laden and labored very heavily, and it was feared that she would go down, so seventy tons of her cargo (seed) were jettisoned. As she still continued to labor heavily, and there seemed but little chance of saving her, two canvas bags, filled with oil and pricked in a number of places, were hung from the weather cathead. As the vessel drifted to leeward the oil spread and enveloped her in a smooth belt. After this she rode easily, the surface of the water being perfectly smooth. The oil used was a mixture of parafine and calza.

Capt. Robinson, of the English steamer Sussex, furnishes the following report on the use of oil at sea: "In the month of January, 1885, during the prevalence of the heavy gales in the North Atlantic, I used oil bags several times, and found that with a heavy sea on the quarter of the ship they were comparatively useless, as the sea would throw the bags on deck as fast as they were put over. I am of the opinion, however, that in running before the sea, or hove-to, head to sea, they are invaluable." In his experiments with the bags he used a heavy, greasy oil, similar to lard oil, and found that as long as the sea was astern, and he could leave the oil behind, the seas would not break over the stern. He has not tried it hove-to, but invariably found that it would not work satisfactorily in a quartering sea. Capt. Robinson thinks that oil would be of great benefit for small vessels in crossing a bar in a heavy sea. Being put over the bow it would greatly smooth the waves.

Capt. Childs of the schooner Ed R. Emerson reports that on Oct. 4, latitude 40° 16 N. longitude 68° 24 W., he passed close to a wreck, bottom up, newly coppered. Although it was blowing hard, the sea for a mile to windward of the derelict was quite smooth, the surface of the water being covered with oil, which had evidently formed part of the cargo.

Capt. Brooks, of the English steamer Nymphaea, writes: "About four years ago I was in command of the steamer Nuphan, of 1,280 tons, loaded with a cargo of kerosene oil and bound for India. While crossing the Atlantic we experienced strong westerly gales, accompanied with very high seas. I had it in my mind to put the ship head on, but having heard that oil thrown on the sea would calm it, I determined to use it. Having plenty of kerosene oil on board, I poured some on the deck. The water coming on board washed it overboard, and immediately the seas became much less, and we ran on without danger until the storm abated. I recommend that all shipowners and masters should have on board their vessels a sufficient quantity of oil, independent of their usual stores, for the express purpose of saving lives and property on such extreme occasions."

Capt. Johnson, master American barkentine Jose E. More, reports when bound to the North coast of Cuba, in latitude 28° 10 N., longitude 73° 30 W., he encountered the October hurricane of 1884. The wind increased rapidly to hurricane force, blowing from N.N. E. to N. and back to N. N. E., falling barometer and heavy sea; the vessel was put before the wind and scudded under lower foretopsail. The waves increasing in violence and size, threatened (after one had been taken on board) to poop the vessel, making their position a most dangerous one, as the decks were filled with water, and it was considered expedient to bring by the wind. Two gunny bags nearly filled with oakum were placed, one on each quarter; on the oakum was poured paint oil, which dripped in the sea. The effect was immediately apparent, the waves no longer breaking in the vicinity of the vessel or giving cause for apprehension.

The master of the British steamer Elstow reports the following gale in which he used oil with good effect: The Elstow left Cape Henry on Jan 23 for Sligo. On Jan. 27, on the eastern edge of Newfoundland Banks, encountered a gale from westward, increasing in force from W. N. W. Sea ran very high and the vessel shipped much water. Fearing to leave the vessels, it was decided to lay to, head to wind. Being a firm believer in the use of oil, Capt. Robertson had ready for use oil bags of canvas, punctured in the bottom and sides with large needle holes. Six of these filled with boiled linseed oil were hung over—two in the bow, two in the waist, and two over the stern—and allowed to drip in the water. This had a wonderful effect on the high seas, taking the dangerous curl off them, and preventing so much water from coming on board. Before the oil bags were placed over, the vessel was taking water in over the stern, and also in the waist. Several other vessels that left Cape Henry or the Atlantic coast, and pursuing the same route at this time, were never afterward heard from. One of these vessels, the Ben Tower, a steamer, foundered on the 29th, about 200 miles to south and east of the Elstow. The officers of the Elstow attribute the saving of the ship to the use of the oil.

SCIENTIFIC AND USEFUL.

Dr. Brock, of St. Louis, says that asphaltum varnish is the best disinfectant he knows of; it will destroy all germs at once, and no household insects will approach an article of furniture whose interior has been painted with it.

Genuine cod liver oil gives with aqua regia a dark greenish-yellow liniment which becomes brown in half an hour. White seal oil and even a mixture of equal parts of that oil and cod liver oil give merely a pale yellow liniment.

From the solar eclipse of September 8, the central line of which passed over a part of New Zealand, near Cook's Strait, it is expected that the cause of the corona will be disclosed through the labors of Australian astronomers.

For turning and drilling wrought-iron and steel one ounce of a mixture of soft soap with half its weight of pearl-ash in about one gallon of boiling water is in everyday use in most engineering shops. The work, though constantly moist, does not rust.

To cure the gout, the leg or arm afflicted is encased in plaster of Paris, and coccaine chloride in from one-twelfth to one-fourth of a grain doses, dissolved in water and administered hypodermically, it is said, will cure morphinism, alcoholism, etc., within ten days.

Mr. Delaunay, of Paris, a specialist in earthquakes, predicts many during the next year when the sun and moon are simultaneously nearest the earth. He foretold the earthquakes in South America in 1877, those in the Indian Archipelago in 1883, and the more recent ones of Spain.

It is reported from North and Central Sweden that this year migratory birds have left in large numbers at an unusually early date. Between August 16 and 18 thousands of wild fowl were seen passing over Stockholm, their progress lasting for several hours at a time. A severe Winter is anticipated in the North of Europe. The Autumn has been very cold in Norway.

Experiments on an extensive scale have been made in Germany to ascertain the relative strength of iron and steel girders. The soft-steel girders proved to be 22 per cent. and hard-steel girders 66 per cent. stronger than the iron girders; and it is remarked that it seemed pretty well established that the strength of steel girders is about the same for the two flanges if made alike in section.

Regarding human locomotion, a first communication has been submitted to the Academy of Science, Paris, by MM. Marey and G. Demeny. They began with the action of springing or jumping, because, if not the most usual, it is regarded by them as by far the simplest action, and much less intricate than the motions of walking and running, in which the body executes complicated movements in the direction of the three dimensions of space.

The new metal gallium melts at 81.1 degrees Fahrenheit, so that it liquefies when held in the hand. It is hard and resistant. It can be cut, and it possesses a slight malleability. When fused it adheres readily to glass, on which it forms a beautiful mirror, whiter than that produced by mercury. It oxidizes but very superficially when heated to redness in the air, and does not become volatile. Unlike lead it acquires only a very slight tarnish on exposure to moist air, and is a highly crystalline metal. Its specific gravity is a little under 5. In its chemical characteristics the rare element gallium shows the greatest analogy to the abundant element aluminum.

The tall cliff called the Monk, which lately rose out of the sea just south of the Faroe Islands, and was a prominent landmark to sailors, has fallen away, leaving only a dangerous reef upon its site.

The native who carried from the field the body of the Prince Imperial, when he lost his life fighting in South Africa, was presented with a diamond ring and pensioned by the Empress Eugenie.

The gambling tables at Monte Carlo are about to be made the subject of diplomatic action on the part of an international Commission. The report of the Commission states that between the years 1877 and 1885 1,820 people—more than the whole population of the "kingdom" of Monaco—have committed suicide consequent upon losses at the gambling tables of Monte Carlo.

It appears that Victor Hugo's father was, during the French regime of Joseph Bonaparte in Italy, the General who was the military governor of the province of Avellino, and, as such, ordered the hanging of "Fra Diavolo," as the brigand Colonel, Michael Pozzo, was called. This took place in 1806, when Victor Hugo was a little boy, living with his father in Italy.

Private John Burke, who has just been discharged from the Suffolk Regiment, is supposed to have been the oldest soldier in the British army, having enlisted in 1847. He had six good conduct stripes, and was refused the seventh on the ground that six was the maximum number allowed. He had served in the Crimean and Indian mutiny campaigns, and also in China and Afghanistan.

HOUSEHOLD.

Buy at Wholesale.

There is hardly any mark of improvidence more infallible than the habit of living "from hand to mouth," in buying at retail, in small quantities and at a high price, articles that are in common use, and that may be bought more cheaply in larger quantities. Of course, there are people so poor that they cannot—at any rate not without sacrifice in other directions—buy anything which they do not immediately need; and there is folly in making too great as well as too little provision for the future. But we are now speaking of wise and possible economy, not of unwise and impossible.

Illustrations of what may be done are numberless. We select a few. When you go shopping, madam, how many spools of white cotton thread do you buy? One? Then you waste your money. You sacrifice a fraction of a cent on each spool; and at any good store you may purchase twelve spools for the retail price of eleven.

A little thing, you say? True, but you have saved eight or nine per cent. on that one purchase, and if you can do as well on all others, you will find that the aggregate money in the course of a year is ten, thirty or fifty dollars.

And you, sir,—do you not buy a single newspaper every morning or evening, and pay for it at a rate much above that for subscription by the week, month, or year?

There is a very large saving possible to those who buy groceries systematically at wholesale. Probably few families that can at any time spare the money for a whole barrel of flour buy that necessary article by the bag of twenty-five pounds. For at the very best groceries, where the poor are best accommodated, the loss from buying in small quantities is never less than five per cent., and is sometimes three or four times as great.

But how many families reflect that the sugar bill is a larger item in household expense than the flour bill, and buy sugar also by the barrel? Coffee and tea are in constant use, and there is a considerable saving in buying five or ten pounds of either, as compared with buying one pound.

In the same way there is economy in buying brooms by the dozen; toilet and laundry soap by the box; pens by the gross, paper by the ream and envelopes by the half-thousand; potatoes by the barrel; and so on through a long list of articles in everyday use. Of course, one cannot buy hats, boots and clothing at wholesale, except in rare cases, with economy.

Carpet Conservatism.

Floors from all ages must have been a prolific source of discomfort and expense, but it was reserved for the latest civilizations to conceive the idea of covering them up in such a way that it should require the energies of a strong man to uncover them again. Carpets fitted to the floor, stretched by main force, and nailed so securely that even an earthquake would have left them undisturbed, became so popular that it required a mortar revolution to make them unfashionable. Probably even the unenlightened Frenchman of the twelfth century would have looked upon the first importers of Eastern carpets into Europe with horror if they could have foreseen that civilized progression would ever have reached such a stage of devotion to them as to equip whole houses with thick, immovable floor coverings. But the French, after all, have never adopted the absurd fashion of the upper classes of their English neighbors, and there is no probability that they ever will; and these have so far moulded matters that even that conservative being, the British matron, has left off fainting with horror at the idea of an uncarpeted bedroom. It is possible now for the most prejudiced of her kind to admit that there are advantages in painted and washed floors, and little by little she has been weaned from abject adoration of Brussels, Kidderminster, and tapestry carpets. But even on this side of the Atlantic, where progressive ideas are more apt to flourish, the recognition of the advantages of movable carpets has come very slowly, and it is only after some 20 years of discussion that common sense has gained the upper hand, that new houses are built especially with the view to the use of rugs, squares, and strips of carpeting.

Choice Recipes.

BREAD AND JAM PUDDING.—Line the bottom and sides of a basin with slices of bread; mix a pot of jam with a little hot water, put a layer of jam in the basin, then a layer of bread, then more jam; continue this until the basin is full; then put a plate on the top. Turn out the next day and serve with custard round it.

BEEF CAKES.—Chop up some beef that is partially smoked, pork fat, and season with salt, pepper, and onions, mix well and form into small cakes. Fry them light brown and serve with a good gravy made of soup stock thickened with brown flour.

BAKED HASH.—Use a cupful of any kind of cold meat chopped rather coarse, a cupful of cold cooked rice, a generous cupful of milk, an egg, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of salt, and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of pepper. Put the milk on the fire in a frying-pan, and when it has become hot add all the other ingredients except the egg. Stir for one minute, then remove from the fire and add the egg, well beaten. Turn into an escallop dish and bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes. Serve in the same dish.

SPICED TRIPE.—Spiced tripe can be prepared at home and be ready for use in a few days. Take fresh tripe, and cut it in pieces four or five inches square; put a layer of tripe in an earthen jar, then sprinkle a few cloves, allspice, and some black pepper over it, then another layer of tripe and spice, and so on until the jar is full. Cover it closely and set in a cool cellar, or, if possible, in a refrigerator. This is a relish for tea. When served cold, with potato salad, also cold biscuit, butter, and chocolate, it makes a refreshing meal.

The Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society reports the opening of its hospital in Haugchow. Many Chinese officials were present, and a number of the mandarins subscribed liberally toward the building. A large ward for opium patients was filled on the first day.

There will be an astonishing number of new men in the new English Parliament, and for a time the inhabitants of the gallery will have some difficulty in knowing the names of those who are speaking. But among the new and the young men will be a sprinkling of very old heads. In addition to Mr. Gladstone, there will be Mr. John Bright, who is now 73 years of age; Mr. Talbot, "the father of the House," who has represented Glamorganshire for 55 years, and is verging on 85 years of age, and Mr. Cabel Wright, who enters on a Parliamentary career as member for Leigh with 75 years behind him.

MAXIMS OF MANNERS.

Hints for Those Who Cultivate the Graces.

Never send a visiting card by mail.

A wound to a man's vanity leaves a permanent scar.

Cross your t's in writing, but not in your letters.

In the best appointed households economy prevails.

Walk as if you were conscious that your body has a soul in it.

Speech of one's self ought to be rare and well chosen.

Perfect machinery works noiselessly, so does a perfect hostess.

It is good to travel. "Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits."

"Shun the wretch who goes about with riddles and making puns."

Never forget that your rheumatism is a matter of national concern.

At home, as abroad, what we should especially cultivate is manners.

Elaborate monograms and paper with gilt on stationery are vulgar.

A gentleman will never admit that he has maladies—in conversation.

Half the failures in life arise from not spurring one's horse to leap by the power of strength.

A married lady should treat a gentleman with reserve, an acquaintance with reticence.

A rudely arrogant speech often rankles in the mind long after an unjust one has been forgotten.

"A high-bred lady," says Thackeray, "is the most complete of all Heaven's works in this world."

When you meet a lady in the street you must not walk with her, unless she (directly or indirectly) invites you.

In making calls never stay so long as to create in the mind of your hostess a wish or desire that you would go.

There is nothing so contemptible as that which animates the poor creature's struggle to keep up appearances.

Truth is the best policy. Every one feels flattered by the reflection that you think him too clever to be cajoled.

In these words is comprehended the whole code of courtesy: Put everybody on the same level as yourself and put yourself in somebody's place.

Good humored gossip is the salt of ordinary conversation, but no well bred person will indulge in the gossip that pours into the privacy of domestic life and either distorts or misrepresents.

You may learn the grammar of politeness and yet know nothing of its genius; you may be precise in your knowledge of the rules of etiquette, and utterly fail in the true spirit of hospitality.

Louis XII. said that he had rather his courtiers laugh at his avarice than that people weep at his extravagance; no sovereign keeper will be willing that his friends respect his prudence rather than admire his orderly at his ostentation.

"Wonderful power of manners! Some ascribe to them as great a potency as love possesses. No doubt they go far to supply the want of beauty and constitute the charm of that fascination which we often see exerted by persons who cannot claim to be beautiful."

GRAND PREMIUMS

FOR TWO SUBSCRIBERS TO

The Weekly Mail

We have had a large number of letters from people who sent in Clubs last year and received the prize books, in which they say, "We had no idea that the prizes would be such good, well bound, valuable books. If your subscribers only knew what good value in prizes you were offering, there is not one of them who would not send in a club." This year we are offering a much more attractive and in every way better list of prizes.

Anyone sending in TWO Yearly Subscriptions to THE WEEKLY MAIL, at the regular rate of One Dollar a year each, will receive as a present a choice of one of the following valuable Books, which will be forwarded postage prepaid.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB

When the meeting opened in due form Brother Gardner announced that the Hon. Asher Livermore, of Arkansas, was in the audience and waiting to address the meeting. The subject of his address was: "Has the White Man Passed His Zenith?" If there were no objections he would be given the right in.

There was. Wintergreen Davis didn't propose to object, but he would like to be informed as to the meaning of the word zenith. He had attended twenty-one different ward caucuses, and had clerked in a wood yard for three years, but he had never met with the word before.

There was a deep silence as he settled down, and Brother Gardner scratched his head and pored until as if the friction would start fire.

"Zenith," he finally said, "why, I ar' surprised at your ignerence. Ebery man an' passon in dis kentry orter to know all 'bout zenith."

"Yes, sah, but de word breaks me up."

"Zenith am a dreffful easy word," continued the President as he looked up and down the hall in a nervous manner. "You didn't git zenith an' zicher all mixed up, did you?"

"No, sah."

"When anybody says dat Samuel Shin, for instance, has passed his zenith dey can't be spoken up fur slander. It means—it means—"

He waited so long that the Rev. Penstock rose and said:

"Mistah President, it means dat he has passed his best pint. Zenith am de highest pint."

"Brudder Penstock, sot right down dis minit!" exclaimed the President as he used the gavel in a vigorous manner. "Who axed you to riz up an' 'splain 'bout zenith? Does dis chair can't stan' on one leg an' define any word in common use he will consider his ignorence an' call fur help! I shall fine you $2,000 fur disturbin' dis meetin' an' Brudder Davis will now be brung to!"

HE IS "BRUNG."

It was evident to all as soon as he entered the room that the Professor was "off." He bowed and bowed and scraped, and finally took a chair near the stove. When Giveaway Jones went over to him and asked if he was ill, he replied:

"Shay! I'll fight you two rounds for forty five shents!"

He was drunk! As soon as Brother Gardner realized this fact he ordered him removed from the lodge. The stranger was assisted down stairs into the alley, and hasn't been seen since. From the splashes of mud on the right board fence, and the distance between his tracks, it is believed that he left in a hurry.

"Dis am but another proof," said Brother Gardner, as he took his seat, "Dat when you pit brains agin whisky, common-sense agin gin, or intellect agin lager-beer, de liquor am bound to go under de wire a length ahead."

A CLOSE SHAVE.

Sir Isaac Walpole then moved to take from the table the case of the keeper of the Museum, who was last week suspended from office and fined $8,000. Sir Isaac had carefully inquired into all the facts in the case and believed them to be as follows: The keeper desired to run down to the post-office to mail a letter to his father-in-law. No one was present in the Museum a colored man who claimed to be a professor of botany from Harvard, and he was asked to remain until the keeper's return. The time required was only twelve minutes, but when the keeper returned he found the stranger had departed, taking with him an old day clock once owned by Napoleon I. The keeper was to blame, and yet he was not. If everybody coming along here and claiming to be a professor at Harvard was to be suspected and watched, the whole police force would be kept busy. The clock was probably gone beyond recovery, but the loss was not irreparable. Sir Isaac had in his possession a clock which Napoleon wished to buy, but didn't have money enough. He would turn this in to the Museum in case the keeper was reinstated and the fine remitted. It would take him 190 years, the very best he could do, to pay the fine, and he hadn't secured two hours' sleep since being suspended.

"Bein' dat dis matter has bin tooken up an considered by sich a distinguished member," said the President, "I shall not hesitate to comply wid de request, though I sent de keeper of de Museum to fully realize dat he has had a powerful close shave."

DEATH CLAIMS ANOTHER.

The Secretary reported a communication from Kansas City giving the news of the death of No Compromise Johnson, an honorary member of the club. The communication said that he had been borne away.

Brudder Watkins believed the man dead enough, but wanted further particulars.

"De letter says he was fishin', sah, [an' fell] into de turgid river."

"If he fell in an' was drownded how was he borne away?"

"By de current, I 'spose."

"I move, Misser President, dat he fell into de Missouri, instead of de Turgid River. He'd better be k'rect on sich pints when he go on record."

The change was made, and the usual emblem of mourning was ordered to be hung on the outer deer-knob for the usual thirty days.

A DANGEROUS MAN.

Treasurer Pullback then arose to appeal from the action of the Committee on Application in rejecting the application of Elder Sincerity Smith, of Toronto. The elder was a man of original stamp. He had a theory that this earth was gradually sinking down in the centre, and that in the course of the next hundred years all the buildings, fences, trees, people and cats and dogs would go sliding toward a common center. The Elder had various proofs that his theory was correct, and it was on account of his belief that the committee had rejected his application.

"Am dis k'rect?" asked the President of the chairman of that committee.

"Only in part, sah," was the answer. "De man has seb'ral other theories, one of which am dat all de music in Heaben am furnished by brass bands an' fiddles, an' dat only cull'd men am 'lowed to play."

"De ackshun of de committee in rejectin' de application am sustained," said Brudder Gardner, "an' de appeal of Brudder Pullback am rejected. I regard Elder Smith as a dangerous man. De man who goes to foolin' 'round wid a theory mus' sooner or later come to some bad end."

The Indian Problem.

The late uprising in the North-West, the massacre of missionaries and settlers, the looting of stores and killing of cattle, and finally the hanging and imprisonment of the batch of savage murderers, has by no means settled the Indian question in our distant territories. This conclusion is reached after an examination of the history of the tribes within the jurisdiction of the United States government, and by a careful study of the condition of the bands upon our own prairies.

The most serious question for the consideration of government is the problem providing food for the needy tribes without demoralising the bands by bringing them to neglect means of supporting themselves, and to lean upon the authorities.

Year by year as civilization crawls out upon the prairie, the buffalo-herds, disturbed in those haunts where once the reign of nature was uninterrupted, save when the Indian came with bow and arrow to get venison, recede toward the Rocky Mountains, beyond the reach of the tribes living upon the more easterly part of the plains. With the disappearance of the buffalo vanished the chief food supply of these people, and the necessity to provide for the deficiency becomes apparent.

During the winter of 1877-78, and many seasons since, a number of Indian families perished of hunger after having devoured the skins that covered them. What these wretches suffer every year harly anybody knows, and if we were to attempt to describe it our statement would scarcely obtain credence. We know a gentleman who was one of a party that made an extensive tour through the territories, and he assures us that for weeks their company was shadowed by numbers of Indians, comprising men, women and children, who came after the party had broken up camp and devoured the offal and scraps left from the meals and the cooking. Sometimes they came to the camp begging, and so exhausted were they with hunger, that they were scarcely able to walk. This gentleman declares, and his statement is strengthened by the testimony of scores of other competent witnesses, that the physical inferiority of the Indians, their squalor, lack of ambition, and general degeneracy are due to the fact that or the greater part of the year they are half famishing for food. In view of these facts the wonder is that cattle-stealing and the plundering of stores are not in more general practice; and it is quite certain that white men would not meekly lie down and die of starvation while there was a cattle ranch or a mangs store in aiding distance. The truth of the matter is that our Indians are not the lawless, noisy voracious people that we too frequently see them described, but as a rule bear their sufferings in stolid silence, and sometimes lie down and die in the sight of food.

Government have to some extent recognized this fact, and consequently it was decided to establish farming schools at which the Indian might learn to plough the land, sow the seed, and tend and gather the crops. But the project of regeneration was not so satisfactory when put in practice as it seemed on paper; for constantly would recur the apathy to routine labor and a distaste for permanent locality, while the figure of a buffalo seen against the horizon would arouse all the latent hunter's fire; and throwing down the spade the erstwhile farmer would be found with neck thrust out striding off in the fascinating chase.

The most difficult lesson to teach the savage was to wait; to see that the corn, and wheat, and oats sown in the spring would yield food in the autumn. In many cases Indians who had worked industriously for several weeks putting in crops would become possessed of the hunting or fishing fever when the grain fields were green in the early summer and the root crops promising, go away and never return again. Sometimes an Indian farmer would kill the oxen sent him by government to plough his land; sell his ploughs and harrows, and then sit down in despair refusing to make provision for the season when the prairie is covered with snow and nothing is to be had for arrow to appear.

The Department having done so much expected to hear of thrifty Cree and Sioux farmers; but instead tidings reached them of cattle stealing, of misery, and threats of a general uprising. The thriftless vagabonds is what the people said who knew nothing of Indian character, but who would worship any nice system upon paper. So when the tribes continued to cry out for something to eat, their wailings evoked little compassion. Why should it?—had not the government set the bands up as farmers, and why didn't the lazy rascals farm? We do not know, from our limited knowledge of ethnology, how many generations it took to degrade the American Indian into the lowest form of tribal barbarism but we stake our reputation upon the assertions that the period could not have been a short one; and that it takes as long to reclaim a people as it does to degrade them. Providence is not a trait of Indian character; it is not at all present in his nature; and you cannot change the nature of a red man, or a black man, or a white man, by act of parliament. You can no more do it than you can change the climate by passing a measure through the House of Commons declaring it to be unlawful for the thermometer to fall more than two degrees below zero.

What are we to do with the Indian, then? somebody will ask. Well, to this we have only to say that we took possession of the Indians lands without recompense; we have scared away his buffalo, and we have brought hunger into his wigwam. If we think that we are not morally bound to care for this vanishing people, we ought to be worldly-wise enough to see that it costs more in the long run to kill an Indian than to feed him. That has been the experience of the American government; it has been our experience to a limited extent, and it promises to be our experience upon a pretty general scale. We do not say that we have broken faith with the tribes or swindled them as did the corrupt officials of the Red Cloud and Black Rock agencies; but unfortunately we have lost their confidence.

Three snow white beavers were taken on the Sacramento River near Chico, Cal., the other day. The fur was as soft as silk.

INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Not a Hospital, but a pleasant Remedial Home, organized with

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

And exclusively devoted to the treatment of all Chronic Diseases.

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward elements of nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we have been enabled to originate and perfect a system of determining, with the greatest accuracy, the nature of chronic diseases, without seeing and personally examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained through it, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." By R. V. Pierce, M. D. 1000 pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our terms for treatment and all particulars.

SIGNS OF DISEASE.

MARVELOUS SUCCESS.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES.

Recognizing the fact that no great institution dedicated exclusively to the treatment of chronic diseases, would meet the needs of the afflicted of our land, without the most perfect, complete and extensive provision for the most improved treatment of diseases of the air-passages and lungs, such as Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, we have made this branch of our institution one of the leading Departments. We have every kind of useful instrument for examining the organs involved, such as rhinoscopes, laryngoscopes, stethoscopes, spirometers, etc., etc., as well as all of the most approved kinds of apparatus for the application of sprays, fumigations, atomizations, pulverizations, inhalations, and all other forms of approved medicinal applications.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung diseases, viz.: A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Chronic Nasal Catarrh, price, postpaid, two cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION.

Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained unparalleled success. Many of the diseases affecting the liver and other organs contributing in their functions to the process of digestion, are very obscure, and are not infreqently mistaken by both laymen and physicians for other maladies, and treatment is employed directed to the removal of a disease which does not exist. Our Complete Treatise on diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs. Our specialists have acquired, through a vast and varied experience, great expertness in determining the exact nature of each case, and, hence, have been successful in nicely adapting their remedies for the cure of each individual case.

The treatment of diseases of the urinary organs having constituted a prominent branch, or specialty, of our practice at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, and, being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete but concise work on the nature and curability of these maladies, we have published a large illustrated treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES.

INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved marvelous success. These are fully treated of in our illustrated pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. It includes numerous testimonials from well-known people. Sent by mail for ten cents in stamps. Send for it at once.

STRICTURE.

STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULÆ.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary fistulæ, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treatise on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience, is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in postage stamps, for a large, illustrated treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, arising from overstudy, excesses, and other causes, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with a measure of success heretofore regarded as impossible. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.

So alarmingly prevalent are those chronic diseases peculiar to females, and so famous have our institutions become for their cure that we were long ago obliged to create a special department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of these cases. The physicians and surgeons in this Department have made these delicate diseases their sole study.

Hundreds are brought to our institutions from far distant States on beds, and they go home well and strong. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Every important case (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) has the benefit of a full Council, composed of skilled specialists. Our Department and rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute are so arranged as to be very private, and free from the annoyances so common in other institutions. Send ten cents in postage stamps for our large Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates.

PILE TUMORS.

PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, and other diseases affecting the region of the lower bowel, are largely treated, and with marvelous success, by specialists, who give their whole time to the study and treatment of this class of affections. We never fail to cure pile tumors, however large. When the patient can come here for treatment, we will guarantee a cure.

Fortunately for suffering humanity, a method of treatment has been perfected and thoroughly tested in our institutions, by which in from six to fifteen days radical and perfect cures of the worst forms of piles are effected without causing any severe suffering. Send ten cents in stamps for our large illustrated Treatise on Piles.

RUPTURE.

Hernia (Breach), or Rupture, no matter of how long standing, of what size, or what the age of the patient may be (if not under four years), is speedily and radically cured in every case undertaken by our specialists, without the knife, without dependence upon trusses, without pain, and without danger.

THROW AWAY TRUSSES.

There is no longer any need of wearing clumsy, awkward, chafing, old trusses, which, at best, give only partial relief, which never cure, but often inflict great injury and induce inflammation and strangulation, from which thousands annually die.

NOT SAFE.

There is no safety in depending upon any kind of truss, though, no doubt, every man who has suffered the agonies of a strangulated hernia, and died, thought himself safe. Both the rupture and the truss keep up a mental strain and induce nervous debility and various organic weaknesses of the kidneys, bladder, and associate organs.

CURES GUARANTEED in every case undertaken. Can any sufferer ask for greater inducements than these?

Notwithstanding the great number of ruptures treated in the three years past, many of them of immense size and of such a character that no other plan of treatment could possibly have succeeded, every case to which this perfected system of treatment has been thoroughly applied, has been perfectly cured. Only a few days residence at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute is necessary.

Abundant references, by permission of those whom we have cured, will be furnished to any one wishing to call upon or write them.

An illustrated treatise on Rupture sent to any address upon receipt af ten cents.

DELICATE DISEASES.

Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary vital losses, and kindred affections, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

To those acquainted with our institutions it is hardly necessary to say that the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with the branch establishment located at No. 3 New Oxford Street, London, England, have, for many years, enjoyed the distinction of being the most largely patronized and widely celebrated institutions in the world for the treatment and cure of those affections which arise from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices.

We, many years ago, established a special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced medical men.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY.

We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Many who suffer from these terrible diseases contract them innocently. Why any medical man intent on doing good, and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there are probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little.

We fully agree with the celebrated Dr, Bartholow, who says, "I think it a reproach to our profession that this subject has been permitted, in a measure by our own indifference, to pass into the hands of unscrupulous pretenders. Because the subject is disagreeable, competent physicians are loath to be concerned with it. The same unnecessary fastidiousness causes the treatment of this malady to be avoided in private practice."

We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

Our Complete and Illustrated Treatise on these subjects is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES A SPECIALTY.—Although we have, in the preceding paragraphs, made mention of some of the special ailments to which particular attention is given by the specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, yet the institution abounds in skill, facilities, and apparatus for the successful treatment of every form of chronic ailment, whether requiring for its cure medical or surgical means.

All letters of inquiry or of consultation should be addressed to

MARKDALE JANUARY 14 1886

BEHIND THE SCREEN.

AN HOUR IN THE EDITOR'S SANCTUM.

It was a cold day in the middle of January; our office was comfortable, and we wished to have an hour to ourselves in order to think and pen something interesting, and if possible, instructive for the many readers of the STANDARD. We had not even thought of a heading until a subscriber came in and ordered his paper stopped—rather discouraging for a beginning—however we wished to know his reason for so doing. "Well," he said, "you have quoted peas a cent higher than the market." We told him that the grain buyer corrects our market reports weekly on going to press, and if he gives us a false report we should not have to suffer for it. In the meantime another steps in and says, he saw said price paid on the market and that the STANDARD was correct. "Well, you better send on the paper."

Another comes and suggests as an improvement to the paper, that we drop all stories, (seriels) he could not see what interest those continued stories were to any one; for his part, he never read one of them, nor did he believe in them. Well, we said, every one is not alike, many a person subscribed solely for the stories, and we have to publish something suitable for each. For instance, you are a farmer, you grow large quantities of barley, you don't like the crop, it is most disagreeable to work amongst, to harvest or thresh or anything else, and besides, it is a very uncertain crop; a shower of rain, or even a heavy dew at a certain stage in harvest will detract very materially from its value. Very true, said he. Furthermore, we said, you don't advocate beer drinking, and yet you persist in growing a grain that is, of all grain the most disagreeable to handle, and after it is marketed it is largely manufactured into that which you are opposed to, and why? Now I see the point, its profit we are after, its money we want; her's a doller, send along the STANDARD for '86. I can easily get the worth of it without reading the stories. Much obliged, her's your receipt, thanks. Next is another wanting to renew, but he wishes us to run two or three stories instead of one, but finding to his regret that we cannot comply, he pays his doller cheerfuly. Then comes a person wishing to advertise young cattle which has strayed away, but has entertained the idea that owing to his being an old subscriber, he is entitled to a free adv. or at least a liberal discount, but of course that is out of the question, and he is forced to the conclusion, after a little argument, that the paper is in itself cheap at $1, so he pays for his ad. Next we open a letter from a young person who has removed to the States and wants the paper, asking us to be sure and give all interesting news such as Marriages, Births, Deaths, and a thousand and one other little incidents which go to make up a local paper. Then a manuscript is opened, it is very personal, not apparently with intent to injure, but simply to have a little fun at the expense of others, and signed Nimrod or Phiz or something else, but the writer withholds his own name even from the editor, consequently the epistle goes straight to the waste basket. Next comes a correspondence from a rural district which runs as follows:—Dere editor,—nuse iz very scerce and hard too obtane, there was a wedin nere hear las weak an they had a big time, and danced awl nite til brawd da lite. we withkeep names at prezent, tha hav our best wishes for fortun bleedings. the elexions is over and awl iz quite. if u would like a regler corespondent hear i think i can fil the bill a good az any one round, az i am the best edecated ov eny won in this part.

Canadian Pacific Railway.

Montreal, Jan. 7.—The following is a statement of revenue and expenditure of the Canadian Pacific railway for the past year. The earnings and expenses for December are approximate, but the corrected earnings will not change the figures materially: Gross earnings for 1885, $3,259,557; for 1884, $5,750,521. Gross expenses, 1885, $5,124,374; 1884, $4,558,630. Net earnings, 1885, $3,225,183; 1884, $1,191,890.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—The season of the year has again arrived when shoddy peddlers and auctioneers of shoddy goods and old shop worn bankrupt stocks, come around and expect to reap a rich harvest from the "Simple Simons" who are ready to be shorn by every "Cheap Jack" who comes along with a slick, oily tongue and a bundle of stale jokes to help palm off worthless goods.

I was badly sold last winter by one of those chaps who I see is again advertised to appear shortly, and would warn the public against all such.

A FARMER.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

AT REST.—Mr. Alfred Down, Sr., passed peacefully away to his reward on Saturday afternoon last. Deceased has been a resident of this township a large number of years, and has always been known as a man of sterling principles. His daily life bore testimony to the religion he professed His remains were interred in the Flesherton cemetery on Tuesday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Ayers will deliver a memorial sermon on Sabbath evening next in the Methodist church here, of which deceased was a member.

A cottage social, held at the residence of J. E. Moore, Esq., in this place, under the auspices of the Baptist church here on Monday evening last, was in every respect a decided success. The eatables were good and in abundance. The assembly was large, the house being well filled, and the programme choice. Mr. John Whitton was voted to the chair, and performed the duties of his office there in a most pleasing manner.

The patrons of the Flesherton cheese factory met in the Town Hall here on Monday last to close up their business in the cheese making for the past summer. The last sale of cheese, nearly four thousand dollars worth, was effected at 9½ cents per pound. So far as we have heard, all patrons are satisfied this season with the management and returns from the factory. We think too much thanks can not be given Mr. George Stewart by the patrons, for his untiring efforts to serve them well and to their very best interests, as the most of the above amount of cash was paid out at M. Richardson & Co's office in less than one hour on Monday evening. Cash should be a little flush in this neighborhood, at least for a day or two.

An altercation between two men, J. Fisher and A. Cullen, disgraced our streets on Monday evening. They thought to wipe out some old sore, but from appearances several fresh ones were made. Shame, boys, shame, and "Wad some power the gifte gae ye ta see yur sels as ithers see ye."

OLD RUNNING SORES.

Sores and Ulcers, or Abscesses hard to heal, are due to bad blood or Scrofula. Purify the blood with Burdock Blood Bitters and the worst sores speedily heal as the general health is restored.

GOOD VALUE.

Many suffers buying medicine have been disappointed, don't give up, buy a reliable article like Dr. Chase's Liver Cure, and with it you get a recipe book alone worth the money. Jan.

Cheques were issued in favor of trustees for amounts of school monies. The clerk was instructed to notify parties and prepare by law detaching lot 5, con. 7, from S. S, No. 3, and attaching the same to S. S. No. 5, to be passed at next meeting of council. Mr. Neil was instructed to investigate the case of Henry Stewart of Markdale in regard to a petition from that village asking for charity, and report to this council. A by-law was passed appointing polling places and deputy returning officers for municipal elections.

Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. Dunsmore, that this council grant a reward of two hundred dollars for the apprehension and conviction of the party or parties who entered Mr. Peter Neil's pasture field on October 15th and broke his mare's leg with a stroke of some blunt instrument.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McMillan, seconded by Mr. Dunsmore, that the thanks of this council are due and are hereby tendered to Thomas Davis, Esq., for the gentlemanly and impartial manner in which he has discharged the duties of head of this council, and that this council regret his determination to retire from that position at the expiration of the present year.—Carried unanimously.

Council adjourned sine die.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

A SUCCESSFUL BEGINNING.

Last Friday and Saturday the first public meetings of the Centre Grey Farmers' Institute was held in Markdale, and notwithstanding the very bad state of the roads—neither good wheeling nor sleighing—there was a good attendance, and the enterprising progressive farmers were the class which largely made up the crowd. Professors Brown and Grenside of the Ontario Experimental Farm at Guelph were present to address the meetings, also a number of our leading county agriculturists gave valuable assistance on the platform. There were present, leading farmers from Sullivan, Holland, Euphrasia, Collingwood, Osprey, Artemesia, Proton and Glenelg townships, all taking a deep interest in the valuable information given by the Professors, both of whom are men of unquestioned knowledge and experience, and who showed themselves anxious to communicate to the audience, in a plain and intelligent manner, the information needed on the various branches of agriculture.

The President, Mr. Thos. Gilray, made a short opening address, and called upon Prof. Brown to explain the objects of the meeting. The latter, among other things, impressed upon the audience the fact that he and Dr. Grenside were present to assist, and not to conduct the meeting. He also spoke of the importance of discussing the subjects upon which papers are read.

Mr. T. B. White, of Collingwood Township, read a paper on "What we do not know about Agricultural Chemistry," By the science of chemistry we learn that the earth and all things, therein, are composed of about 70 distinct elements, and that agricultural chemistry takes in about one-fourth of that number. The practical farmer does to succeed well, his work being to combine and build up, and just how this is we do not know. There are no set rules whereby the farmer can pursue his avocation with certainty as to the results. In scientific farming and theoretical experiments, there seem to be a great many conclusions arrived at which are not borne out in practice by the results obtained. To illustrate this he instanced the turnip as a field crop, and gave his opinions as to its effects upon land, and its worth as a substitute for feeding purposes. He referred to the assertion of Rev. W. F. Clark, that the turnip contained about 90 per cent. of water, and for feeding purposes it is like handling so much water for very little use. He quoted several other opinions concerning the turnip, which were so varied that it was difficult to arrive at a correct conclusion. He thought that what was spoken of as water in the turnip,

SHOULD BE CALLED "SOUP."

He mentioned the chemical properties of the turnip, and gave it as his opinion, which is derived from experience, that it is very valuable in counties where it can be eaten off the land in winter. But in this Province where the turnips must be housed for winter use the profit and loss account depends greatly on the conveniences and manner of handling. Turnip tops are good for sheep. Nitrogen forms an important element in agricultural chemistry. Farming is something like being at sea with a sailing vessel. You have a good vessel and your plans well laid, but owing to wind or weather often have to steer a course you do not want. He was of the opinion that the

could not be accomplished by arboriculture. The best protection he knew of for fall wheat is good barnyard manure. In order to produce a plant and annual to the best advantage it is simply necessary to take them to pieces as the expert alone can do after a lifetime's work. Our chemistry and botany should be therefore an appreciative peep into how they effect the farmer in producing the particular and annual under conditions. The late President Johnston, of Guelph, had told him of the difficulty in getting the right material to work with—practical farmers' sons. Mr. White thought the difficulty was not passed, and said it is quite amusing how some farmers will watch the returned student so as to show up what they imagine any little imperfection in his way of doing, and when an opportunity presents itself they will gather around him as, "It is safe to rub a turpentined, camphorated, corrosive sublimitized liniment on a horse's leg with your hand?" The student will sure at them, and they will take it for granted that he is floored. If the boy's father who slung that liniment be present, he will feel elated to think that his David, who has never been from home, has slain such a Goliath. (Laughter.)

Dr. Grenside said that we should have some correct understanding about the position the turnip takes as a fodder for cattle. The turnip has little value intuitively, but it is of great value in other ways. It has a laxative effect, and is a stimulant. The mistake that is commonly made in respect to feeding turnips, is the quantity. Two bushels, which some people feed, is too much, and would induce an animal to scour. Seventy pounds is quite sufficient. Walter Nikols, of Proton, asked if it would be more profitable to raise an acre of turnips or an acre of grain.

Mr. D. R. Ellis thought the surrounding district was very well adapted to the cultivation of coarse grains.

Prof Brown congratulated Mr. White on the excellence of his paper. He said that there is some misunderstanding as to what chemistry is. The idea that a farmer requires a knowledge of chemistry to analyze his soil or foods is all nonsense. In many cases the chemist cannot tell what a soil is fit to produce. He is doing us a great amount of good, although we cannot take him side by side with us. There is no crop so expensive to produce as turnips or roots. But they form an important part in rotation. Green fodder for your stock in the winter is essential. He described ensilage as the manner of preserving green fodder. It

CORRESPONDS WITH PICKLE-MAKING.

There is no trouble in preserving ensilage, but it does not retain its sweetness, as it becomes fermented. It cannot take the place of hay, as claimed by its advocates. At Guelph, where it has been largely experimented on, it required to be fed with bran to produce the same results as turnips. It produces an abundance of milk, but is not valuable for butter or cheese.

Prof. Brown was called upon for a paper on PERMANENT PASTURE.

He said that permanent pasture was pasture that lasts forever. If we are to take a lead in dairying products we must have better pasture. We have no pasture in this country. Timothy and clover do not make milk, but on the other hand dry the cows. We have no pasture, or at least very little, on which to finish stock as we should have. We should keep abreast of the times and the demands of the markets. Farmers in Ontario are all too well off or necessity would compel them to pay more attention to this subject. What we want is a continuous crop, which he would produce by sowing on a rich firm surface, with 35 pounds of seed per acre, including nine varieties of grass and five of clover, as follows:

GRASSES.
Meadow Fescue	6	lbs.
Meadow Foxtail	3	"
Orchard Grass	3	"
English Rye	2	"
Kentucky Blue	2	"
Timothy	3	"
Red Top	2	"
Yellow Oat	2	"
Fall Oat	2	"
CLOVERS.
Lucerne	4	"
White	2	"
Alsike	2	"
Red	1	"
Yellow	1	"
Totol	35	lbs.

He reminded his hearers, that this pasture was not to take the place of timothy or clover. A piece of land should be set apart for this purpose, and is not to be broken up.

EVENING SESSION.

Quite a number of ladies were present, and the meeting took the form of an entertainment, with Mr. John Lyons in the chair, when our popular Scottish vocalist, Mr. Anderson, gave choice selections.

Prof. Brown gave an interesting address on "What is Milk?' He said that the food partaken of by the cow did not control the quality and quantity of milk as much as many gave it credit for. He thought it did have a certain influence on both the richness and flow of milk, but the cow or "machine" had more to do with the article manufactured in the shape of milk, than any other agency. The Short Horn is the best breed for Ontario, all things considered, and the Jersey next. The best churn is a plain box without any inside works, but fastened so as to be revolved. If any dash is used, the old fashioned dash churn is the best. Milk should be cooled gradually from milk heat down to say 40 degrees. It is injurious to cool it suddenly or put in a cold room at once. The best milk can is made 20 inches deep and 8 inches across, or similar to a stove pipe. He did not recommend creameries, where both cheese and butter was made in one factory, but would strongly recommend butter factories as a means of raising the reputation of Canadian butter by making an article of uniform and high grade.

Mr. Wm. Brown and Mr. H. Meldrum also spoke, pointing to needed improvement in the school law as well as butter interests.

Mr. W. J. McFarland was called on and gave his (not very flattering) experience in farming. He, however, felt strongly interested on the question of butter manufacture, and would be glad to see any reformation that would bring about higher standard of Canadian butter; as it is, there is a serious loss all the way from the manufacturer to the consumer.

The second day Dr. Grenside gave an address on

POINTS OF HORSES AND BREEDS.

The lecturer first referred to the essential elements or points that are desirable in making up anything like a perfect horse, for he held that it was very seldom that anything like perfection was met with. After speaking of the more important points he made especial reference to the profusion of hair on the limbs, so noticeable in such breeds as the Shire and Clyde. He considered that it was a drawback perdisposing to skin diseases of the extremities, and that it would be a benefit to get rid of it by careful selection in breeding. The address was confined to the heavy breeds or those with which the former comes more immediately into contact, viz.: the English Cart, Clyde, Suffolk, and Percheron. While acknowledging and explaining the merits of these different breeds he was personally in favour of encouraging to a greater extent the Suffolk Punch as an agricultural and light draught, urging their constitutional vigor as evidenced by their middle piece. He also considered the absence of long hair on their limbs an advantage.

Several questions were then asked the Professor.

Should a horse get water before his meals? Yes, but should not get oats for half an hour after water.

Is there any economy in cutting hay or straw for horses? None in the sense of improving the feed or making it more nutritive, but perhaps some in making it inconvenient for a horse to pick the best out, leaving the refuse. A horse should have a little cut hay or straw in his oats to prevent bolting, and compel the animal to eat slow. Bran should not be fed dry. One gallon of oats is sufficient per day for an average horse when idle.

Dr. Sproule gave a short but able and earnest address on agriculture, its importance and great possibilities in our fair Dominion.

Mr. Thomas Kells, gave a paper on "Seed grain" and the necessity of a change. This subject was warmly discussed, and the great importance of a medium by which a desirable change of seed could be effected, was acknowledged by all, and a resolution passed asking the powers that be for assistance in paying the cost of shipment from a suitable country or district.

The several sessions of this very important meeting was deeply interesting, and a large number of members enrolled. The cost of membership per year is only 25 cents, and every farmer should be a member. The benefits to be derived are more valuable than one can easily estimate. The next meeting will be held in Thornbury on the 24th and 25th of February next.

She'd "Sot and Sot" Until She Had About Taken Root.

Al. Sproule, one of Chicago's prettiest and sweetest travelling men, was up in Michigan not long ago, and was caught over night in a very little town. There was a dance on for that evening, and Al. concluded he would accept an invitation and swing the country lasses for awhile. He went to the dance and danced with every girl there except one scrawny one, who had set all evening in the corner waiting for a partner. Al. took pity on her at last, and putting on his most angelic smile, he "shassayed" up to her.

"May I have the pleasure of dancing with you in the next set?"

"You bet you kin, young feller, for I've sot and sot till I've about tuck root."

Al. did the graceful in great shape, and the girl stuck to him the balance of the evening.

Death of Hon. Adam Crooks.

THE EX-MINISTER OF EDUCATION BREATHES HIS LAST IN A NEW YORK ASYLUM.

Toronto, Dec. 28.—Hon. Adam Crooks, formerly Minister of Education for Ontario, died to-day at the institution in New York State where he had been for the last two years. Mr. Crooks was born in West Flamboro' in 1827 and was educated at Upper Canada College and Toronto University. He was elected to the Legislature for West Toronto in 1871 taking the office of Attorney General. He was transferred to the Provincial Treasurership, and afterwards to to the Department of Education. More than two years ago his reason failed, and his seat declared vacant. He was removed to a private asylum and well cared for until his death.

The Scriptures not applicable to Grass Widows.

"And what did the preacher say to-day Hiram?" said Mrs. Sparks to her husband as he came home from the Christmas service.

"He said that every man should love his neighbor—"

"Love his neighbor?" shrieked the wife.

"That's what I say, Emily, and it's what he said."

"You can't get me to believe a word of that, Hiram Sparks. The preacher never said any such thing, for he knows as well as I do that our neighbor is a grass widow, and he knows me well enough to know that you wouldn't be able to get to church for a month after trying on that little game while I'm around. A nice man he is, I must confess, to be giving such advice as that to an old codger like you."

A True Story of the Old Coaching-Days.

Many years ago, when the journey from Edinburgh to London was a matter of days instead of hours, I started to make it, for the first time in my life, in the stagecoach which I shall call the Royal William. I was travelling alone, inasmuch as I knew none of the other passengers; but the guard had been 'tipped' to look after me, and he did that as well and for as long as he could. It was about ten days before Christmas. I was going to pay my first visit to London, having left school 'for good' some months before. The prospect of the journey had been scarcely less delightful than that of London itself, and tedious as it would be thought in these luxurious days, even by healthy young people such as I then was, I enjoyed it thoroughly—at least until more than half of it was over. There was snow in the air, but none on the ground, and our four 'spanking' horses took us along at ten miles an hour including the stoppages.

All went well until we got to Yorkshire. We had for some hours been going through a snow-covered region, and our pace had consequently been somewhat diminished; but when we reached the wild moors of Yorkshire, the snow came down in blinding clouds, and darkness setting in, we lost our way. Between the drift and the darkness—for it was about five o'clock in the afternoon—we had managed to get off the high-road, and only discovered our mistake when, after much plunging and struggling on the part of the horses, and coaxing and swearing on that of the driver and guard, all of which was more exciting than agreeable, the wheels stuck fast in the snow, and the exhausted animals absolutely refused to go a step farther.

Where we were, we could not tell—it was even a matter of doubt if we were on a road at all. We could just dimly see the white moorland stretching away on every side. There were neither stars nor moon, and the pale rays from the coach lamps, which shone coldly on the snow, extended no farther than the leaders' heads.

One passenger proposed that we should all crowd together inside the coach, then—necessity having no law—feast upon any edibles that happened to be in it, and finally try to sleep till morning. But, for several reasons, few of us cared for that plan, without first making another effort to get back to the high-road; so the guard took his horn, and two gentlemen a lantern, and they went off together to reconnoitre. In ten minutes they came back to say that they could not make anything of the situation; but that they had seen the lights of a house down in a hollow not far off, and were of the opinion that it would be better for us to try to reach it, rather than remain where we were all night. We all got out of the coach and started for the house, leaving guard and coachman behind, but promising to send them assistance when we reached our destination. The two gentlemen with the lantern guided us; and in about a quarter of an hour we reached the lodge gates, after much parleying whereat, we were at length allowed to proceed to the house itself.

We were not astonished that the porter had been so unwilling to admit us when we discovered, as we soon did, that the house was already full of Christmas guests, most if not all of whom would be remaining over the night; for in the country in those days, flying visits were more or less impracticable in winter, and this was one of those isolated dwellings whose inmates might be kept prisoners for weeks at a time. But notwithstanding their crowd of guests, the master and mistress—whom I shall call Williams—received us very kindly, warmed us, fed us, and immediately sent off two of their own men-servants to assist the guard and driver to bring the horses to their stables.

Never were belated travellers more fortunate! Such an inundation of strangers must have been a serious inconvenience in a house already so full of people; but Mr. and Mrs. Williams made us all at once feel at ease, and were very much distressed that they could only find sleeping accommodation for the ladies of our party; beds would be made up in the barns for the gentlemen, however, 'which would not,' they hoped, 'be found very uncomfortable.' The gentlemen of course were delighted with the idea, and declared their willingness to sleep anywhere—as indeed we ladies had also done.

So the evening passed on; and a very pleasant evening it was, with music and dancing—those dear old country-dances that one never sees nowadays, when old ladies and old gentlemen danced together and looked dignified, or heartily merry, and sometimes graceful. Also, it added greatly to my enjoyment when I discovered in the course of the evening that Mr. and Mrs. Williams were old and warm friends of my own father and mother. Although I had never before seen them, I had heard them spoken of by my parents, who would be delighted when they got news of their old friends in so unexpected a way. In these days of railway trains and penny-posts, one need never lose sight of one's friends; but things were different then, and I knew that my father and mother were not even aware whether the Williamses were still in this world.

The gentlemen passengers retired about eleven o'clock; but the rest of us sat chatting for nearly another hour. During this time, some remarks I accidentally overheard led me to the conclusion that we ladies were just one too many for the sleeping accommodation of the house, which was not a very large one, and that Mr. Williams himself intended to go and sleep in a small cottage that had once been the bailiff's, but was now unoccupied. To turn our host out of his own house, seemed really barbarous, so I entreated him to let me go instead. At first he laughed at the idea as ridiculous; but when I showed him that I was in earnest, was not the least afraid, and indeed rather enjoyed the idea of such a finish up to an adventurous day, he gave in.

When all the other guests had retired, my new friends kept me a little longer at the drawing-room fire talking about my father and mother; then Mrs. Williams wrapped me up and went to the hall-door with me. There I bade her good night; and Mr. Williams, with a lantern in his hand, led the way to the cottage, which stood about a hundred yards from the house, and consisted of two rooms opening into one another. Servants had been sent to prepare the place; and with bright fires in both rooms, it looked very snug; the occupants of the barns, I thought, might be less lonely, but could not be more comfortable. The rooms were very bare; but they were clean enough to all appearance, and there in the inner one lay my bed, white and inviting. There was a chair, and a washing-stand, and a small table with a looking-glass and four lighted candles on it. Candles were lit also in the other room; and my host advised me to keep them burning through the night, so that, should I awake, I might not find myself in the dark. A further supply lay on the table.

'Now,' said Mr Williams, when we had taken a look round, 'shall I not stay, and let you go back to the house? I am sure it would be better—in fact, the only proper thing to do.'

But I would not recant, and declared that I did not anticipate things could have been made so comfortable; at which Mr. Williams laughed, and seeing that I was obdurate, yielded.

'Shall I lock you in, then, or will you keep the key?' he asked.

'Lock me in, please; it sounds more secure,' I replied.

'Ah,' he said with a smile, shaking his head at the last part of my answer, and looking ready to begin the argument all over again. 'But since you will be obstinate, I will come and let you out at half-past seven.' So saying he bade me a kindly good-night, and went out, locking the door behind him.

The door between the two rooms stood open, the fire crackled cheerily, and the candles burned brightly. On the table stood a bag, which Mrs. Williams had told me contained everything necessary to my comfort.

I undressed a little, took down my hair, and began to brush it. Suddenly I was startled by a peculiar sound, seemingly quite close to me. It was a gentle clink-clink, like a chain rattling. I held my brush suspended, and listened. Pooh! What a white face was that in the glass! It must be some dog kennelled near, and Mr. Williams had not thought of telling me of it. Yet I could have declared that the sound was in the cottage—in the room where I was, even! But that of course was impossible. I drew a breath, very gently, and went on brushing my hair.

There! it came again—clink-clank—this time louder than before, and seemingly so near my back, that I looked over my shoulder almost expecting to see something. But there was nothing visible. I turned my eyes to the other room. Nothing there either, that I could see; the candles' shadow but no other—shadows. It was nonsense to tell myself that 'it might be imagination,' for I knew it was not. I wished that I had eyes in every part of my body especially in my back, and I began to regret that I had willed to be a prisoner, instead of keeping the power of escape in my own hands.

All was quiet again, except that I fancied I heard the sound of breathing. Was it possible, I wondered, that I could hear the breathing of any creature outside the cottage? Impossible, surely; this must be imagination; it would be myself breathing! And when people were nervous—I meant frightened—their senses were not always to be depended upon!

With these reflections, I tried to shake off my fears, and went on brushing my hair. But I had never noticed before what a noisy operation this was, my boots creaked so loudly at every motion. I made haste with as little noise as possible, twisted it up, and was ready to go into bed when the sound came again—clink-clink-clank, quite distinctly. It startled me fearfully this time, I had really I believe been half hoping that it was imagination; but there was no doubt now. Where the sounds came from I could not before exactly tell; now however I felt certain that the cause of them was not farther off than against the outside of the cottage wall behind my bed. It might be a dog; but I could not help feeling as afraid as if it were something very different.

I got into bed. Once warmly covered up, I did feel a little more secure; but my heart still kept thumping, and instead of trying to sleep, I strained my eyes to their widest that they might take in every corner of the place at once. Some minutes passed, and I heard no sound but a coal gently sinking, and the breathing that must be my own—and imagination—then, suddenly, clink-clank, clink-clank, loud and fast, and the next moment a man crept slowly out from under my bed!

Now, indeed, my heart leaped into my mouth paralyzed with terror, I just lay and gazed at him. He crept along the floor towards the fire, clanking as he went; then he stood up—a tall slightly made young man, with a dark fierce face and brilliant eyes,—and leaning forward, with his back to me, he spread out his hands to the blaze: awful hands to look at; and chains hung round each wrist, rattling slightly and glittering in the firelight as his eyes did also.

For some moments I lay and gazed at him scarcely breathing, expecting every instant that he would turn his head and see me. He did not; but of course I dared not stay there. Yet I seemed spellbound to the spot; and it was with a great effort of will, but without a definite idea what to do, that I managed one desperate move. I slipped out of bed, and, with my eyes fixed on the man I glided swiftly to the door, into the other room, and into the corner that was most in the shade. Had he but turned his head an inch as I passed, he must have seen me; but he kept his eyes on the fire with an awfully hungry look—and perhaps my motions were as noiseless as I wished them to be. Once I was in the corner he could not see me without coming into the room. But he might do that any moment; and then? I stood still and rigid, listening. I could not now see him. A long time it seemed that he stood in the same position, then the chains clanked loudly, and I heard him walking across the floor.

He must be coming now! I thought I would have died that moment. My heart seemed to stand still. But he did not come; he had gone toward the bed for presently I heard it creak as he lay down on the top of it. Then, after some restless moving about and rattling of chains, all was still. I could not tell whether he had fallen asleep or not; for I dared not move lest he should be awake. There was nothing I could sit on, and there I had to stand with my bare feet on the uncarpeted wooden floor, with no covering but my nightdress. It was fearfully cold. If only I had had some clothes on, I thought I should not have been quite so defenceless! Then horrible thoughts came and tortured me. Perhaps the man knew that I was there quite well, though he might have been asleep at first, and was just keeping me in suspense till it was his pleasure to come and pounce on me with those awful chains and claw-like hands of his.

A long time passed in this way, and then once more my heart leaped into my mouth. I heard the man get up, walk to the fire, and put on some coals. He stood there a minute, then walked to the table, which was exactly opposite my door, but not within range of my sight, snuffed each candle, paused again a full minute, hesitating, perhaps, then walked back to the bed and lay down.

Suspense is a terrible thing; and the cold was becoming every moment more intense. Sometimes my knees bent under me, and I slid down almost to the ground; then, alarmed to find myself in so unguarded a position, I would start up again, and try to stand straight and alert—as if my poor readiness would be of any avail when things came to the worst.

So the long hours passed. The man did not get up again, and I thought he must be asleep but when at length the fire and the candles in both rooms went out almost simultaneously, he took no notice of it but left us in darkness. For some hours it was a darkness that might be felt; but it did not add much to my terror, for it made me feel a little safer and farther away from him.

All this passed in what seemed years instead of hours; till at last my heart gave a great bound of hope; for there, through the window, which had neither blind or shutter, I could see lights moving about over the snow in different directions. Then all the lights came together at the door, and someone tried to open it. Alas! it was locked and the key gone, as I knew. So, after another futile attempt to open it the lights all moved slowly away. I was afraid to go forward to the window, lest the man should see me and the torch bearers should not; I only moved along the wall so as to be opposite to it, and waved my hands in a silent frenzy. No one saw me, and soon all the lights disappeared quite. This disappointment almost deprived me of all the remaining strength I had left; but I was too thoroughly terrified to faint. I was in no hurry for any such luxury, and now every moment expected that the man, roused by the noise at the door would come into my room to examine it. However, time passed on, and he did not move, only now and then the chains rattled a little, as if he were turning in his sleep.

At last the total darkness began to give way; a faint grayness came stealing through the little window. The night was not going to last forever! Slowly the grayness grew toward light, very slowly but unceasingly, and I could dimly see every object in the room,—when at last I heard footsteps outside, then the key put in the lock, and—oh, how slowly!—turned. It was my deliverer.

All the terror of the past night and the joy of the present moment seemed now suddenly crushed and pressed upon my head. I was mad for the time, I suppose. I waited till the door was open and then fled out into the snow. 'Don't go in there!' I said in a whisper like a shriek. 'Lock the door!'

'Good heavens!' Mr Williams exclaimed, obeying—and then he caught me up in his arms—My hair had turned quite white.

But I did not discover that till many months afterwards, for, being ill, I had no need of a looking-glass. I learned then, too, for the first time, that my fellow-prisoner was a madman, who had escaped from an asylum some miles off. Perishing with cold, he had crept into the cottage after the servants—who had left the key in the door—had finished their preparations, and so had not been discovered. He was a dangerous lunatic; so it was as well that I did not know that, for a madman is a greater terror to me than the most desperate of escaped convicts. The men with the torches had come in search of him.

Mr. Williams ran with me to the house, and sent three men to the cottage. They were no more than in time, as the wretched man was escaping from one of the windows just as they came up, and they had a severe struggle with him before he was overpowered. The same morning he was restored to the asylum, where he died a few weeks afterwards, worn out with an excess of madness.

Ever since that time I have lived in dread of going mad. Indeed, I do not think I am always quite so sane as other people. But I am an old woman now, and I think I shall be spared worse madness. I have written this in the hope of easing my mind a little; though I can never forget that night.

The Dog Treed the Preacher.

One sunny Sabbath morning as the Rev. Joab Powell was preaching to an attentive congregation in the forks of the Santiam a tipsy man strayed like a black sheep into the fold; but no one objected, and things ran smoothly enough. Presently a small dog entered at the open door and trotted down the aisle until it reached the front of the pulpit, when it set up a furious barking at the minister. The tipsy man, with the utmost gravity, arose and walked steadily down the aisle to where the dog was barking. Seizing the animal by the neck, he held him up before the congregation for a moment, and then, shaking him furiously, he broke out with: "Tree a preacher, will you, you ill-bred pup?" This was too much for Joab. He could not restrain his laughter, and he took his seat, not being able to dismiss his congregation in his usual vigorous style.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is accepted by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns from the tender, aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painful corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, doesn't go fooling around a man's foot, but gets to business at once, and effects a cure. Don't be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Some twenty colonies have been established in the Santa Fe district of the Argentine Republic. Their territory occupies ninety-five square leagues, and the settlers number 1,359 families. During the last thirty years the district has grown through colonization until it has a population of 110,000 souls.

The officers of the German navy number 984. The navy consists of 13 iron-clads, 14 armored vessels (gunboats for coast defence), 9 cruiser frigates, 10 cruiser corvettes, 5 cruisers, 4 unarmored gunboats, 6 despatch boats, 10 training ships, 1 surveying vessel, 2 transports, 12 vessels for harbor service, and 10 pilot vessels and fireships.

Two French women entered into a contest to determine which of them could talk the faster. A mutual friend was appointed umpire, and the sum of 1,000 francs was to go to the victor. For three hours they read from Eugene Sue's feuilleton, and during that time the victor succeeded in pronouncing 296,311 words. Her adversary came in a bad second with 203,560 words.

Paris has twenty-two squares of an area of eleven hectares, while Berlin has fifty squares of an area of forty hectares. The parks of London aggregate 877 hectares, against Berlin's 417 hectares, which, considering the difference in the population of the two cities, is decidedly to the advantage of the last named city. In the number of trees Paris, with 87,602, against Berlin's 38,000, is largely ahead.

The Paris correspondent of the Lancet states that when Dr. Pasteur read his last report on rabies at the Academy of Science, his friend, the late M. Bouley, asked whether dogs rendered insusceptible to hydrophobia by repeated inoculations would not themselves be liable to communicate the disease by biting. M. Pasteur could give no immediate reply, but admitted that it was a subject for serious consideration.

An English sportsman, shooting on the north shore of Long Island, was invited to dinner at a farm house, and was so astonished that he writes to a London newspaper about it. "I wonder how often in merrie England," he says, "a farmer, with his family and two men servants, sits down to roast turkey, chicken pie, with four or five vegetables, and cranberry pie, to say nothing of both whiskey and beer to drink."

The death of Dr. F. Helen Prideaux has called forth many expressions of regret in England. She was one of the most distinguished of the women graduates of London University. In her examination in 1882 she held the first honors in anatomy and took the gold medal and scholarship. In 1884 she was accorded honors in each subject. Her death was due to diphtheria, contracted while at her post of house surgeon in the Paddington Hospital for Children.

Another English physician, Dr. Heald of Leeds, was lately accused of indecent assault by a young school mistress, who consulted him in reference to a cough. The presence of hysteria was shown at the trial, and the jury gave a verdict of acquittal after a ten minutes' consultation. English doctors are beginning to readopt the once prevailing rule of consulting women only in the presence of a witness.

A very noticeable change has taken place in the grass growth of the open sheep plains of Australia since its civilization. The grass originally grew in large tussocks some distance apart, but now has assumed the appearance of a sward, owing to its having steeled out when fed upon by sheep and cattle, and from the seed having been trampled into the ground, where, in the absence of bush fires, it germinated.

CHAPTER XXI.

"THEY'LL NEED SWIFT STEEDS WHO FOLLOW,"
SAID YOUNG LOCHINVAR.

It was a dinner in name, but hardly a dinner in fact.

Anxiety concerning something, though they hardly knew what, had caused the cook to make many a mistake and the other servants to follow suit. The wrong sauces and condiments were brought round in every case, but even had they been the right ones they would have failed in this instance to stimulate the appetites of those who had sat around the unfestive board.

The evening was very hot, and the darkness which at last began to veil the scene restored no coolness to the parched earth or the scorching air.

Outside the open but Venetian blind-screened windows all was still as death, save when now and then a murmur as from an angry but distant sea, or a wail like that of a rising wind, was wafted from a neighboring city, interspersed occasionally with indistinct rumblings as of heavy baggage or artillery wagons passing along a rutty road, and a sound like fireworks being let off and soaring hissing into the air.

The trio who sat at the table and also the servants who waited upon them betrayed symptoms of, at all events, uneasiness when ever these unfamiliar and unaccountable noises forced themselves more especially upon their notice.

Nellie's anxiety extended to another who was not present, and each morsel that she attempted to swallow for appearance sake seemed as though it would choke her, so that at last she was fain to drop her knife and fork and sink back in her chair.

"Come, Nellie, there is nothing to be frightened at. We are quite safe at all events. Nothing like having a friend at court, eh? Why, Nell, you may indirectly be the means of saving your parents' lives and those of our entire household as well, for every living soul at Mount Carmel is embraced in the war minister's invitation, and such a thought should make you glad."

"I shall never know what it is to feel glad any more," sobbed Nellie. "I have a presentiment which amounts to a conviction that my future will be darker than death."

As she utters the words an eager and impatient voice was heard without, apparently insisting on admittance, which was being feebly denied, but an instant later both voices ceased and were succeeded by hurried strides and the musical ring of spurs along the uncarpeted corridor that was floored with perfumed chunam wood, and then the room door was opened violently and Frank Donelly broke into the apartment with a flushed and excited face and blood trickling down his cheek.

"Mr. Trezarr, you would not listen to my warning this morning, but for the sake of those you love, I beseech you to give good heed unto me now. The fanatic Moslem population of Cairo is up in arms, and the santons and dervishes are in every direction urging them to a general massacre of Europeans. Isolated acts of murder have already been perpetrated, whilst assaults and beatings can be counted by the score, insults and indignities by the hundred. A poor Christian woman has been stoned to death in the Esbekiah, with a thousand ruffians standing by and applauding the act. 'Tis said that thirty thousand starving Egyptians, all too feeble to move, are propped up naked in thirty thousand doorways, with labels attached to their almost fleshless bones, and written on each in Arabic: 'The result of Feringhee competition! Get them back the bread that the unbeliever has stolen from them, and if the bread cannot be got, then give them blood to drink,' and you may depend on it the very gutters will run blood in another hour, aye, perhaps in even less."

The young officer ceased, more apparently because he was out of breath than by reason that he had no further horrors to relate.

Pulling out a handkerchief, he began to wipe the thin trickle of blood from off his cheek, the next instant answering Nellie's terrified glance with: "A mere prick, that is all; but the fellow who gave it to me is past doing any further mischief. I returned him more than a Roland for his Oliver, at all events."

"What is to be done?" ejaculated Mrs. Trezarr, for a moment losing confidence even in the war minister, and she looked anxiously at her husband as she put the question.

"What you decide on doing should be done at once," broke in Frank, without allowing Mr. Trezarr time to make reply. "Your flight should be immediate, and not by rail, for the station is already crowded by refugees who can't get away by reason that there are not half sufficient carriages to hold them or engines to draw them. They can't telegraph to Alexandria for more because the wires have been cut, and it is reported that the Arabs are tearing up the line near Kalyuh as well. So, for heaven's sake avoid the railway terminus, for I should not at all wonder if there the massacre wasn't commenced, but rather drive in your own carriage to Umm Dinar, and there take boat for Alexandria, for that would be by far the safest plan."

"Oh, papa, do follow Mr. Donelly's advice," pleaded Nellie, earnestly.

It was this plea which seemed to recall Mr. Trezarr's presence of mind.

"I thank you very much for your no doubt excellent intentions and counsel, Mr. Donelly," he said, coldly. "But the fact is that neither I nor my family have the least cause for apprehension. His excellency the war minister has most graciously and considerately offered us the shelter of his palace until the public excitement has calmed down, and almost every minute I expect the arrival of the armed escort which is to guard us in safety thereto."

On receiving this information, the young Irishman turned pale and glanced at Nellie, who said resolutely:

"I shall not accompany my parents to the war minister's"

Frank, who by this time had approached close to the lovely girl's chair, alone heard the words (which was fortunate, perhaps, under the circumstances), for the attention of both Mr. and Mrs. Trezarr had been suddenly attracted and engrossed by the jumble of wheels, the tramping of horses and the jingling of weapons and accoutrements outside, which united told them that the promised escort had arrived.

"For heaven's sake, Nellie, grant me five minutes in the garden before we are parted, perhaps for ever," said Frank, purposely using such words as should allay any suspicions on Mrs. Trezarr's part should she happen to hear what he was saying.

But the buxom dame was too excited to either hear or heed.

"Nellie, follow me at once to change your dress and look out what we are to take with us," she said, rising to her feet and sailing majestically out of the room, and Mr. Trezarr at once scurried after her to ascertain if the war minister had sent an officer in command of the escort sufficiently high in rank as to necessitate his being asked indoors and shown a certain degree of civility and politeness.

Directly both father and mother had disappeared, the young Irish dragoon whispered hurriedly in Nellie's ear: "This has happened opportunely. Come into the garden; the window is open; we have but to raise the Venetians and step out."

The lovely girl followed him swiftly and eagerly. The servants, of course, did not venture to oppose her exit, and a minute later the lawn was reached, when Frank turned round, folded her in his arms and clasped her to his heart, at the same time exclaiming:

"Oh, my darling, if we part now I feel assured not only that we shall never meet again, but that your future will be a living grave in that grim pasha's harem. Should once its wall enclose you he will never permit you to leave them more."

"Frank, I feel so, too, but, oh, what is to be done?" responded Nellie, piteously.

"Exactly that which we planned to do some three hours later, with trifling variations, such as altered circumstances render necessary. But this is a time for action and not for explanation, for every moment's start that we can obtain may be of the utmost value to us. Just outside that little door in the garden wall is my man, Pat Monaghan, with two horses as fresh as daisies and lively with their supper of oats. You must mount one and I the other, Pat will follow us in whatever he can beg, borrow or steal, and in an hour we shall have left Cairo and its bloodthirsty population far behind us."

"But my parents, Frank? How can I desert them at such a time?"

"Under Arabi Pasha's protection no possible danger can menace them."

"I believe that. But then this dress. How can I mount a horse clad thus?"

And the lovely girl glanced deprecatingly at the snow white neck, shoulders and arms that were so liberally revealed by her rich dinner robe.

"For goodness sake regard not such trifles at a moment like the present. The Egyptian night is so warm that there will be no fear of your catching cold, and did you reenter the house to change your apparel you would never succeed in leaving it again. Oh, do not lose the one and only opportunity that has been afforded us by Providence. Hark, they are calling to us already."

It was her father's voice, and speaking in stern, peremptory tones. That decided her.

She spoke no word, but started across the lawn, like a timid fawn, in the direction of the door in the wall.

So great was her speed that her companion could hardly overtake her.

But when the wall was reached she reeled up against with both hands pressed against her throbbing heart, owing to her breathlessness and her excitement.

The dragoon unfastened the door, placed an arm around her waist, half swung her out into the roadway, and then said to a figure that loomed dimly out of the gloom:

"Off with you, Pat, and lift this young lady into your saddle like lightning."

No sooner said than done. It was a side saddle, and as Nellie involuntarily kicked her foot into the stirrup and gathered up the reins she felt a return of courage and confidence.

"Pat, you have as many lives as a cat and as many resources as a fox. I've no fear for you. Nevertheless, get a mount as fast as you can and come after us like a team. We shall cross the bridge and journey down on the left bank of the Nile. The road runs alongside the river for a long way, and in half an hour the moon will be up. You've got a good revolver in your belt, money in your pocket and brains in your head, and no more is needed."

"Bedad, yer honor, and I'll have a horse between my legs in five minutes if ye'll only be getting away with the lady instead of speechifying," and with these words Pat Monaghan darted away toward the main entrance to Mount Carmel, whilst Frank wheeled Nellie's steed round in an opposite direction.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE CAPTIVE OF THE LOTUS LILIES—CHASED INTO THE DESERT.

"You've told me more than once that you've followed the hounds in Leicestershire and held your own in the first flight as well, Nellie, so I've not the slightest apprehension of how this wild night ride will end," said Frank Donelly cheerfully, as they cantered along the Caoubrah road. "Alexandria is from Cairo exactly a hundred and twenty miles."

"I thought that Port Said was our destination, to catch the English mail boat?"

"It was, had we been able to get away by train, but you see that scheme has been knocked on the head. The rail is too dangerous. I dare not risk it with you. It is so easy for hostile Arabs to rip up a few plates and so send an entire train to the very deuce. Still, we may take to it at some point or other of our journey, if either ourselves or our horses knock up, for we shall never be very far from it the whole way."

"Oh, Frank, I dread most having to ride through Cairo in this dress. See what a mark I am for stones and missiles of every description. The fairness of my skin will point me out as a Christian girl at any distance. The mob will tear me off my horse and stone or trample me to death. That is my horrible dread."

"We are not going through Cairo, Nell. We shall cross the pontoon bridge and get into the desert almost at once. By journeying down on the left bank of the Nile instead of the right we shall escape a hundred dangers, not the least being the many scores of canals that it would puzzle us sorely to cross on horseback."

"But may we not lose our way in the desert, or get lost in the shifting sands?"

"Not between the river and the mountains. Its breadth is too contracted for that."

"But in the mountains there are tigers, hyenas and wolves in whole packs, Frank."

"And in the river there are crocodiles and hippopotami: but the dwellers of the Nile will no more molest us than the dwellers of the mountain. Man is the only wild beast that we have to fear, darling, and we shall meet few enough of his kind on the desert track which we are about to follow."

"Well, I will try to keep up my courage, Frank. You really believe that my parents are quite safe?"

"Under the protection of so powerful a friend, how could they be otherwise, dear?"

"Ah, well, then, it isn't really cruel of me to desert them, especially to escape from such a terrible and revolting doom as threatened me. And we will be married at Alexandria?"

"Or aboard some English vessel in the harbor almost as soon as they arrive."

They had by this time turned off into the road that led unto the bridge, and in about five minutes they were crossing its resounding planks, to the accompaniment of the hoarse murmur of the Nile, as its rapid current swept on towards the distant sea; the same current which in past ages has borne successively to conquest the Ethiopian, the Assyrian, the Persian, the Roman and the Saracen, for each in turn wielded the destinies of Egypt, and the young dragoon may be forgiven whilst these events recurred to his mind for wondering if the scarlet uniformed soldiers of Great Britain were destined to next tread that historic soil in the character of conquerors.

His silence oppressed his companion with a sense of danger, and she exclaimed:

"Of what are you thinking, Frank? Have any new perils presented themselves to you?"

"No, darling," and he forthwith told her of what he had been pondering.

Nellie made no answer, indeed her horse required no little care and attention. The spirited animal seemed disposed to shy and rear, for the slightly swaying and heaving planks of the pontoon bridge were not at all to his liking and the shimmering of the water and of the stars that were reflected therein added to his uneasiness; for a horse is at one and the same time the bravest and most cowardly of animals; brave when opposed to a danger that he fully comprehends, cowardly when brought in contact with anything unusual that he fails to exactly understand.

"How stiflingly close it is," exclaimed Nellie suddenly. "Even the river lends no coolness to the air, so what will it be when we get on to the desert sands? Don't you feel it, Frank?"

"No, darling, for I can feel nothing but happiness and delight when you are so near."

The lovely girl's answer to this tender speech was a cry of either terror or dismay, and at the same time she caught up the curb with a sudden jerk that caused her steed to snort, rise on end and paw the air with his fore hoofs.

In an instant, however, Frank's hand and voice had restored him to promise obedience, though he still trembled, snorted, pricked his ears sharply forward and gazed nervously at something in the river.

Nellie's beautiful eyes being riveted with horror on apparently the same spot, the young dragoon turned to look in the same direction, when he beheld floating close to the bridge amidst a tangled maze of snowy lotus flowers the dead body of a European.

It had evidently been partially stripped of its clothing before being consigned to the river, which revealed the fact that not only was the throat cut across, but that the chest was riddled with knife stabs, and it was the phosphorescent glow given forth from the putrefying body that revealed its presence and that of the flowers amongst which it floated.

"Nellie, if the sight is so terrible, why not look another way. I fear that such victims will be counted by the hundred this night in yonder city. Hark, I can hear cries of terror or of anguish from that direction even now, darling. Let us press on. There is no time to be lost."

"Oh, Frank, the lotus flowers, the twin horror of the opal ring," gasped the lovely girl.

"The lotus flowers? It is their matted tendrils that uphold the corpse, darling."

"Yes, yes; I know, I know; but I attach a prophetic meaning to the sight. The link that bound you to that beautiful but terrible Egyptian woman was a lotus flower. That link was broken by you, but the mysterious and once deemed sacred flower avenges both itself and its slighted mistress. Pray heaven that you have not looked upon the presentiment of your own doom. Ever that pale, unearthly light that hovers o'er corpse and flowers seems to me to have a horrible significance. Oh, Frank, is it too late to turn back, think you?"

"Return? What are you thinking of, Nellie? Death most assuredly lies behind us, and at the very worst it may not lurk in front. A fig for signs and omens; I believe in none of them. See, Nellie, darling, bridge and river lie in our rear and from the dark blue dome of heaven a thousand bright stars of hope shine down on the groves of lime and citron trees that we are about to enter, causing every green leaf to gleam as though tipped with liquid fire, whilst away in the distance the drooping palms seem to nod to us from the desert plain and to beckon us on with a murmured promise of safety."

"Frank, your words cheer me. I feel myself again. But, hark! no sooner does hope creep into my heart than despair rushes after it. We are already pursued."

Donelly checked his horse and listened, and true enough the wooden bridge that they had just left behind was reverberating beneath the galloping hoof-strokes of a horse.

"It is but a single individual, and if he is pursuing us he rides on a fool's errand. But I'd much rather say it was another fugitive like unto ourselves. Anyhow, let us speed up our nags, for the being overtaken by a friend would be more unpalatable to me than to be caught up by a foe, for it might not be half so easy to get rid of him."

The lovely girl did as she was bidden, but presently drew rein again, exclaiming:

"He's gaining on us, Frank, and he is singing. Can he be your servant, I wonder?"

Even Donelly drew up at this and listened intently in turn to the rapid thud of the galloping horse's hoofs, that were now beating upon the hard, baked up earth.

"Nose, nose, nose, nose—nose, nose, nose,
How got you that jolly red nose?"

came a roar the next instant, and just as quickly the thundering refrain:

"Cinnamon and ginger, nutmegs, rum and cloves,
'Twas they that gave poor Pat such a jolly red nose, and hardly had the last words of the old campaigning drinking chorus escaped the singer's lips than, mounted on a fine Arab steed and flourishing a long lance above and around his head as though it had been a shillelah, appeared Mr. Patrick Monaghan in propria personæ, and apparently in the most boisterous spirits to boot.

"Arrah, captain, dear, an' it must have been you that's been philandering on the way, for it's not on this side of Umm Dinar that I expected to overtake yer honor, after all that I've done since we last parted more especial."

"Tell us what you have done, Pat; not that we need remain still to listen, for time is too precious for that. You found a good mount in a very short time."

"Faith, yer honor, there was nothing so difficult about that, at all at all. There was many a nag to select from just a few yards away, so I took my choice of thim all in the dark, an' having made it, I creeps up unobserved on all fours, grabs hold of one of the spalpeen's legs as was in my saddle, pitches him over on the off side as though he was a sack ov taties, an' then up I jumps in his place, confiscates his lance and et ceteries an' makes about a dozen of his companions run for it."

"You tell me seriously that you made a dozen of his companions run away? I say, draw it mild, Pat."

"Yer honor, it's the gospel truth that I'm telling yez. I brandished my spear and I cursed them for murthering haythins, an' I made a dozen ov 'em run like steam; aye, by this an' by that, I shouldn't wonder if they were running still."

"Come, come, I'm not going to believe all that, though I doubt not that you got the horse as you say."

"What, yer honor don't believe that I made the Agyptians run? Bedad, thin I can prove it, for here they come on to the bridge like a pack o' hounds in full cry, and here peeps out the moon as a witness on my side to show 'em clearly to yer honor."

"Oh, you ran first and they ran after you? Now I see what you mean, Pat. Well, we will make them run in the same manner, for they are trying to run down more important game than yourself, of that be assured."

"Nellie, we are pursued," added Frank, turning to his girl companion, "for my brave but blundering follower has contrived to set the sleuth hounds of the war minister upon the right scent. Have not the slightest fear that they will overtake us, however."

"Nor will I have such a fear," responded Nellie, valorously, and she was the first to increase the speed of her horse, sitting the fine animal like an Amazon.

THE FARM.

Farm Wrinkles.

A wire run along the top of the old-fashioned straight rail and block fence will keep the stock away from it, and save trouble in putting up riders.

Have on hand a paper of copper rivets of different sizes and a piece of oiled leather for cutting strings to keep the harness mended with.

It is a painful fact that the half-baked man is not rare.

It takes about seventy good-sized ears to make a bushel of shelled seed corn.

Three horses abreast is very often the most economical team for the heavy work of the farm.

In Spain an old custom among the country people is never to eat fruit out of doors without planting the seed. The roads are lined with trees whose fruit is free to all.

Slobbering and its Cure.

The frequent slobbering of horses at this season is variously accounted for. We have heard it attributed to the second growth clover, to the spiders web on the herbage, to lobelia, St. John's wort, and other plants, but never yet to pennyroyal. But having occasion to make use of a neighbor's pasture for a few nights, for our horses, we found them slobbering profusely from the effects of the pennyroyal which grew abundantly in the field. The cows which grazed in the field were also troubled with profuse salivation. We have had previous knowledge that lobelia and St. John's wort would produce the same trouble, and now are sure that pennyroyal may be added to the list. But we doubt very much that second growth clover will cause it; indeed, we have good reasons to know that it does not in some cases. The slobbering of horses and cows is caused by the irritating effect upon the salivary glands, of the stinging essential of the plants which produce it. If one will chew some lobelia, St. John's wort or pennyroyal, he will find the salivary glands to be excited in this manner. The effect is removed by eating any dry substance, as oatmeal, middlings or cornmeal, and the best remedy for it is to give any animal which is suffering from salivation a feed of dry meal or middlings; this will put a stop to it at once. The waste of saliva is exceedingly weakening to a horse, for saliva is not mere water, but contains a quantity of potash, soda, lime, acid, phosphoric acid, and organic matter, so that it approaches very closely in character to blood.

When and How to Apply Stable Manure.

Stable manure is a heavy, bulky material, and in applying it to our land we have to handle a large amount of water and other material of comparatively little value, in order to apply enough of the essential elements for abundant crops. And when we have much of it to handle, especially if we have to draw it far at the busy season of planting, or over soft land in wet weather, we find it a tedious job, and often planting is considerably delayed by the time required to get the manure spread upon the land. Hence when and how to apply it in the most economical manner, is a matter of no little importance. The winter or early spring when the ground is frozen is for several reasons, a very favorable time for hauling out manure. Every farmer should endeavor to keep his help and teams as industriously employed as is reasonable during the whole year, and all jobs which can as well be done during winter, should be attended to at that time. Hauling out stable manure seems to be one of these jobs, which can not only be done as well, but much better, in winter, when the ground is frozen, if snow is not deep, as at any other time of the year.

Of course this implies that the barn cellar or other place where the manure is sufficiently protected to avoid much frost in the manure, and provided with doors that can be opened or closed at any time. If drawn out during winter it not only furnishes work for help and teams which otherwise might not be employed, but the ground being frozen solid, and the teams in good heart, they will often haul with ease loads of double the size they could after the frost is out of the ground in spring, and especially over land which, after the frost is out, would be so wet and soft as to be almost impassable.

We can not afford to handle manure more than is absolutely necessary, and when we draw it to the field we should put it where it is to stay, either by spreading it directly from the cart, or by putting it in small heaps to be spread before they are soaked by rain or frozen so they cannot be spread with ease. We cannot afford in ordinary farm practice, to pile manure in the field and then load it again. But leaving manure in small heaps on the fields during winter I consider one of the least convenient ways of managing it, and though it is often done by good farmers, yet it looks to me like a very shiftless practice. A much better way is to spread it from the cart. This is not the best but the easiest way of handling it. When spread in this way the soluble parts will be soaked by the rains evenly into the soil just where they are needed and not in spots, as they would be if left long in small heaps.

Many fear, that if manure is left spread on the surface for any length of time it will waste by evaporation, but I am satisfied, by a careful study of the scientific aspect of the case, as well as by my own observation, that there is no appreciable loss in this way by the exposure of unfermented manure, and that the only possible loss of any amount is by washing off from very hilly land, when the ground is frozen, and that this loss is seldom great.

Signing the Farm Away.

BY REV. W. R. COCHRANE.

Fine old farm, for a hundred years
Kept in the family name;
Cornfields rich with golden ears
Oft as the harvest came;
Crowded barn and crowded bin,
And still the loads kept coming in—
Rolling in for a hundred years;
And the fourth in the family line appears.

Orchard covered the slopes of the hill;
Cider—forty barrels, they say
Sure in season to come from the mill,
To be tasted round Thanksgiving Day!
And they drank as they worked, and they drank as they ate,
Winter and summer, early and late,
Counting it as a great mishap
To be found "without a barrel on tap,"

But, while the seasons crept along,
And passions into habits grew,
Their appetites became as strong
As ever a drunkard knew,
And they labored less, and they squandered more,
Chiefly for rum at the village store,
Till called by the sheriff, one bitter day,
To sign the homestead farm away.

The father, shattered and scarred with rum;
The mother, sick as a pale and thin,
Under the weight of her sorrows dumb,
In debt for the bed she was dying in;
Oh, I saw the wrecked household around her stand—
And the justice lifted her trembling hand,
Helping her, as in her pain she lay,
To sign the homestead farm away.

Ah, how she wept! And the flood of tears
Swept down her temples bare!
And the father, already bowed with years,
Bowed lower with despair!
Drink! Drink! It had ripened into woe
For them and all they loved below,
And forced them, poor and old and gray,
To sign the homestead farm away.

Oh, many scenes have I met in life,
And many a call to pray;
But the saddest of all was the drunkard's wife
Signing the farm away;
Home once richest in all the town,
Home, in that fatal cup poured down,
Worse than fire or flood's dismay—
Drunkard signing the farm away!

About 22,000 dogs were sheltered last year in the London Home for Lost Dogs.

The English Jockey Club has fortified itself with a legal member in the person of Sir H. Hawkins, Judge of the Supreme Court.

Lord Charles Toynne, uncle of the Marquis of Bath, was a priest and canon of Canterbury Cathedral. He resigned his preferment in 1852, and now, in his seventy-third year, has entered the Roman Catholic priesthood.

Dr. Heywood Smith, the physician who, at Mr. Stead's instance, examined Eliza Armstrong, has had to resign all his appointments, and the College of Physicians is understood to be considering what action it will take in regard to his "unprofessional" conduct.

At a sale of the effects of a late English member of Parliament, an old iron chest, which had remained in a garret beyond anybody's memory, was sold to a furniture dealer for $8.25. He found it full of plate and family papers, and offered it to the executors for $100. They refused, and brought suit for the return of the contents. The Judge decided for the executors, holding that they had never intended to sell the contents.

A STORY is told of a shrewd Scotchwoman who tried to wean her husband from the dram-shop by employing her brother to act the part of a ghost, and frighten John on his way home. "Who are you?" said the guidman, as the apparition rose before him from behind a bush, "I am Auld Nick," was the reply. "Come awa', man," said John, nothing daunted. "Gie's a shake o' your hand. I am married to a sister o' yours."

KIMBERLY ORANGE SOIREE.—The Orange Soiree came off on Friday last the 15th as advertised, and there was a good attendance. The tea was excellent, the program good and the musical part of the entertainment by Misses Wilson was grand. Very appropriate addresses were delivered by Rev. A. Wilson and Dr. Sproule, M. P., of Markdale. We feel indebted and thankful to those from Markdale who so cheerfuly and ably assisted. [One who was there.]

FIRE AT EDGE HILL.—On Thursday morning last, about two o'clock Mr. Robt. Moffat's house at Edge Hill, Glenelg was noticed to be on fire. The flames had made to much progress when discovered to give any hope of saving the house which was totaly distroyed along with most of the contents, as Mr. Moffat, and family had only time to get out with a few articles. This will be a serious loss as the house was a good frame one, and recently built.—[Grey Review.

KNAPP IS opening the eyes of business men as well as the citizens with cheap groceries, wines, liquors, &c. See his adv. in another column and then give him a fair trial.

THE other evening two loving couple might have been seen wending their way towards the parsonage; for what purpose we leave our readers to guess. When they reached the gate one of the ladies made an effort to escape. At this one of the young men broke out in a lementable voice, "I want to marry her, and she wants to marry me, but I can't get her to go in." And she didn't go in either. We hope the matter will end more successful next time, or else that they will talk in more subdued tones. We pity the young man, are glad for the young lady, and sorry for the minister, who for the time being at any rate lost his fee.—[Dundalk Herald.

MR. ROBT. SNELL, lot 5, con. 3, N. T. & S. R., Holland, died suddenly last Sunday. The deceased though a stout hearty man, upwards of 60 years of age, has been sorely afflicted with business troubles of late, and was also troubled with heart disease, to which his suddent death is attributed. About 10 a. m. on Sunday he went out to the stable to attend to the horse, and being longer out than usual his daughter went out after him about 11 o'clock and found him lying just behind the horse, where he had fallen while in the act of cleaning out the stable. As there were no suspicious circumstances attending his death an inquest was not considered necessary.—[Chatsworth News.

CLERICAL CHANGES.—Rev. Father Cassin removes this week to Mt. Forest to take the place of Father O'Donnell who goes to Galt, while Father Feeney of Arthur takes the Priceville and Glenelg parish. The removal of Father Cassin from this district will be much regretted, not only by his own people but by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, as he is possessed with rare social qualities and executive abilities, while his moral influence is felt for good wherever he goes. He is however making a good change for himself, and carries with him the best wishes of a large circle of acquaintances.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, delivered a very impressing sermon to the young people on Sabbath afternoon last, in the Presbyterian Church here.

Rev. Mr. Ayers, preached the memorial sermon of the late Mr. Down, in the Methodist Church in the evening.

Skating is the rage here now, we were favored with the presence of a select company of young people from Markdale a few evenings ago—come again friends.

Captain Campbell of Toronto, and W. F. Doll of Winnipeg, have been spending a few holidays in this locality.

Miss Francis Wright of New York is now at home visiting her parents in this village, Miss Winegate is at present the guest of Miss Armstrong in this place.

Another of our fair sex gone from our midst, being that of Miss Alice Bellamy, who was bound to Mr. Wm. Sharp, in the wholy band of matrimony on Wednesday last, at the residence of the brides father by the Rev. Mr. Ayer. Much happiness to you both, so say we all.

The Flesherton Division Sons of Temperence with at present a good deal of one hundred members in good standing, still grows and increases in numbers. Seven new members were added to the roll last Wednesday evening, among the members were Rev. Mr. Ayers, and several of promising men of this town.

X—erxes could walk full many a league.
Y—our health is your wealth, which your wisdom must keep;
Z—eal will help a good cause, and the good you will reap.

HEALTH.

Religion and Health.

Man has a religious, as much as he has an intellectual, nature. He may fail duly to develop either, or he may thoroughly pervert both. That man is healthiest who best looks after his body, mind and heart.

True religion—not a mere profession—is a great help to health, however bad may have been one's physical heredity or his early surroundings.

It teaches him to keep his appetites—great sources of disease when allowed the mastery—in due subjection. No truly religious man can live to eat, embrute himself with alcohol, or to be a debauchee. Such a man will get more real physical pleasure out of life than those in whom the lower nature has the mastery. Religion condemns and tends to repress all jealousy, envy, hatred and the malign passions, each of which when yielded to make severe draughts on the health.

It enjoins love to God and man as a fundamental duty, and fosters it as the central principle of the life. Such love not only arrests all malign tendencies, but diffuses through the system a calm, soothing, gladsome influence, signally conducive to highest health. Nothing can be superior in this respect to active beneficence.

It keeps ambition and the desire of wealth within proper bounds. It leads the man with capacity for the high places of power to accept them, that he may serve the people as a servant of God. If he has great business capacity, instead of shrivelling into a miser over hoarded thousands or millions, he conducts himself as being God's steward; and keeping the outflow of wealth proportioned to its inflow, he is uplifted, enlarged, and made every way a happier man, and thus a truly healthy one.

It ever makes life worth living. The religious an never lacks for an aim in life—and othing is more depressing ph ysically than a life without an aim. He knows that he is made for God and the eternal future, with the image of God within him, to be here more and more developed as the basis of unending growth.

Religion prevents unwholesome and often deadly depression in adversity. The religious man knows that discipline is essential to moral advancement, and that he is under the wise training of a loving Father. He is sustained and cheered by the wonderful assurance that all things shall work together for his good.

It leads him to look on death as the door to his eternal home, and thus he escapes that life-long ohill, through fear of it, from which so many suffer.

"Sweet peace she gives wherever she arrives;
She builds our virtue as she forms our lives;
Lays the rough paths of peevish nature even,
And opens to each breast the light of heaven."

No One Rule for All.

No two persons are alike physically. People differ in temperament, heredity, susceptibility to disease, and in recuperative power. There is also an acquired disposition to particular diseases from occupations and habits of life; and temporary susceptibilities from anxiety, grief, watching, and overwork, mental or physical. Bad hygienic habits also make a vast difference, as do bad hygienic surroundings.

There are, moreover, undefinable changes in the physical system from childhood to old age, that render the liabilities of the later period quite different from those of a previous one. Removal to a different climate also greatly changes the susceptibility. So much is this latter fact true that vaccination, good at home, may be powerless abroad.

Hence a medicine good for one person is not necessarily good for another. Here appears the value of a family physician, one who knows the family history of his patient and the latter's physical individuality.

We see, also, that the same hygienic methods are not equally adapted to all. One can sleep with his window open not only without harm, but with positive benefit. The depressed condition that characterizes sleep, the more noxious night air, and the liability to marked changes in the outside temperature, would render the habit perilous to many others.

So one must not blindly take a daily cold bath because others have tried it, and strongly recommended it. It might be death to one, though life to another. One needs to have regard to the condition of the heart, and the readiness to react from a chill to a glow. To some a semi-weekly warm bath is much better.

It is somewhat the same in the matter of exercise, which may help or may harm. One, if at all delicate, should carefully find out what is best, both in kind and degree.

It is equally so in the matter of food. While the vigorous, who largely live out doors, may eat almost anything within the limits of their appetites, others must learn the limits of their own digestive powers, and act accordingly. It is certain that these limits vary greatly.

Bacteria

The proportion of bacteria in a cubic meter of atmospheric air is, according to M. de Parville, 0.6 in sea air, one in the air of high mountains, sixty in the principal cabin of a ship at sea, two hundred on the top of the Pantheon, three hundred and sixty in the Rue de Rivoli, six thousand in the Paris sewers, thirty-six thousand in old Paris houses, forty thousand in the new hospital of the Hotel Dieu, and the seventy-nine thousand in the old hospital of the Pitie. In Ryder Street, St. James's, a cubic meter of air contains only two hundred and forty bacteria, whereas in the Rue de Rivoli the same quantity of air contains three hundred and sixty. M. de Parville says the superiority of London air, as compared with the air of Paris, is shown not only by its containing fewer bacteria, but also by the rate of mortality being smaller. The greater purity or lesser impurity of the air of London is accounted for by London being nearer than Paris to the sea, by its covering a greater extent of ground in proportion to the population, and by its houses being lower.

Pneumonia.

Pneumonia is inflammation of the lungs. When the inflammation is on the lining of the chest, it is pleurisy. The two may be combined. Pneumonia is a dangerous disease, and requires prompt action. It is preceded by a chill, from which it sometimes is difficult to restore the natural heat. This chill is followed by a high fever, in which the heart beats rapidly. If these symptoms appear, send for a homœopathic physician, the disease is treated more successfully by homœopathy than in any other way. Until he arrives, keep in bed between flannel sheets, apply hot rubber water-bags to the feet, and hot flaxseed poultices over the lungs where the pain is most severe. Replace these with others every two hours. A skillful nurse is a necessity; also a warm, yet well ventilated room, and a light diet, which for a few days should consist of well-made oatmeal gruel, and boiling "new" milk, with an infusion of Vichy, two tablespoonfuls to eight of milk, or a large cupful. Avoid cold drinks till the pain is gone and the natural temperature restored.

A Doctor of Divinity.

In Mississippi so many darkies have claimed exemption from road duty on the pretext of being ministers of the gospel, that some of the courts have required that all claiming exemption on that score shall produce certificates o ordination or appointment. At the last term of Madison County Circuit Court, Brother Dick Barnes was minus this all-important document and he sought the advice of a young friend who told him "he would fix it all right for him; to come back in about ten minutes and he would have a certificate for him." While the preacher was gone the young man stepped across the street to a drug store and got a "Marsden's pills" diploma and, placing it in an envelope, gave it to Brother Barnes, who was promptly on hand when the ten minutes had expired.

When court convened, and it was in order to offer excuses, etc., Brother Barnes approached the clerk's desk and threw down his certificate and said; 'Thar's my certify ter preach their wurd." The clerk passed the document up to the judge, who smiled and remarked:

"Uncle Dick, this is a doctor's certificate."

"Well, Jedge, hain't I er doctor ov divinity?

Terrible Tragedy.

Neighbors noticing the absence of persons around Dr. Martin White's residence in Battle Creek, Mich., broke into the house and found the entire family with their throats cut from ear to ear. Dr. White and wife were lying upon the floor, and the two children in bed. It is thought that the Doctor became insane and murdered his family. The rooms show evidence of a terrible struggle between the husband and wife. No other cause is known.

Dr. White is an Irishman, who has been a practising physician here for a number of years. He has been known to have spells of ungovernable temper, during which he was abusive to his wife and children, and of late he has been seen to act a little strangely. The children, a boy and a girl, were found on the second floor, on a bed. The father and mother were on the kitchen floor below. A butcher knife, axe, and razor, smeared with blood, lay near the bodies. White is supposed to have killed the children while Mrs. White was at church, and to have struck her with the axe on her return home, finishing the deed with the razor, as she had a gash on her head, and lay with her outdoor wraps and gloves on and had her hymn book in her hand.

A Lonely Island.

Lundy, a tiny island in the North Devon electoral district, has a grievance. In the winter, it is often cut off for weeks together from all intercourse with the outer world, and a petition has just been addressed to the "adjacent islands of Great Britain," which sets forth the peculiar disadvantages under which this isolated bit of territory lies. It states that Lundy forms a portion, however insignificant, of her gracious majesty's dominions, and is inhabited by 100 human beings, who are unsurpassed for loyalty. Electorally, Lundy belongs to the North Devon district, but its inhabitants are utterly unable to record their votes, as there is no polling place upon the island, and no regular postal communication between it and the mainland. "At the present time," adds this melancholy protest, "we have nearly 30 qualified electors residing here, not one of whom will be able to vote. Strange as it may seem, we have been for upwards of three weeks without letters or papers, and entirely cut off from the outer world. Although the great political contest is raging so near us, we are in ignorance of all political news. Cannot something be done to lighten our darkness?"

Musical Sands in California.

An examination of the musical sands of Kauai, Cal., which have excited so much interest on the part of geologists and others, shows that they possess a peculiar microscopical structure. The grains are found to be chiefly composed of small portions of coral and apparently calcareous sponges; they are all more or less perforated with small holes, in some instances forming tubes, but mostly terminating in blind cavities, which are frequently enlarged in the interior of the grains, communicating with the surface by a small opening. There were also in the sand small black particles, formed principally of crystals of augite, nepheline, and magnetic oxide of iron, embedded in a glassy matrix. The structure of these grains explains, it is thought, why sound is emitted when they are set in motion; that is, the friction against each other causes vibrations in their substance, and consequently in the sides of the cavities they contain—and these vibrations being communicated to the air in the cavities, under the most favorable conditions for producing sound, the result is the loud noise occasioned when any large mass of sand is set in motion, there being, in fact, millions upon millions of resonant cavities, each giving forth sound.

An exchange recommends boiling coffee in a salt sack to settle it. Fogg remarked, when he read this: "Ah! the secret is now out. Our boarding mistress must follow this recipe. At all events, her coffee is never fresh."

THE FARM.

Animal Ailments.

Winter is an exacting season upon live stock, not necessarily by any means, but because of the neglect of their owners. Cold weakens the vitality of an animal very much, and lays a foundation for disease. When spring comes the effects of poor feeding are seen in the gaunt frames, too weak to rise up; the hide-bound skin; the cough, and the deadly black leg. We might mention the prevalent "horn all" and "tail ill," both serious disorders, but very wrongly named, as they are merely the effects of general debility, resulting from poor feeding and want of care.

Horn ail, so-called, consists of a feverish condition of the system and a low vitality, accompanied by irregular circulation, which produces alternate heat and chill of the extremities. The digestive organs are out of order, and the brain, the centre of the nervous system, suffers greatly. The head is in a condition of congestion at one time, and in a state of anæmia at another. The horns are part of the skull, and the hollow cores are lined with a sensative vascular membrane, connected with the frontal sinuses. When the brain is congested, the whole head is hot, the eyes weep, the nose is dry, and of course the horns appear hot to the touch, being so closely connected with the skull. But the disease is not in the horns, or in the head, it is in the stomach, as any person can realize whose stomach is out of order, and who has a "sick headache" from a bilious condition of the system. The remedy is, then, not to pour turpentine into the ears, or upon the head, and set it on fire, or bore through the horns into the very sensitive cores, but to relieve the stomach and liver, by a liberal dose of physic, a quart of raw linseed oil, or twenty-four ounces of Epsom salts, and follow it with some comforting messes of warm bran mash.

"Tail Ill" is another reflex result of a poor condition of the animal, in which this extremity suffers. The above remarks apply to this case too, and an excellent remedy is prevention by good care and generous feeding.

Black Leg—By and by, when winter is nearly over and the young cattle begin to feed on the dead grass of the first bare spots, or the first green herbage in wet, warm places, some will be found limping about, lame in the shoulder or the hip today, and to morrow dead in the field or yard. If one passes the hand over the skin of the sick animal, the lame quarter will be found puffed up and a crackling, rustling sound will be heard. After death these spots will be black and bloody, as if the flesh had been bruised to a jelly. The liver is soft and rotten, and the spleen is black and like clotted blood. This is anthrax fever, the bloody murrain, or black quarter, which is the most deadly disease of cattle. There is no time for any remedy; prevention is the only safeguard, and just now is the time for this. Feed the young animals well. Do not turn them into the fields to pick up rubbish. Give them a regular dose of a tablespoon of a mixture of one pint of molasses, four ounces of sulphur, and two ounces of cream of tartar every morning, as soon as the weather begins to get warm, and give them as much salt as they will take voluntarily from this time forward.

Timely Suggestions.

A Down merino cross, all things considered, is the ideal lamb for winter feeding. The merino mother gives short legs, large body, fine wool and a large quantity, and a hardy constitution. The Down sire gives quick growth, a large proportion of the lean meat, length of wool, and a black face and legs. Of the Downs as sires, we prefer the Shropshires and Hampshires as of very nearly equal value; next the Southdowns, Oxfords, etc. The reason of our preference is in the fact that the Shropshire has the smallest head, which he imparts, and he also gives the blackest face and legs to the half-bred lamb, thus reducing the loss of ewes in lambing and giving the greatest value to the offspring.

Warning is given by the People and Patriot against overfeeding horses which is declared to be even more common than in the case of hogs: With food before it all the time it will keep picking it over and grow poor, with its box always partly filled. It is an excellent plan to find how much horses really require, and then feed them just so much and no more. Do not be alarmed if everything is eaten clean in the morning. That is the way it should be, yet always taking care to give enough.

A physician tells the Philadelphia Reporter how he lightens the way of dark nights by a common tubular lantern with reflector and a spring for attachment: In place of putting it on the dash, I slip the spring over the middle of the breast-collar, directly in front of the horse. Every part of the road in front of me is plainly seen, so I can drive with as much confidence as in broad daylight. The conditions necessary for success are: A level-headed horse, with fair breadth of chest, and a shoulder-strap attached to the check-hook, to prevent the lantern sagging down between the horse's legs when for any reason the traces slack. It would be well to have a short strap sewed to the inside of the breast collar to slip the spring through, so as to prevent any lateral motion.

Pea meal is a favorite dairy food in Canada. It is claimed that the largest quantity of butter can be made by using it with other foods.

It is worse than useless to try to make winter butter-making pay unless the cows are well sheltered. Besides good food, they should have warm water to drink for good results.

Taken as a whole, the Smith family is pretty reputable. Not a member of it is now in Parliament this year.

Since the Stead-Armstrong business it has been a common practice for girls and women in England to accuse doctors attending them of impropriety. In some instances the jury have promptly acquitted, but a Dr. Bradly was sent to prison. On Dec. 11 this gentleman was entertained at dinner and presented with an address and 400 guineas by the members of the profession, as a mark of their esteem and belief in his innocence. Sir William Jenner, physician to the Queen, was one of the first promoters of the fund, and the address was signed by him and the leading medical men throughout the country.

"Man's work's from sun to sun;
Woman's work is never done."

Work is a necessity to all; but, upon how many, women especially, does it fall with the burden of the "last straw," and this, because their peculiarly delicate constitutions are so liable to functional derangement. We cannot lessen your toil, ladies, but we can make it easier for you, by making you stronger and better able to do it. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will relieve you of nervous and other weaknesses, and all the many ills peculiar to your sex.

Thou who wouldst give, give quickly. In the grave thy loved one can receive no kindness.

Delicate diseases, as nervous debility and premature weakness, however induced, radically cured. Send ten cents in stamps for treatise. World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

The London Lancet says that children who are allowed to go barefooted enjoy almost perfect immunity from the danger of 'cold" by accidental chilling of the feet, and they are altogether healthier and happier than those who, in obedience to the usages of social life, wear shoes and stockings.

It ought to be explained that the weary traveler who fainted and fell by the wayside in all probability had vertigo.

Imperial Cough Drops will give Positive and Instant Relief to those suffering from Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc., and are invaluable to orators and vocalists. For sale by druggists and confectioners. R. R. & T. WATSON, Manufacturers, Toronto.

A Connecticut deacon received a slight injury to one of his eyes, which gave the organ a peculiar, fixed expression. Hence, when he asked the village drug clerk for soda water, that experienced person believed he recognized the mute request for superior old pale which prevails in many temperance villages. He acted on this belief. The deacon was really surprised, and flushed slightly as he drained the glass, but he has become a regular customer for "soda," and the salary of the clerk has been raised.

The Cure of Drunkenness

Is a task with which the regular practitioner has been unable to cope. Nine-tenths of mankind look upon drunkenness as a social vice, which a man may overcome by force of will. Drunkenness is a bad habit we all admit, in the moderate drinker. In the confirmed drunkard it becomes disease of the nervous system. The medical treatment of this disease consists in the employment of remedies that act directly upon those portions of the nervous system which, when diseased, cause lunacy, dementia, and the drinking habit. Remedies must be employed that will cure the appetite for strong drink, steady the trembling hand, revive the lagging spirit, balance the mind, etc. The nervous system of the dram drinker being all unstrung or shattered, must be given a nutriment that will take the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevent the physical and moral prostration that often follows a sudden breaking off from the use of alcoholic drinks. Those of our readers who are interested in this subject, should send their address for Lubon's Treatise, in book form, on drunkenness, opium, morphine and kindred habits, which will be mailed free to any address, when stamp is inclosed for postage. Address, M. V. Lubon, 47 Wellington street east, Toronto, Ont.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE CITY OF THE SILENT—ATTACKED BY WOLVES.

...ous a wild ride, with the great white ...n and the countless stars of heaven for ... witnesses.

The desert comes up on three sides to the ... walls of Cairo, and it is the desert ... that blows in the streets. No sooner, ...fore, were the fugitives clear of the ... than they entered upon this gre t waste ...boundless and eternal desolation, though ... had another city yet to ride through ...re they were free of all that had been ... a city tripling in population the one ...three hundred thousand souls which they ...just quitted, the poetically Arab named ... of the Silent.

Frank Donelly had hardly been prepared ...thrading the still and sombre avenues of ...dead, but there was no help for it since ...ay directly in their path, and the fact of ... being pursued obliged them to take all ...gs as they came.

Galloping alongside of Nellie he told her ... and her reply was:

..."We have less to fear from the dead than ...the living. I have already observed ...ne are coming to and am prepared to ...ve it."

For all that she spoke so bravely her face ...almost as white as her snowy shoulders ...as white no face save that of the ...could have been); and as Pat Monag... came tearing along behind, keenly en...ing the excitement that caused his mas... so much uneasiness, he more than once ...tered: "She's a rale beauty an' no ...kaa."

Another minute and they were amongst ...streets of the departed. Thousands and ...sands of Mussulman's headstones were ...nd and about them, looking like squat, ...ked figures with battered head-dresses, ...the turban of the defunct Moslem is al... placed on the round knob that rises ...the shoulders, so to speak, of his tomb... and there reposes until wind, birds ...time, or all three united, have made ...y with it, and not unfrequently the poor ...this parsimonious man whose headgear ...become shabby takes a walk out ...gst the tombs in the hope that he may ...a better one in exchange for his own.

...mongst these tens of thousands of lesser ...ments, some of which were painted in ...t colors, and nearly covered with ...characters, rose here and there ...omer tombs, with high walls, and ...and minarets, that caused them to ...like stunted mosques, whilst above ...of these waved the sombre fronds of ..., some few of them being almost in... in a grove of such.

...e nature of the ground required wary ..., for there were holes here and there, ...sometimes deep rifts, whilst not infre...tly stones and even fragments of mas... strewed the way, for the Moslem never ...ects or repairs what has once fallen ..., it being contrary to his creed.

...e possibility of a fall occurring to Nel... was almost an agony to contemplate, so ...tiful did she look in her low cut even... dress, with its mere inch wide band for ...es.

...h, if she were to come crashing to the ...nd and one of those exquisite azure... arms were to be broken, one of those ...p and snowy shoulders to be torn open. ...t while the young officer contemplated ...horror the mere possibility of a casual... happening, even to the extent of almost ...ting the damage of the pursuit, a per... was at hand, for which both should have ...prepared, though they were not.

...y they should have been prepared ...by reason of the truly infernal chorus of ...ings, now near, now far, and then near ..., which had for some minutes saluted ...ears, and which Frank had set down ...hungry jackals eying grace over some ...ry supper that they had exhumed from ...re than usually shallow grave.

...e had not reflected, or perhaps he did ...not know, that wherever jackals gather ...force "gaffer wolf" is not for off, though ...ing out for something a little more sa..., for he, as a rule, does not care to eat ...game so high.

...it happened that whilst passing one ...the palm-sheltered tombs, of which I ...before spoken, a huge, gaunt wolf, fol...ed by either his spouse or his dam, came ...ging out of the gloom and at once ...upon Nellie, whilst its female com... made for the young officer.

...was then that Frank Donelly gave vent ...a wild scream of terror, and it was not ...from him by his own peril, but rath... occasioned by that of the lovely girl, who ...at moment was about three lengths in ...ce of him.

...n, however, the jaws relaxed and fell, ...the greedy eyes gave one agonized ...before glazing in death.

"My darling, I trust the brute's spring ...not hurt you?; I can see that its teeth ...not."

...in tremulous tones from Frank, to ...Nellie made gallant reply:

"Oh, I'm all right; but you? Why, you never even thought of yourself, Frank."

"Pat did though. I'm much obliged to you, Pat. That was fine stocke."

"Aye, your honor, it would be a lie to contradict ye. Sure an' I stuck my lance, not being used like to the haythen, for the cobbler should stick to his last and the dragoon to his sabre. But sure and is your honor hurt?"

"No; he didn't get much beyond the leather of my boot, thanks to you. The spear points of those rascals who are pressing after us would sink deeper. I'll be bound; wherefore, I don't care to give them the chance. Now, Nellie."

The fair girl took this as a signal to spur on again, and did so at once.

She was surprised at the small degree of terror that she felt. She even laughed as it occurred to her how she had on more than one occasion screamed at the sight of a rat or a toad, but the fact is that a wealthy girl has at all times more courage than she is sensible of, only it lies latent.

The rencontre with the wolves had made the horses only too anxious to place a greater distance between themselves and the dismal howlings that still surrounded them on all sides, so that no sooner were they given the rein than they almost flew down and through the broad avenues of the City of the Silent, until at last even the tombs of the murdered Mamelukes, with their windows of stained glass, were left behind, and naught but the open desert lay in front, looking in the moonlight like a still, gray, waveless lake, of the most vast dimensions, and with patches of moss and an occasional sagegreen shrub floating upon its surface.

But, oh, the pure, exhilarating air with which this was accompanied, an air full of as strange and mysterious sweetness, so that the very horses dilated their quivering nostrils to catch it, uttering joyful whinnies the while, and Nellie exclaimed in cheerful tones to her companion: "No wonder the Bedouin loves his wandering life upon the plains better than being cooped up in the cities. I feel as though I had been drinking champagne."

"All the better, darling. It gives me joy to hear you say so. You are of the right mettle for a soldier's wife. I declare, I didn't think you had it in you."

"We never know what qualities we possess, Frank, until time and opportunity bring them to light. I'm perfectly astonished that I'm not frightened out of my very wits. Hark, I hear music in the distance. What can it be?"

"I hear it, too, but I'm sure I cannot even guess what it is. It seems to be made up of timbrels, trumpets and drums. Can you make out anything, Pat Monaghan?"

"Only that flock ov white sheep over there, yer honor. Bedad, it's a big crowd of them an' it must be they that's making all the music somehow."

Frank Donelly glanced in the direction of Pat's outstretched arm, and he immediately ejaculated with a laugh.

"Well, they do look in the distance like sheep, certainly, but I think 'tis a regiment of white uniformed Egyptian soldiers marching towards Cairo, and that it their band that we hear."

"Faith, yer honor, then I hope they'll put that Toulba Pasha in Queen Street for wanting to take our swords and pistols away, bad cess to him."

"I'm afraid that its far more likely to be a mutinous than a loyal regiment, Pat, but, by Jove, here comes those with whom we are more immediately concerned. They are gaining on us, too, I do believe. What think you?"

"Sure, yer honor, I don't fancy that they are. It's only the distance that's desaving across the sands. But anyhow it's a fair course and no favor, and if we let them overtake us be jabers we will deserve all they'll give us."

"Right you are, Pat, rejoined his master cheerfully, and away they stretched again across the level plain, almost as noiselessly as though they had been spectres, for there was no thud of the steel shod hoofs upon the desert sand, and they were too excited any longer to converse.

Nellie Trezarr would ever and anon look back over one of her snowy shoulders to see for herself whether their pursuers seemed to gain upon them, whenever she imagined that such was the case her cheeks would blanch still paler and she would bite her cherry ripe lips with her little pearly teeth in the attempt to master all show of emotion. But such actions revealed rather than concealed it, so that her lover would address to her a few words to cheer her up and restore her waning confidence in their ultimate escape, and thus still on and on they sped, while even the City of the Silent lay many a mile in their rear.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE DESERT RACE—A DEADLIER FOE THAN MAN.

On, still on, for liberty and perhaps for dear life as well.

The perseverance with which the Egyptian cavalry followed after them convinced Captain Donelly that a high reward had been offered for the recovery of Nellie, either by her parents or by the war minister, or perhaps unknown to either by both.

And it was the brave but reckless Pat Monaghan who had put these sleuth hounds upon the right scent.

That was a fact beyond question, but Frank never upbraided his humble but faithful follower for the blunder that he had made, for he knew that it was a mere blunder at the most.

As for Pat himself, he enjoyed the excitement of the headlong chase still, never troubling to reflect how it would end, but making up his mind that somehow or other they would get away from their pursuers.

His master felt by no means as sure of this, for he was painfully conscious that two of their horses were too large and heavy for a prolonged desert flight, plunging at each stride too deeply in the sand that the little bodied, small hoofed and evidently unshod Arabians of their pursuers just skimmed and that was all.

True, the number of their pursuers had diminished to nine, but nine is long odds against two, especially when armed with lance against sword, and though Pat had a lance also, he was unskilled in its use, which isn't learned properly in a day, no, nor even in a month, whilst, as to their pistols, a man might make sure of the ace of spades by day who would miss an elephant by moonlight, in every way so deceptive is it, besides which the captain felt that he would be afraid to use his revolver for fear of drawing a return fire upon themselves and of Nellie falling the victim.

As they still sped across the gray, unruffled sea of sand Frank Donelly's heart grew heavy within him, and every time he glanced back (and these rearward glances grew more frequent every quarter of an hour), the twinkling spear points, the red tarbouches, the dusky, sinister faces, the white uniforms and tossing heads of the Egyptian cavalry seemed to have approached nearer and nearer, whilst at last even the over sanguine Pat Monaghan betook himself to the same way of thinking, and muttered to himself half aloud:

"Be Saint Pathrick, an' if it wasn't for the young leddy, wouldn't the captain an' mesilf jest enjoy it, and that's all. We'd turn round and ax 'em boldly what they wanted, and if we didn't like their answer we'd give 'em what the drum boys give the drums, a thundering good bating."

But whilst the light-hearted Irishman was reflecting in this manner another foe was gathering his forces in front of the fugitives, at whose advance, had it been yet visible, even his gallant heart might have quaked with fear.

"Oh, how hot and stifling the air has suddenly become," gasped Nellie.

"I myself notice a change,' rejoined Frank. "The wind has altogether dropped."

"And yet hark to it rearing in the distance. What can it mean, I wonder?"

"I don't know, Nell. I'm unaccustomed to these regions. It can't hurt us, anyway."

The loving girl made no answer at the time, though truth to tell her lover's remark did not at all tend to reassure her.

In silence she more fearfully regarded that mysterious something which she half saw and half felt was before them than the more certain peril that was fast coming up with them from behind.

She noticed the entire heavens rapidly reddening, as with a dull, lurid and yet faint sunset glow, whilst in the far distance, where the desert horizon had hitherto been sharply defined against the until now dark indigo blue of the sky, she beheld what appeared like a brick colored fog, advancing silently across the apparently boundless plain.

A few minutes more and she knew that she was not mistaken, but by that time the fog more nearly resembled onrolling clouds of dense smoke, with here and there the red flame of cannon flashing through.

A roar also as of many cannon, yet perhaps more like the continuous rumble of thunder amongst mountains, came from its rear, and so terrified now did Nellie become that she found it impossible to help gasping out:

"Oh, God! something terrible is about to happen. I feel sure that there is death to us all in yonder cloud. Death from which there is no escape."

Frank Donelly, impressed by those fearsome words and the fervor with which they were uttered, for the first time bestowed his real attention on what, hitherto deeming to be an imaginary peril, he had taken little notice of.

Even then, blind, unthinking soldier that he was, the sight might not have much impressed him had not Pat Monaghan suddenly exclaimed:

"Bedad, an' if they hasn't left us in pace afther all, an' just too whin, 'pon my sowl, I thought they was getting the best av it, the poor, miserable, mane-spirited naygurs. Och, mother o' Moses, an' it's the baste that wants to be afther thim, bad cess to him, an' I wonders what's come over him now, at all at all, that's been behaving so dacently all along."

Well might he wonder, for his Arab steed was exhibiting every symptom of equine alarm—throwing its ears back, rolling its eyes back, snorting, backing and also betraying a strong disposition to buck.

But whilst Pat was entirely engrossed by the strange conduct of his horse, Captain Donelly compared its actions with the sudden and headlong retreat of the Egyptian cavalry Cairoward, and with the swift advance from the boundless desert of that dun-colored cloud with the seeming flashes of red artillery flame gleaming through, and there immediately occurred to him a memory of something that he had read in books when a boy by the cheerful fireside at home, and the recollections blanched every vestige of color from his cheeks in the twinkling of an eye.

"Nellie," said he curtly, "we must change our course. We must ride this way."

As he spoke he seized hold of her bridle and turned her horse's head half round, at the same time pointing toward the neighboring mountains.

He knew that could they but gain their lower slopes before the fearful sirocco, still many miles away, could sweep down upon them and overwhelm them with its columns and its clouds of hot, burning sand, they would be safe. He really thought that they would be able to do it at the time.

Away they went, therefore, at right angles to their former course, and Pat's horse was now docile enough, though evidently very far still from being at its ease, as a frequent plaintive whinny and now and then a kind of hoarse shrieking snort sufficiently testified to its rider.

As for Pat himself, he was in a complete state of bewilderment as to what it all meant and as to what had caused his master to turn so white all of a sudden, but unquestioning obedience is the first lesson in the British army, and Pat followed on silently, as in duty bound.

As to the lovely girl, she was silent for another reason, namely, because she was afraid to ask the nature of the new danger that threatened. True, she already guessed it, but she did not wish her suspicions to be confirmed, for she felt that the more hope that she'd entertain the better.

But, oh, how oppressive the heat had become, for another kind of breeze had by now sprung up, a breeze so hot, and dry, and withering in its nature that it seemed to obstruct the very breathing, so that oppressed thereby Nellie's fair and expanded chest heaved like that of an exhausted runner.

"My darling, for God's sake bear up. The mountains are very near."

"Yes, but I can no longer see them, Frank. We seem to me to be sailing through the clouds instead of traversing the earth. Oh, it is terrible!"

Sailing through clouds? Alas, when he looked up again from that beautiful and glowing face the same sensation struck him.

The storm was sweeping down upon them in crescentic form, and one horn thereof had already concealed the hills with its muddy mist.

Another minute and it seemed as though sand, and sky, and air glowed with the light of a conflagration, whilst assuredly the heat of one was about and around them, and the roaring noise of one pounding in their ears as they still tore onwards.

"Bedad, an' is it the world that's tuk fire at last, loike as the praists tell ov? Holy Saint Pathrick, an' if it is we'd better be stopping an' offering up a prayer, seeing as we can't hope to gallop out ov it, than be tearing along at this rate," muttered Pat Monaghan at this juncture.

"It's the sirocco, the hot wind of the desert; so we'd better pray and ride as well, for while there's life there's hope," rejoined his master.

Ride and pray they did, for never was human peril greater than theirs. Already was the sand hissing past them, entering in at their eyes and ears and stinging Nellie's glossy semi-nudeness till it fairly quivered with the smarting.

But this was only the light-armed skirmisher in advance of the main host, which they could now see rolling upon them like a solid wall that reached unto the very heavens, but inclining inward, as though on the point of toppling over.

"Lord have mercy on our sowls," poor Pat could be heard vociferating again and again, and then all at once it seemed as though the Almighty had answered his prayer through the little, parted, cherry-hued lips of Nellie Trezarr as she gasped forth, "Trees! trees! We are saved!"

Was it instinct that told her this?

Assuredly reason could hardly had done so, for of that was she almost bereft.

Be it as it may, however, she was right, for at the moment when it seemed that nothing could save them, they passed with the speed of a change of scene on a well ordered stage out of what was called the shadow of death into a region of seeming enchantment, and the black wall of sand which had appeared to reach unto the very heavens, and whose thickness and density none could guess, rushed past them on either side with a roar and a wail and a strange kind of rattle which it is impossible to describe.

But the three fugitives watched its course from beneath trees laden with luscious fruit, and not a particle of the burning sand came nigh them.

Intelligence of Dogs.

At the meeting of the British Association at Aberdeen, says an article credited to "Exchange," in the Brooklyn Eagle, Sir John Lubbock read a paper on the intelligence of the dog. Sir John remarked that it was surprising how little we know about the true nature of animals. This, he thought, arose very much from the fact that hitherto we have tried to teach animals, instead of to learn from them; to make, for instance, the dog understand us, rather than to understand the dog. He suggested that some such system as that adopted with deaf mutes, and especially by Dr. Howe in the case of Laura Bridgman, might be tried with advantage. For this purpose he had selected a black poodle, Van, and then presented pieces of cardboard ten inches long by three feet wide, on which he printed words such as "food," "water," "tea," and no one who had seen Van look down a row of cards and pick out the one he wanted could doubt that he was able to distinguish the different words, and quite understand that a card was equivalent to a request. The cards were certainly not recognized by scent, because he used a number of each. He suggested that some one with sufficient leisure might carry this much further, and the attempt would be well worth making. Prof. Flower mentioned that he had seen within the last few days a dog which knew the return of Sunday. Nothing could induce the dog to go out with him, though on other days when he took his stick and hat he showed great anxiety to go with him. Prof. Flower attached great importance to kindness in the teaching of animals. Miss Katherine Wray gave an interesting account of how, in three weeks, by means of a bone attached to the door bell, she had taught the dog to ring the bell. Mr. C. C. Walker mentioned that he knew a family which had taught its dog to howl at the late opposition and show great interest at the mention of the late government. Mrs. Stokes thought that some minds seemed to have a greater power of communication with animals than others, and she mentioned an English professor who seemed to have the power of calling birds from the sky.

A Sixteenth Century Song.

FROM THE GERMAN, BY J. A. KNOWLES.

Dame Nightingale thyself prepare,
It is high time, the day breaks fair;
Thou a messenger of love shalt be
To her who dearest is to me.

She in her garden waits for thee,
In sorrow and anxiety;
The burning sobs her breast m heave
Till with your message you relieve.

Thee up, away! delay not long,
Away, with fine and joyous song
And when her heart from me you greet
Tell her that soon again we'll meet.

A thousand times she'll thee regale
With welcoming words, Dame Nightingale,
And at that hour will glow the more
Her heart with love-dart wounded sore.

The shaft of Venus struck her heart,
Then use you charm away the smart;
Forbid dejection; do not fail,
So haste away! Dame Nightingale.

Clerk (who has been vainly trying to employ his time, to employer)—Shall I answer this letter now, sir?" Employer—"Certainly not: if you do they will think we are doing no business. Wait four weeks."

A Young Indian's Romantic History.

A tall young man with a complexion of the rich color of the ripe chestnut and with limbs as cleanly cut as those of Michael Angelo's statue of David, called upon President Cleveland the other day and asked the appointment of a cadetship at West Point. It was young Hole-in-the Day, the son of the noted Chippewa chief, and now the king of all the Chippewas. I met him one morning, says the Washington correspondent of a Western paper. He is about 18 years old, is over six feet tall, and has an eye like that of a young eagle. A romance clusters around him, and it was at Washington where his father, the noted Chippewa king met the woman who became his mother. It was in 1867 that old Hole-in-the-Day came here on business with the President. He was made much of by the newspapers, feted by society, and at the National Hotel, where he was stopping, he was spoken of as the rich Indian King, who owned the greater part of the lands of the Northwest. At this hotel there was a pretty Irish chambermaid who did up the old chief's room. The two met. They looked, and from their eyes sprang love. Chief Hole-in-the-Day, who had met the belles of Washington, passed them by, and chose the chambermaid. He proposed. She accepted. They were married, and she went back to Minnesota an Indian queen. From the marriage sprang this boy, who has now inherited his father's position. The old King begot the jealousy of some of the Indian tribes by this union with a white wife, and they suspected him of treacherously giving away his lands. They assassinated him. Mrs. Hole-in-the-Day still lives. Her boy has the true military bearing about him, and he looks and walks like the king that he is. He dresses in American clothes, and talks pure Anglo-Saxon.

A Sailor's Duty.

Of course there are times when a sailor's duties will be rough, rude, and stormy, like the raging elements around him. During the stress of a gale, and while a ship is being navigated through difficult and narrow channels, a sailor's first and all-absorbing duty is to watch the hand and listen to the voice of the officer in command, and unhesitatingly obey. Work—hard, coarse, difficult, dangerous work—becomes then the order of the day. But even in darkness and in storm, amidst the fury of the gale and the wild sweep of the threatening waves, amidst thunders and lightnings, terrors from the sky and terrors from the deep, it is wonderful how a serene, devout, intelligent, earnest mind, previously disciplined by its studies and reflections, may take in a deep imbibing of beauty and consolation. It mentally sees a latitude of calm above the circle of the storm, and inwardly hears amidst the deafening clamours of excited nature the sweet whisper, "It is I; be not afraid!" There is no reason in the nature of things why even the most illiterate of sailors should not, by and by, and after much training, attain to this spiritual susceptibility, this capacity to take in grand ideas and holy consolations even in the midst of life's sternest trials and darkest terrors.

Hampton Court and General Wolsey.

It has been suggested that it was in a vault of this palace that the incident occurred which opened Henry's eyes to the wealth acquired by his favorite cardinal. As the story goes, the king's fool was paying a visit to the cardinal's fool, and the jocose couple went down in to the wine vaults. For fun, one of them stuck a dagger or some other pointed instrument into the top of a cask, and to his surprise, touched something that chinked like metal. The meddlesome pair upon this set to work, and pushed off the head of the cask, discovering that it was full of gold pieces. Other casks by their sounds, gave indications that they held wine, and not gold. The King's fool stored up this secret, and one day, when Henry VIII. was boasting about his wine, the fool said, satirically, "You have not such wine, sire, as my Lord Cardinal, for he has casks in his cellar worth a thousand broad pieces each," and then he told what he had detected. Whether this be true or not, it is certain that Wolsey was so far awake to the fact that he was so suspected by the monarch as to deem it prudent to present him with Hampton Court.

Model Mothers.

Models are of the first importance in moulding the nature of a child; and if we would have fine characters, we must necessarily present before them fine models. Now the model most constantly before every child's eye is the mother. "One good mother," said George Herbert, "is worth a hundred schoolmasters. In the home she is loadstone to all hearts, and loadstar to all eyes." Imitation of her is constant—imitation which Bacon likens to a "globe of precepts." It is instruction. It is teaching without words, often exemplifying more than tongue can teach. In the face of bad example the best precepts are of but little avail. The example is followed, not the precepts. Indeed, precept at variance with practice is worse than useless, inasmuch as it only serves to teach the most cowardly of vices—hypocrisy. Even children are judges of hypocrisy, and the lessons of the parent who says one thing and does the opposite are quickly seen through. The teaching of the friar was not worth much who preached the virtue of honesty with a stolen goose in his sleeve.

Ill Temper

Is more rapidly improved by relief from physical suffering than in any other way. Step on your friend's corn, and the impulse to strike is strongest. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, by quickly and painlessly removing them, insures good nature. Fifty imitations prove its value. Beware of substitutes. Putnam's," sure, safe, painless.

"No," said the landlady, fixing her eyes with a steely gaze upon the new boarder at the foot of the table, "no, it is not what I eat, but what somebody else eats that distresses me."

NON-PARTIZAN PAPERS.

The Editor of the Flesherton Advance holds the opinion that all newspapers—little and big—should belong to one or the other of the two great political parties of the day, and speaks accordingly through his paper of last week.

We find, however, on reviewing the newspaper world, that those taking an independent stand are growing more powerful both in number and influence year by year, and the question would naturally arise, why is this class of newspapers making such progress? The answer comes with force, and even our extreme politicians admit that the leading political journals cannot be relied on. Their leading articles and reports of a political or national character are so biased that it is utterly unsafe to rely on such, and thus it runs, even into the country party papers; it is therefore, not at all surprising that the intelligent public should look for a reliable source from which to procure information regarding the great questions of the day. The respect and confidence once placed in the leading political papers, has been so abused that a gradual—but none the less certain—change has been going on, and now we find those who desire "the truth, the whole truth &c," invariably look for an independent paper in order to procure such information. It is therefore not to be wondered that this class of newspapers are gaining such power and taking the front as leaders of public opinion.

As to local papers dabbling in politics, we are still strongly of the opinion that their sphere is not in that direction, and that the less politics is to be seen in a country paper the better; even where there are two papers published in a place, and each takes a side. A local paper is a local paper; and no city publication can take its place, neither can the country paper take the place of the city, therefore the great aim should be to make each issue so interesting with the doings of the locality that politics will be completely crowded out.

LAMP LIGHT.

There has been a number of inventions and patents brought before the public during the past year, but they all appear to sink into insignificence when compared with the "Harvey Safety Lamp." Mr. Harvey is a former resident of Meaford, Grey Co., and has now the lamp manufacturing business almost to himself, and is doing an immense trade through Canada. His show room is No. 9, Adelaide St. West, Toronto. We had the pleasure of visiting his premises last week and found large quantities of this fine lamp in various stages of completion. This lamp took first prize and silver medal at Toronto's Industrial Exhibition, 1885. Some of the advantages over the old lamps are, they never blacken the lamp glass, neither does the chimney break with heat. They give more than three times the light of an ordinary lamp. They are non-explosive. They are just the thing for Churches, Halls and Public Buildings, and for a domestic light they are by far the best lamp in the market.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—I want to say, in reply to Frank Foster's notice, that I don't want him to mention my name as having anything to do with him or Watson concerning the agreement with Wm. H. Foster, as I am not a party to the papers, but I am witness to the bargain, and will swear he got value for said papers, when called to do so; and I want him (Frank) to take notice of this and govern himself accordingly.

ROLLER RINK OPENING.

Markdale roller rink is located in a very central position, being a few yds. north of the Markdale House. The size is 80 x 40 feet with gallary at one end. Everything was in good shape for the opening, well lit up, and considerable bunting, and motto's of welcome were conspicuous, all of which added much to the appearance of the rink. The brass band discoursed many excellent selections during the evening, which was highly appreciated. A large number were present, and many from a distance; two good sleigh loads drove all the way from Owen Sound while some came by train. Prof. Simpson gave a grand exhibition of fancy skating keeping time to music by the band; this was very much enjoyed by the hundreds of spectators. Notwithstanding the fact that this was the first opportunity in this place for a trial on roller skates, there must have been over 150 local celebreties trying their hand, or rather their feet. Japanese Tomy, the great boneless wonder, gave a free exhibition for 20 minutes on the rink, and his feats were well appreciated by the audience. There was heaps of fun, and all appeared to thoroughly enjoy themselves. The management was first class, and could not be otherwise in such able hands as Marsh, Jackman & Porter.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

We have been wondering for some time what to say that would be interesting to the general public, as news seem to be scarce at present; but we must say that we regret to learn that the Allison Hotel here is changing hands. Mr. Joseph Allison, who for some years past, has been the occupant, and has managed it exceedingly well, and we do not boast when we say that it has been one of the best kept houses in the County of Grey. Mr. A. leaves shortly, and Edward Linley of Singhampton takes his place and no doubt will be able to supply the general public with abundance of Scott Act and other requisites in his line.

At a recent meeting of the Osprey Agricultural Society, a new President was elected in the person of Mr. Anson Lee of Feversham, thus leaving the former President, W. Guy, at home. We don't see why the change was made, as Mr. Guy has generally acted as President, and filled his position very well, and has always shown his authority as well as he possibly could. It is altogether too bad to put "Billy" out of hoffice.

It is reported that some means are about to be taken to unseat the Reeve of Osprey (A. McGirr), as it is rumored that he is not qualified for the position. If such be done, a new election will have to take place, thus causing considerable trouble.

The Gospel Army are now holding meetings at the centre line church, near Wareham, where, no doubt, they will win many souls to Christ.

Messrs. Little & Bleakley seem to be doing a lively trade in the cutter line this season, having already turned out quite a number. They make the anvils ring, you bet.

Business also seems to be booming at the Big Boot, as usual. The proprietor, Mr. H., furnishes good material, and has in his employ the best workmen that can be procured in the county, therefore he says he can guarantee satisfaction.

Mr. Robert Gordon is doing a big trade in the shipping line at present. He has been sending loads of beef and pork to the city about twice a week for some time.

I think I have given all the news, of any account this week, and will try and grind you something better in future, and as Bridget, my wife, complains of being ill, I must be after the doctor.

I remain yours, &c.,

Kimberley.

From a Correspondent.

Christmas holidays have come and gone, and with them the usual good times of tea parties, socials and soirees nothing to mar the enjoyment of any having occurred.

The tea-meeting in aid of the Methodist church building fund, came off on New Year's day, and was fairly attended. The proceeds amounted to $80.00.

The Orange soiree, which came off on the 15th inst., was a grand success. Dr. Sproule, M. P., and the Rev. Mr. Wilson, both of Markdale, addressed the meeting. The proceeds amounted to near $60.

Mr. T. M., one of our young men, went to Toronto lately, and on his return seemed to think that he was married; at least he succeeded in making some of his friends think so. He was taken ill after. Some think from the effects of his delusion. We are glad to say that he is able to be around again.

Some of the potatoes that were in pits, were badly frozen lately in this neighborhood. Of course it was not owing to warm weather.

The Kimberley Sabbath School anniversary and tea meeting comes off here on the 3rd of February. There will be a good programme; and as the proceeds will go for a good purpose, we hope there will be a large attendance.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A young man named Chambers died at the residence of Mr. Thomas Knight, on the 13th inst., very suddenly. He retired to bed the night before in his usual health, and was dead the next morning. Dr. Christoe was called in, but did not deem it necessary to hold an inquest.

Flesherton Cheese Factory.

The annual business meeting of this cheese factory was held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Monday, the 11th inst., for the purpose of laying before the patrons an account of the business of the past season. The secretary's reports showed that there had been 1,056,111 lbs. of milk sent to the factory by the patrons, from which 101,647 lbs. of cheese was made which was sold for $8,544.73. The cost of running the factory was $2,265.32, leaving $6,279.41 to be devided among the patrons according to the amount of milk sent by each patron.

A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to the President and Directors for the very satisfactory manner in which they discharged their duties during the past season.

The annual meeting of the patrons of the factory for the election of officers will be held in Flesherton on the 9th of March.

THE ALGOMA DISASTER.

Captain Moore and the Chief Officer Punished.

THEIR SENTENCES SHORTENED BY THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Capt. Harbottle and Lieut. Gordon, the commissioners appointed by the Dominion government to investigate into the causes of the wreck of the C. P. R. steamer Algoma at Isle Royale, a few months ago, when so many lives were lost, reported their finding at the office of the hull inspector last evening. The report is a voluminous one, and after describing the vessel, reviews the evidence given by the survivors at great length. The commissioners were of opinion that had Capt. Moore ordered a cast of the lead at about 4 o'clock in the morning the disaster occurred, he would have discovered the danger ahead, There was no look out detailed for duty at the time or for some time before and it was necessary at all times for a man to be so detailed. The commissioners decided to cancel the certificate of Capt. Moore and Chief Officer Hastings for twelve and six months respectively, but a telegram received from the minister of marine and fisheries states that the minister approved of the Algoma decision, but had shortened the suspension of the captain's certificate three months, owing to previous good record, and to the fact that he had pursued the usual custom in navigating the lake.

Before the Days of Shoddy.

[From Peck's Sun.]

It was in a country grocery store, of course. Everything in the shape of a plausible yarn either originates in or is directly traceable to a grocery nowadays, and I do not feel at liberty to deviate from the established rule. Several good stories had been told about the strength and durability of certain kinds of cloth, by several members of the gathering. There was a lull in the conversation, and the clerk cast a meaning look at the clock and twirled the store key in his fingers, when suddenly, as if moved by the spirit, Yankton Puckett rose from his seat on the cracker barrel, spilled a gill of compound liquid of dog-leg and saliva into the coal scuttle, stood with his back to the stove, and began:

"Yas, gentlemen; some kinds o' cloth is stouter'n all git out. But the stuff we useter buy beats all. I remember way back in '54, I bought a bolt of doeskin from Old Man Smitkins, that used to keep the store up yonder at Pitkins' Corner, this side of Cragg's Bend. Doeskin goods them days was doeskin! Tough? Well, I should say so! Stouter'n blazes! tougher'n buckskin! Well, as I said, I bought a bolt, and my wife rigged me out with a suit from it, fixed off in the style of them days with a spike-tail coat. Don't know what a spike-tail coat is? Well, that's a fact you don't see many on them nowadays; but it used to be so's a man couldn't be a good christian without one. They had long tails and short at the waist in front. Well, sir, I wore that suit every Sunday till after the war, and then took to wearin' it for everyday! How well I remember it! That suit o' clothes was associated with me a good part o' my best days. What? Mr. Yank Puckett he? Lived here all yer life an' don't know me yet? I'll be darned! Well, one spring (in '68 I think it was) I was plowin' a clearin' on my land up there near Cragg's Bend, and the patch was full o' hickory stumps. I had two fine yoke o' cattle, and had on that same identical coat. I was walking along behind the plow with my head down, when all at once the plow struck one o' them blamed hickory stumps, ker bump! Gosh! I can feel that jar yet. But do you think my cattle stopped for stumps? No sir! Yanked that plow through it slicker'n grease. Did I hold on to the plow handles? Of course! Didn't have time to let go. But the plow jerked me through the openin' in the stump so quick that my coat-tail stuck out horizontally behind me, and was caught by the halves of the stump, as they clapped back together like lightnin.' That pesky stump had a death grip on my coat-tail; but I was resolved not to let go o' them plow handles. Phiz-z-z-z rip! Something began to give, but it wasn't the coat. Well, sir, we just yanked that ar hickory stump out by the roots as slick as you please, and I let the stump hang on to my coat-tail till we got to the edge of the field, when I slipped out of the coat and chopped it loose. It took me nearly an hour."

Glenelg Agricultural Society.

The annual meeting of Glenelg Agricultural Society was held in Haskett's Hall on Thursday last, and though the day was fine, and proper notice had been given, the attendance was small. The auditors' report showed the society to be in excellent financial standing, there being a balance in the treasury of $85.99, besides $58 as membership fee for '86. This is certainly very encouraging for the society, and no doubt greater efforts will be made the coming year than ever heretofore for a successful show.

The following officers were elected for the present year:

President, Wm. Douglas.
Vice-President, S. Boyce.

DIRECTORS:

Edward Rutledge.
R. Montgomery.
E. Davis.
R. Watson.
A. Nodwell.
B. Coleman.
James Nelson.

C. W. Rutledge.

Wm. McLoughry and W. A. Brown were appointed Auditors for '86.

At a meeting of the directors same day Wm. Haskett was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer.

Holland Council.

Holland Centre, Jan. 18, '86.

The council elect for the township of Holland, met in Fitzgerald's Hall, for the transaction of business. After taking their declaration of office and qualification, the following persons took their seats:

John Cameron, Reeve.
Anthony Shute, Deputy Reeve.
James Galbraith, Thos. Williscroft, and Michael Howey, Councillors.

The Reeve appointed John Sutherland, and the council John McDonald as Auditors.

Moved by Mr. Howey, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that by-law No. 1, for the appointment of Auditors be read 1st, 2nd and 3rd times.

Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Howey, that the Reeve and Deputy-Reeve be a committee to investigate the Treasurer's securities.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that James Adams, John Gillespie and J. W. Eagle be appointed health officers for the present year for the township of Holland.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Howey, that the account of the clerk, for returning officers, be paid.

Moved by Mr. Shute, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that W. Crofford receive an order for $1.50 as taxes over paid.

Moved by Mr. Shute, seconded by Mr. Galbraith, that Mrs. Watson be exempted from taxes for 1885.

Moved by Mr. Shute, seconded by Mr. Galbraith, that the Trustees of S. S. No. 9, be paid $6.18, being money paid to section No. 5 and 6 in error.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that the petition presented by E. Hanbury and signed by 16 others, regarding forming a new school section, be laid over for further consideration.

Moved by Mr. Shute, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that tenders be received up to the next meeting of council for the township printing.

Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Howey, that we receive applications this evening for the office of Assessor.

Applications were put in by the following persons: James McComb, $90; George Little, $75; Robert McKennet, $57.

Moved by Mr. Shute, seconded by Mr. Galbraith, that Geo. Little be assessor at a salary of $75.

Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Shute, that we adjourn till the 20th Feb., 1886.

Ten Thousand Dollars Damages.

THE VERDICT OF THE JURY IN THE LAFLAMME SUIT AGAINST THE MAIL.

MONTREAL, Jan. 18.—After the conclusion of the address of council to-day in the Laflamme-Mail libel suit, Mr. Justice Johnson charged the jury strongly against the Mail. After three-quarters of an hour's deliberation, the jury returned a verdict against the Mail for $10,000 damages. for the publication of the article and $4000 damages on the supplementary demand for the allegations of the plea. At the request of the judge the foreman explained that while trying to agree upon a verdict upon the question of supplementary damages, nine jurymen were in favor of granting the amount awarded and three dissented. He (the foreman) was one of those dissenting.

Dynamite at Orangeville.

A SECOND ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP THE POLICE MAGISTRATE.

ORANGEVILLE, Jan. 18.—At one o'clock on Sunday morning an explosion took place at the residence of Mr. Munro, police magistrate. On examining the premises it was found that a dynamite cartridge had been placed on the sill of the kitchen door, which was inside a shed. The door was blown in, the stove broken and the windows and wall shattered. The shed was also blown to pieces. The inmates of the house were not injured. This is the second attempt to the police magistrate, who has been inflicting fines for breaches of the Scott act. There are rewards offered of $1000 for the perpetrators of the first outrage. The reward will now be increased.

He Took Her Advice for the First Time in His Life.

"Send out an alarm! My husband has been missing all night and all day!" frantically cried a little woman dressed in a faded red dress and green shawl, as she bounced into the police station.

"What kind of a looking man was he?" asked the sergeant.

"Little short man; bald-headed, gray clothes: nose most as red as yours."

"You will find him at the morgue. A man of that discription was found drowned this morning."

"Drowned! drowned! And it's all my fault. I told him to go and soak his head, and this is the first time he ever took my advice."

He got Ahead of all Competition.

A Cleveland speculator sent his son to Wisconsin to buy hops, telling him to keep his eyes open for any other speculation. After a few days a dispatch came saying:

"A widow has got a corner on the hop market of this state shall I marry her?"

"Certainly," was the reply sent over the wires."

Twelve hours later the son anounced: "Got the hops, the widow, and seven stepchildren, and shall go to Chicago to-morrow to see about a divorce."

TEA-MEETING IN GLENELG.—A tea-meeting was held in the Baptist Church, on the base line, Glenelg, on New Year's night. The attendance was very good, and the proceeds amounted to about $38. The entertainment, consisted of music, by a choir from Bentinck, a short address by Rev. H. J. Roberts, and recitations by D. McKinnon, Duncan McLean, Hugh McLean, Dan. McLean, Miss Agnes O'Neill, Miss Flora McGillivray, of Bentinck, and Misses S. and M. Bell, Maggie Leitch and John Dun, of Glenelg. Also, a dialogue by Miss K. and Mr. H. McKinnon. Mr. John Bain occupied the chair, and a general good time prevailed. On the Monday following, a social was held in the same place. The proceeds from both footing up to about $40. The managers of the Church extend their thanks to the neighbors, and to the Bentinck choir and reciters, who helped materially in getting up this satisfactory entertainment.—[Grey Review.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Soap-Making.

So long as it is more economical to buy than make soap many a woman will make her own soap. A lady in the Farm Journal tells how she does it.

Drive down your posts in a square about four feet apart; place a trough in the centre with the end where the lye is to run out the lowest. Take clapboards or waste boards of any kind, sharpen them at one end, and put the sharp end in the trough, leaning the wide end against the strips of wood (that have been nailed to the tops of the posts all around) at the sides and ends, this will make the hopper. Then carry two big armfuls of straw, spreading it up the sides a ways to keep the ashes from sprinkling through between the boards.

Put in about a bushel of ashes, pour in a gallon of water, and pound it down with an old maul that has one side split off. Then put in more ashes, more water, and pound again, using the rest of the straw up the sides as it is needed till your hopper is full or run out the ashes (I always run out), flatten the top evenly, pour on about ten gallons of water (two gallons at a time), and leave it to soak for a week; then pour on water as fast as it soaks through till you have your kettle two thirds full of lye, bring it to a boil, dip a feather in it three times; if it eats it put in the grease; if the lye is too weak, boil it down and keep running off the lye from the hopper and pouring into it.

As to the amount of grease to be put in, that is something that no woman knoweth (nor man either). I generally put in about five gallons of meat rinds, cracklings, and such, then I put in more clear grease (if I have it) till it "comes," boiling it all the time, and putting in more lye from the hopper. My kettle holds about fifteen gallons. Sometimes I make a kettleful in an hour, sometimes in a day, and once in a while I have to boil it three days. This is the way to make "liver" soap or "jelly" soap.

There is another kind of soap made with the same kind of lye and grease that is called "ball" soap. It is as thick as the cornmeal dough that we feed the chickens, and about as yellow as yellow cornmeal.

It will go three times as far in washing as the "liver" soap will; it takes strong lye and lots of grease to make it; then, I believe, there is always a quantity of lye in the bottom of the barrel, while "liver" soap is soap all the way down. Have I made it plain?

I read in an agricultural paper to-day that few farmers' wives now use soap made of wood ashes; that they prefer the concentrated lye soap. It is not so. We all hate that blue, slippery, ill-smelling stuff, and never use it if we can help it. I do not know a single instance where the real old-fashioned soap is not preferred to the imitation article.

Household Hints.

To clean brass, take one ounce oxalic acid, six ounces rotten stone, one-half ounce gum-arabic (all in powder), one ounce sweet oil, and sufficient water to make a paste. Apply a small portion and rub dry with flannel or leather.

Colored hose that stain the feet should be put into a pail of boiling hot clear water, let them stand until cool, rub them out by hand, and put into hot salt water. When cool rinse from that thoroughly, wring dry, and hang out smoothly in the shade to dry. Black cotton goods of all kinds are benefited by the same treatment the first time they are washed, using the usual method of washing with soap after scalding.

Flannel underwear should reach from throat to wrists and ankles in winter. Why should the legs of children be left with less protection from the cold than the rest of the body? They should be loose and easy in every part, with allowance for shrinkage and growth. The legs should slope by both outside and inside seams from the calf of the leg down. Leave them open a few inches at the bottom of the inner seam, that they may be folded smoothly under the stocking.

The old-fashioned slippers, worked in silk and wool on canvas, are coming in again; but they are improved upon in the designs. Tulips and other flowers are worked in embroidery stitch, the ground only in cross stitch. Griffins and heraldic devices, as well as crests, are also placed on the front, while some of the ground works are shot with silver. Quite the newest have large pieces of plush tied on the canvas, forming part of the pattern.

To cure chapped hands—Wash clean every evening with pure soap and tepid water, not hot or cold. Do not use a towel to dry them but a lotion of glycerine two ounces, pure carbolic acid eight grains or drops, and pure water six ounces; a teaspoonful will be enough for both hands. Rub the hands together briskly until they are dry. Persevere and the cure will be sure.

Housewife's Scrap Book

Stain on cups and saucers may be removed by rubbing with ashes.

If the oven is too hot when baking place a small dish of cold water in it.

When sponge cake becomes dry it is nice to cut in thin slices and toast.

To remove mildew, soak in butter-milk and spread on the grass in the sun.

To prevent mustard plaster from blistering, mix it with the white of egg.

Never put salt into soup when cooking till it has been thoroughly skimmed, as salt prevents the skum from rising.

When the burners of lamps become clogged with char, put them in a strong soap suds and boil awhile to clean them.

Boiled starch can be much improved by the addition of a little sperm or a little salt, or both, or a little dissolved gum arabic.

To brighten the inside of a coffee or tea pot, fill with water, add a small piece of soap, and let it boil about forty-five minutes.

If matting, counterpanes, or bedspreads have oil spots on them, wet with alcohol, rub with hard soap, then rinse with clear, cold water.

It is said that canned berries retain their flavor, and keep better, when a buttered cloth is laid over the top of the jar before screwing down the cover.

Nurses in a sick room should not sit or stand too near the patient, and above all things they should avoid talking when leaning over a sick person.

A liquid black lead for polishing stoves is made by adding to each pound of black lead one gill of turpentine, one gill of water, one ounce of sugar.

Picture frames made with a combination of polished oak and gilt ornaments are admirably adapted to water color drawings, and are less expensive than other styles.

To keep insects out of bird cages, tie up a little sulphur in a bag and suspend it in the cage. Red ants will never be found in closet or drawer if a small bag of sulphur be kept constantly in these places.

Old newspapers will put the finishing touch to newly cleansed silver, knives and forks and tinware better than anything else. Rub them well and make perfectly dry. They are excellent to polish stoves that have not been blackened for some length of time.

Knew Him.

The man who arranges an informal visit to a lunatic asylum may have occasion to wish that he had chosen a place from which it is easier to depart. Some experiences of that kind remind one of the festal air with which a fly enters the innocent-looking trap and the frantic persistence with which he stays there.

Sir Edward Sugden, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, about the middle of the present century, once visited, somewhat by surprise, a lunatic asylum in the neighborhood of Dublin, to satisfy himself as to its condition. A hasty notification of his visit reached the place just before his arrival,—one which was strongly colored by the waggish propensities of the sender. The head of the establishment, chancing to be absent, the notification in all its coloring, was accepted as truth.

In consequence, Sir Edward, while awaiting in the parlor the return of the proprietor, found himself rather unceremoniously treated. When his patience became exhausted, and he signified his intention of going over the establishment without further delay, he was amazed at being informed by the attendant that he could not be allowed to do so.

"Can't be allowed to do it? What do you mean, fellow?" asked the indignant Chancellor.

"I mean just what I say. You can't go, so you may as well be quiet."

"What do you mean by this insolence? Open the door, sir, and show me to my carriage. I shall report your conduct, and if your master does not punish you, I shall take steps to make both him and you respect my authority."

"Oh, be aisy now wid yer authority!" put in another official. Kape quiet, will ye? Not a fut do ye stir out o' this, till the doothur comes back and tells where ye're to be put."

"What is the meaning of all this? Don't you know who I am, fellow, or are you mad?"

"Oh, faith, there's one of us mad, sure enough! Troth, I know ye very well, if that's all that's troublin' ye."

"You can't know me, or you wouldn't dare to behave in this manner to me. I am the Lord Chancellor of Ireland."

"Lord Chancellor? Well, sure, ye're welcome home to us. It's three or four lord chancellors we've got here already!"

Sir Edward was indeed forced to submit to his keepers until the return of the manager of the asylum.

Imagination.

An English writer, giving an account of his adventures hunting tigers in India, relates the following to show the power of the imagination. Word was brought him upon the hunt that his servant had been attacked by a tiger, and severely wounded. He says: I galloped to the camp as fast as I could, to see what had really happened to the man. There he was, laid on a charpoy (bedstead) under the shadow of the elephant. Notwithstanding the intense heat of the weather, he was buried, head and all, under a pile of clothing, some belonging to the elephant, and some to himself. Around this funeral couch squatted a dozen or two sympathizers of both sexes.

"Dear me!" I said. "What is the matter? Speak to me!"

Thus exhorted, he displayed a pale countenance, with eyes larger then their wont, and shining with a glassy stare. I said,—

"What is the matter? Did the tiger get hold of you?"

"Certainly," he answered. "What else could have happened?"

"Show me," I said.

Hereupon the assistants raised one of his arms, swathed in cloths till it was the size of an ordinary person's body. The patient groaned so dismally that I said I would not look at it, for we had a doctor with us who must be in before long.

I turned to go, but before I had gone six steps, I said to myself,—

"Suppose he should be slowly bleeding to death? He looks as though he were, and his voice is so faint!"

I returned and ordered the wounded limb to be exposed to view.

As the last fold was removed, I was really staring with a highly-wrought gaze.

What appeared?

Nothing, absolutely nothing!

New Tanning Process.

The discovery of a safe and efficient tanning agent to take the place satisfactorily of the costly hemlock bark has long been a desideratum, notwithstanding the various substitutes which have been brought forward. Recently considerable has been said of the discovery made sometime since by an Arizona tanner of a plant which carries a large proportion of tannin, and which, when used in the manufacture of leather, is found to give extra weight to the article produced. This plant is of annual growth, indigenous to the deserts and dry uplands, and is known as gonagra. It has a root somewhat longer and more scraggy than the cultivated beet, though resembling it in appearance, and practical use has demonstrated its tannin properties to be about three times as great as the ordinary oak bark, and that in all essentials it is superior to such bark in the manufacture of leather. It has now been in use for this purpose a considerable time, proving beyond question its superior adaptedness, while in respect to cost, as compared with bark, it has immense advantage over the latter.

Massachusetts registered over 6,000 insane persons in her asylums and hospitals during 1885—an increase of 200 over the previous year. The annual cost to the State of this form of relief exceeds $460,000 of interest on the value of buildings, &c.

Recent explorers in Alaska came upon a native village containing eleven males, five of whom were deaf mutes, while one of the woman was wholly deaf. This state of things is accounted for by steady intermarriage, as no other Indians lived within several days' journey.

Leprosy is declared by the Lansing (Iowa) Mirror to exist to a considerable extent among the colony of Scandinavians from northern Norway, now settled near the village of Spring Grove, in Houston Co., Minn. Doctors who have examined the subjects, who are in three or four different families (but are related), are said to have pronounced the malady undoubtedly leprosy.

In the Union Medicale a doctor tells of a duel at which he assisted, and in which one of the men died of a pleurisy—empyema following upon the wound. He thought that this could have been prevented by due antiseptic precautions. "The blades should have been clean, medically. The foils should be passed through a flame of carbolic acid. We should like to have the pistols and balls disinfected." This sounds a little odd, considering how easily they could be dispensed with.

The authorities of the Crichton Royal Institution for the Insane lately came to the astonishing conclusion that it would be a good plan to give a few of their choicest lunatics the diversion of shooting parties. A new comer, who joined one of them, strayed away from the party, and was afterward found shot through the head. The death is thought to have been caused by accident, but it led, people to ask which were the more insane the patients or the authorities of the asylum.

The Palace Laeken, near Brussels, is in telephonic communication with the Opera House in Brussels, and it appears that the queen of the Belgians was lately listening to a rehearsal of the new opera by Litolff when she suddenly dropped the "receiver" and retired. The leader of the orchestra, in his anxiety to bring the chorus up to the perfection he considered necessary, used rather strong language. The Queen made a formal complaint, and there has been much trouble at the Opera House.

Five Mile Beach Island, near Cape May, has an unique and beautiful feature in its holly groves, which stretch for four miles along the island. Many of them are very aged trees. Their trunks are more than a foot in diameter at half their height. The light gray bark, with tints of pale green and patches of brown, bring together the hoariness of age and the tenderness of youth. The moss hangs from the branches as if the forest were Southern, while the evergreen leaves and the bright red berries keep up the illusion of summer in the drearier days of frost.

By means of a simple chemical process a beautiful coloring of yellow is now given to marble, without any injurious effect upon the polish or hardness of the stone. Neutral chloride of iron is for this purpose dissolved in ninety per cent. of alcohol, and after gently heating the marble to be colored, the solution in question is applied by means of a brush, a sprinkler, or by pouring, the strength of the solution being, of course, proportioned to the depth of the color desired, and care being requisite also in regard to the degree of temperature. On the marble becoming completely dry it is moistened with water or exposed to moist air, when the decomposition of the salt of iron takes place in the upper strata, and the process of coloration is complete, all that remains to be done being to polish the surface, if necessary, or it may be simply rubbed off with a wet cloth. For light tints, very diluted solutions are applied.

Richard Wagner generally received his visitors in mediæval costumes, such as he always wore when composing. Alexandre Dumas, calling on him one day, was highly amused at the masquerade. "You are all dressed up to play Gessler," said Dumas, with his good-natured laugh, which rather hurt the feelings of the author of "Tannhauser," who nevertheless returned M. Dumas's visit when next he was at Paris. After some considerable delay M. Dumas appeared at last, dressed magnificently in a dressing gown with a large flower pattern, a helmet with flying plumes, a life belt round his waist, and enormous riding boots. "Pardon me," said he majestically "for appearing in my working costume. I can do nothing without being dressed in this manner. Half of my ideas live in this helmet and the other half are lodged in my boots, which are indispensable to me when I write my love scenes."

In an article on "The Use of Oil at Sea," by Lieut John P. Holditch, R. N. R., the author says, "The results I have obtained are these: Fish or colza oil only is of any good, it does not matter how it is as long as it is not thick. Paraffin is too thin; paint oil too thick. Running before a gale naturally expends much more oil than 'laying to,' you have so much more water to oil. Carefully expended, one quart in three hours for running, one pint in four hours for laying to, will be sufficient. The means I used was a canvas bag (No. 6), with large holes stabbed with a needle. I have heard of a bundle of oakum being saturated with oil, and then put in a coarse gunny bag, which I think would admit of a thicker oil being used for time. The place for towing is undoubtedly forward not aft. Whether in headreaching oil could be used successfully I cannot say, but I doubt it. When running dead before the wind, tow from each cathead, and the ship is as safe as anything can be at sea."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB

After Brother Gardner had opened the meeting in due and ancient form he placed a letter on the desk and used his jack-knife to hold it down, and said:

"Heah am a letter from a cull'd gem'man of high renown in St. Louis axin' if de 'flock dat an applicant has a white wife am considered cause to rejeck him. De Sekretary will be requested to reply to de effeck dat it am, an' I want to call publick attention to by-law No 4,286,420, which reads: 'No applicant who am libin' in de marriage state wid a white female kin be received into dis club under any sarcumstances.'

"We kin look up an' down dis hall an' see every shade of color, from de ebony blackness of Samuel Shin to de gold complexun of Waydown Bebee, but dat am a different matter. No man kin lay his hand on a member, either active or honorary, who has so entirely ignored de eternal fitness of things as to marry into another race an' brought a life-long curse upon innercent children. While de laws in sartin States may sanotion sich marriages, I kin but look upon 'em wid de greatest abhorence. De degradashun of de one kin not elevate de posishun of de other.

"I say to you, my frens, dat de pusson now holdin' de mose painful an' embarrassin' posishun in dis kentry am de man who am neither black nor white—who belongs to no race—who am too good fur one an' not good 'nuff fur de other. I speak of de mulatto. He has got de pride of de white man, an' yet he am not white. He feels hisself superior to de black man, but am driben to his lebel fur society an' to do business. He am looked down upon by one an' cordially hated by another fur no fault of his.

"No one of you men, wid your pitch-black faces turned dis way, would trade dat complexion for two-thirds white if a bag of gold war' flung at you to bind de bargain. When you go home, ah' de little black faces peep at you from de trundle-bed, deir werry blackness makes your ole hearts glad. Let folks call 'em niggers if dey will, but dey belongs to a race of 6,000,000 people in de United States.

"I say to you an' sich philanthropists as hev striven fur laws to legalize de union of whites an' blacks, dat a mo' grievous wrong was nebber committed on posterity. De result am to add to de number of no-race folks. It am to make honest white folks disgusted, an' honest black folks indignant. It am to give pride, ambishun an' self-respect to young men an' young women, an' den seek to deliberately grind 'em to pulp in a social way. Let us now purceed to bizness."

LET THE KINK REMAIN.

A communication from Burlington, Ia., signed by the Hon. Jabez Coon, the great African warbler, stated that during a recent trip to the South he ran across a white man who was selling a preparation called: "Anti-Kink," and warranting it to straighten the hairs of any colored man in three days. He claimed that the Lime-Kiln Club indorsed his preparation, and that every member used it. In conclusion the writer asked:

"Now, what we want to know is, if there really is any virtue in the preparation, and if it is proper that the colored race should use the same?

"Do you not think if it were possible to take the kink out of the hair of the colored race, that we could pass for Abyssinians, and thus reduce, in a measure, the prejudice that exists against us?"

"De man who was sellin' dat preparashun was oberhauled in barginin' de odder day," replied the President, "an' he now occupies a bed of sickness. He am, of co'se, a base impostor. As to de queshun of our passin' ourselves off as Abyssinians, I prefer our present possishun. I reckon de date hasn't yet arrove when our race am called upon to play second fiddle eben to de Turks. It ain't in kinky ha'r so much as it am in de man who wears it. Gin me an honest ole black head, wid de kinks fastened to it by long roots, an' I'll trust my corn-crib in its care an' feel jist as safe as if a white man was on guard."

TOO MUCH.

A communication from the Rev. Jasper, of Virginia, announced that he would come to Detroit and deliver his celebrated lecture on "De Sun do Move" for $50 in cash, but would expect some member of the Lime-Kiln Club to board and lodge him, and a committee to meet him at the depot.

The secretary was instructed to answer to the effect that the season was approaching when the club would cease to care whether the sun moved or not, providing the moon appeared on the regular dates, and to add that $10 was the highest figures the club would pay for any sort of a lecture no followed by a grand display of fireworks.

BOUNCED.

The Secretary then announced a communication from Selma, Ala., perferring charges against the Hon. Fardown Johnson, as follows:

1. Playing on the fiddle while his wife lay dying in the house.

2. Placing shoe pegs in his mule's feed-box to make his oats go further.

3 Crawling under the tent to get into a circus, and being hit with a neck yoke in the hands of an employe.

4. Speaking disrespectfully of the Bible and in favor of a dime novel.

Full proofs accompanied every charge, and the Secretary was instructed to cross the name from the rolls and to warn the deposed member by the first mail that any further attempt on his part to use the name of the club for his personal benefit would result in a sudden stroke of paralysis.

THROWN OVERBOARD.

Judge Walkinbeam Davis, Chairman of the Committee on Meteorological Disturbances, submitted a report in regard to the thermometer presented to the club by Prof. Hydrostatic Smith. The Professor claimed a great many things for this instrument, but it has failed in every instance. The committee charged it with the following crimes and misdemeanors:

1. Registering 150 degrees above zero in the forenoon and 250 degrees below in the afternoon of the same day.

2. Indicating the approach of next spring when this winter had scarcely set in.

3. Indicating the approach of a hurricane when there wasn't the slightest excuse for such conduct.

On motion of Prof. Average Williams, the "Smith Duplex, Back-action, Early Rose Thermometer" was declared a failure and ordered removed from the roof of Phoenix Hall.

The meeting then adjourned.

Flowers that Blossom.

BY ANNIE L. JACK.

In mid-winter there is often a dearth of blossoms among geraniums and roses, the ordinary plants that are taken into the house. To provide against this there are plants more satisfactory than Chinese Primroses and Stenia that keep up a succession of blossoming from November till March, which these plants are ready to accept added sunshine and put forth flowers.

The Chinese Primroses can be procured from seed; raised in a hot-bed they will give a limited flowering during the winter indoors. Planted out in a where they are not noticed, in a shaded place, they will grow into clumps that will live and bloom freely two or three successive seasons, and then be divided into two or three and re-growing. Some of the shades of pink, purple, and the finely notched and quilled are very beautiful. They are, however, quite impatient of cold water, and its being poured over the leaves. Warm water should always be used, and poured directly upon the earth which should be composed of loam and rotted leaf-mold. Too much water causes decay at the roots, and rots the leaves. The double variation is very beautiful and for continuance of bloom the primrose is unrivalled.

It is very useful as a table plant, a single pot in bloom being a much admired ornament, and the flowers being all around the plant renders it the more desirable. The Stenia is a green leafed plant not unlike mignonette in its style of growing, with a sweetly perfumed flower, like a white cluster of stars. It grows easily from cuttings in spring, and can be left all summer with very little attention. Before Christmas blooming commences, and continues all winter. In these articles on the flowers that bloom, I am only giving from actual experience the plants that have succeeded best for blossoming in our Canadian climate. For winter flowers we are so much dependent on sunshine, and have so little of it during the early winter months, that it is impossible for roses, and many other plants to bloom until the lengthened days give the food they require, and so, as in many other things, it is well to learn to cultivate such flowers as blossom cheerfully in the dull dark days; to "Take the good, when you lose the best,

And school yourself till it seems as well."

CHATEAUQUAY, QUE.

"Ouida" the Novelist.

There is a mystery about Ouida which piques curiosity. She was once asked how she came to know so much about camp life, clubs, barracks, gambling houses, and other places only frequented by men, and she is reported to have leaned her head on her knees, and looking straight at her questioner with a provoking smile, to have easily answered: "It is none of your business." Her real name is Louise de la Rame. Her father was a Frenchman, her mother English. Her face is fair and oval, her eyes are deep blue in color and very large and expressive, her golden-brown hair, which formerly was worn loose and flowed down her shoulders is no longer kept in "much admired disorder," but is discreetly braided as befits a middle-aged woman. She is about the medium hight, slender and graceful. She passes much time in the open air, driving and walking, and from April to October is out all the time, except when eating and sleeping. Her favorite time for driving is in the afternoon from 2 to 6. She drives herself, and always has a couple of pet dogs with her; in fact, whether walking or driving, at home or abroad, eating or reading, thinking or writing, she has her canine companions by her side. She has a burying-place for her dogs in her garden, and they are laid to rest with a tenderness not always bestowed upon human beings. Her favorite St. Bernard dog, Isla, has a marble tomb over his remains, with an inscription quite as pathetic, but less misanthropic, than Byron's famous lines on his favorite Newfoundland, Boatswain.

PEOPLE.

Queen Victoria. In her 67th year and has ruled for nearly forty-nine years.

President Seeyle, of Amherst College, says that if girls would run every day they would never die of consumption.

A. T. Stewart was worth at the time of his death fully $60,000 000, a large part of which has gone one way or the other—but mostly the former.

Sir Henry Alfred Doughty Tichborne will come of age and enter into possession of his estates next May, and, in spite of the $600,000 spent in opposing the "Claimant," he will be a rich man, his rent roll amounting to more than $140 000 a year.

Prince Adolf of Lipp-Schaumburg, holding the smallest of German principalities, is the richest of all her sovereigns. His personal estates and property is valued at over $3,000,000. He has just celebrated his twenty-fifth accession to his principality.

Col. Jerome Bonaparte, grandson of King Jerome and Mrs. Patterson Bonaparte, lives in Washington, where himself and family are great social favorites. He is a tall, distinguished-looking man, with regular features and an iron-gray moustache and Imperial.

Senora Barrios, widow of the late President of Guatemala, is visiting New Orleans. The General's will has recently been made public, bequeathing to her all his fortune. It is reported at several millions. Barrios was once a barefooted Indian boy, who could not read or write.

Lady Randolph Churchill's decoration consists of the letters "V. R. and I.," in diamonds, pearls and turquois, encircled by a border set with pearls, surmounted by the imperial crown, jeweled and enameled in proper colors, attached to a light blue watered ribbon of one inch and a half in width, tied in a bow. About a hundred women compose the order, including all the Queen's daughters, the consorts of several of the leading Indian rulers and three or four reigning Indian princesses. Lady Churchill is the only English woman of American birth who has been decorated.

YOUNG FOLKS.

Love One Another.

was Saturday night, and two children small on the stairs of the lighted hall, ed and troubled and sore perplexed learn for Sabbath the forgotten text, three words on a gilded card,
both the children declared it hard.

Love," that is easy—it means, why this" warm embrace and a loving kiss);
'one another,' I don't see who meant by 'another'—now. May, do you?"

gladly she raised her head, thoughtful darling, and slowly said, fondly smiled on the little brother,
I am only one, and you are another,
this is the meaning - don't you see!—
I must love you, and you must love me."

little preacher! could any sage expect better the sacred page?

Sunshiny Tilda.

The cold winter's wind blew fiercely, and shook the crazy old house in the miserable quarters where the city's poor were crowded in houses long since condemned as unsafe.
"Oh, I'm so cold!" said Tilda Ryman, as she lay in her low bed of straw, shaking with cold, in the fireless and carpetless room.
The wind through the crevices in the wall chilled the weak little body, and there was no warm covering upon Tilda's bed.

Tilda was hungry; though 'twas afternoon, she had not tasted food, and her supper the evening before had been cold boiled potatoes without salt or pepper. But Tilda expected nothing; it was no new experience for this 10-year-old to be alone, cold and hungry.

"Oh, I wonder if mother's drinkin' again.
I'm so afeared she'll freeze to death, such cold days as this! If I could only watch over her a bit. 'Pears as if I shouldn't want to be in this world without mammy!"
And tears stole down the thin cheeks of half-starved Tilda.

"Are you awake, Tilda? and don't you want to take care of Polly Pipkin while I'm out to the school?' Anda larger girl pushed open the door and seated herself in the one only chair in the room.

"Oh, Martha Jane, please hand me Polly
Pipkin!' and Tilda sat up in bed, nervously reaching out for a battered, soiled doll, so ugly that few little girls would have wanted to look at it.

But Tilda couldn't move her lower limbs. A monkeo papa had struck her cruel, heavy blows when a wee girlie, and ever after nothing was the trouble with Tilda's back, her rosy cheeks grew thin, and mammy sobbed all the time.

Tilda didn't mind much then that she had to sit still and could never run or play, for mamma was so loving and tender with her cripple girlie; but she had not learned to drink then.

Tillie hugged Polly Pipkin close to her heart. The tumbled flaxen hair had not been combed for several days, and the thin cotton dress was tattered and dirty; no loving mother had looked after Tilda's comfort.

"Much cold, Tilda?" asked Martha Jane.
"Yes; but then the sun'll melt the snow, and—"

"I am afraid you haven't had any dinner,
Tilda. Well, mine wasn't enough for one man; I tried to get you a corn cake. My daddy is drinkin'; 'pears like every time he gets paid for work, he jest drinks it up.
Tilda, do you suppose we shall ever like the smell!—whisky, beer and brandy, I mean."
And Martha Jane's black eyes snapped and sparkled.

Tilda opened wide her blue ones. She was a loyal soul to mammy, but she hated with all her young might the curse which had wrecked their home and made a drunkard out of her mother.

"I know you hate it now, Tilda; so do I,
but once your mammy did. Old Granny Parks says your mammy was once the prettiest and sweetest woman she ever knew; and now look at her!—all purple and bloated—Hush! I didn't mean to make you cry. Here, Tilda, let me warm you up a bit;" and Martha Jane held the cripple in her arms until she had warmed a little the benumbed body of Tilda.

"I must be goin' to the school. We learn to mend and sew things there. I'm goin' to bring you something; it'll be company for you to try to guess what it will be."

"Martha, if you—should—see—mammy lyin'—in—the—streets, will you—will you—jest——"

"I'll try to bring her home, Tilda. The boys shall not throw snowballs at her while I'm around, and I'll try to sober her up with a cup of hot soup."

With a bang Martha Jane closed the door.
Tilda snuggled up into a heap and cuddled
Polly close to her, and then went to sleep.

"I'll ask the ladies to help her, I'm strong and can work, but Tilda never can. Why if here isn't old Mag, drunk, and almost tumbled over! I'll have to miss school, but I promised Tilda to look after her mother, and I think she'd rather I'd bring her mammy' than anything, though I wanted to get her some bread and meat and a bit of sugar."

Down upon her knees Martha Jane knelt, and with her fingers began to dig out the woman, stupid with drink, not minding the reproach of a beautifully-dressed lady.

The drunken woman muttered in her sleep as Martha tried to arouse her, when the lady too knelt, saying, "Let me assist you." And before Martha could think, the lady had called help and her carriage, and in it they were all driven to Tilda's.

Mrs. Manning's tears blinded her eyes as she looked upon Tilda and Polly Pipkin.

With Martha's help she soon had Tilda in a warm bed, wearing a flannel wrapper, in a home specially for weak, poor children.

Tilda's mother was cared for by ladies who work earnestly to help men and women break off the habit of intemperance and become respected, pure, good souls again; and Tilda prays daily for "mammy."

"My! but you're fine! I s'pose you wouldn't look at Polly Pipkin now!" said
Martha, as she visited Tilda in her warm room, just after she had eaten a breakfast of warm oatmeal and milk, and a pinkcheeked dolly in a pink dress lay in Tilda's arms.

"No, I don't mean a word of that, you dear sunshiny Tilda! You'll always stick to homely old friends, and I'm glad you have a new dolly. Good news! Daddy's taken the pledge, and maybe I'll have a new dolly too. I know you're glad, Tilda dear."

Born to blush unseen—Colored ladies.

CONVERSATION.

BY THE REV. E. A. STAFFORD, A. B.

Is conversation doomed to become a lost art? Some indications seem to point in that direction. It is certain that many a dear hostess is at this hour in much perplexity as to the manner in which she will entertain her guests, so as to make them feel at home with herself and each other, and yet not offend either the varied tastes, or the no less varied consciences of any. It is probable that no one feels that any recognized method is absolutely perfect. The musical evening, the euchre party, or the ball, does not touch everywhere with equal ease. What a pity that some leader in social life could not open a vein from which exhaustless wealth might be drawn to relieve the stress in this line.

Is not the art of conversation, developed in a high degree, the relief which is needed? The answer would undoubtedly be in the affirmative, were it not that it is the exception for any lady to bring her guests together and expect them to entertain themselves by their own conversation. The thought of such a thing brings to her mind the vision of a dreary circle of people, arranged around her walls in helpless silence, the whole company weighed down in abject fear, like some anniversary meeting, gathered together of uncongenial elements, in a too solemn church, when no choir or speaker can rise above the suffocating oppressiveness. The memory of one such company, and the fruitless efforts of the kind, but exhausted hostess, to make a break in the forbidding, well guarded lines, will live on until the very mention of company haunts one like a nightmare.

Now this ought not so to be, and the less as it is easily within reach of a thorough remedy. I have spoken of conversation as a lost art; I had done better if I had said an art never yet cultivated, for this is the fact. When a baby has learned to talk, and, to this accomplishment, a few years later, some lessons in the elements of English grammar are added, we have all that is ever done to draw out the faculties of any one along the line of conversation. Yet it is likely that, except those who have absolutely no musical faculty, people come by nature, as near to perfection in musical art as they do to perfection in the art of conversation. Certainly the former is capable of being carried to greater heights, and developed along more widely diverging lines, but without special cultivation conversation will fall as helpless and powerless, except in a few cases rarely favored by nature, as music would if wholly neglected. No one thinks of leaving music just to grow up of itself. Why expect the art of conversation to do so?

But the question will start up, where and how should it be taught? The schools are already overburdened with subjects. There is no room to bring in a new department of high culture. Well now it is just possible that even the greatly crowded curriculum of the schools might allow them to do something more than they do, though every recitation is in some sense a discipline in clear expression.

But beyond a doubt social life is the natural and great school of conversation. It is to blame, and open to a grave indictment for encouraging conversation to run down into mere exchange of a commonplace words, about the most commonplace things, instead of rising into the white heat of healthful excitement over subjects of deep and universal interest, Society has practically abandoned this field, which, of all fields, is peculiarly its own.

Now, everybody admires the person who has the power to hold a company under the charm of his words in colloquial discourse. Instead of such persons being the exception they might be the rule. These did not leap at a bound to their distinguished pre-eminence in this particular. Their grace is the last finishing touch put upon a high art. The elements which enter into this art admit of easy analysis. Mentioned in the order of their influence in thrusting one forward is the entertainment of others, they stand something like the following:

The person will be a good listener. Respect for what others say is about the best introduction which a stranger can have for what he is going to say himself. Self-possession will enable one who speaks to grow upon the attention of his listeners. Without it, in a reasonable measure, when one finds his own voice the only distinct sound in a company, the thoughts which before were clear to his mind will become confused; and after struggling along in growing mistiness for a time, he will hurry under cover of silence. But, of course, in all discourse the operator's trump card must be something to say. Though this might seem the most difficult part of the qualification it is actually about the most easy. A bashful boy, for the first time away from his father's house, a teacher of a small school among strangers, boarded in a house where were three young ladies, and suffered unspeakable agonies for want of something to say. He spent his first earned money in paying for Harper's Weekly, a paper at that time just beginning its career. In this the diffident youth found stories and anecdotes, and facts and politics, and he could always draw upon any of these when in the throes of his effort to do his part in the talk at table or elsewhere. He was surprised at the ease with which he could remember and repeat anything which he wished to present. The experience did more than anything else in his life to give him command of himself, and a ready supply of illustrative anecdote, while at the same time it taught him the habit of noticing and remembering what he read. If people had conversation in view, the life of each day would be found to be full of incident, and even of novelties well worth repeating. These things always seem larger in the telling than they do when looking upon them. To find something to say is easy indeed if one cares to make himself interesting to his friends. Certainly the more versatility one has the more interesting he will become. Brief, pithy anecdotes will hold sway anywhere if well told. It is fashionable to ridicule anecdote as not consistent with the highest dignity, but all the same a good laugh serves a noblér purpose in nature than dignity when standing alone. In the line of this high and refined art it is open for any bold reformer to invite a party of friends together with the understanding that each member of the company will be expected to relate one or more good stories; and such a party would serve the double purpose of general entertainment, and of cultivating the art of telling a good thing well. Why would not such a party be as acceptable and refined as one where any other art is mentioned as the stated means of entertainment? I have read of one highly accomplished lady who gave receptions to her friends, and marked the card of invitation with the word "conversation." She was a mistress of the art, and her receptions were exceedingly popular, as many found them a stimulant to excellence, and many useful hints in attaining it.

AY, AY, SIR!

WINTER WRINKLES.

About the only time a man wishes he were a woman is when he is in a crowded street car.

A new comedy is called "The Girl With a Tin Heart." Nearly all the girls have a tin heart, when a young man comes round with a soft solder.

The saying, "full as a goose," does the goose great injustice. A goose never gets so full that it has to hold on to a lamp post, as did some folks the other night.

"He is utterly unscrupulous," writes an Irish editor of a political opponent, "and his memory is so poor that he frequently forgets one minute what he says the next."

A woman will face a frowning world and cling to the man she loves through the most bitter adversity, but she wouldn't wear a hat that was out of style to save the government.

"Don't you like this room?" asked the principal of the new teacher. "Oh, yes, I like the room well enough," replied the miss who had a large class of boys, "but I find it very sonny."

"Nana!" (her version of grandma) "is your papa dead?" "Yes," answered grandma. A long pause, and then came from the little lips: "Then the only papa you got is just a corn-popper!"

A scientific journal claims that nothing will improve a woman's complexion like early rising. This may be true, but every woman knows that for immediate results a powder rag is not to be sneezed at.

Examiner in zoology (to small aspirant)—"Can you tell me any thing peculiar about the cuckoo, in regard to nesting?' Student—"Yes, sir. Please sir he don't lay his own eggs hisself, sir!"

Superintendent (to little girl)—"Now, my dear, how can you best show your appreciation to your parents for the liberal education they have given you?" Little girl—"By marrying rich, sir."

"Did you say or did you not say what I said you said? Because Walt said you said you never said what I said you said. Now, if you did say that you did not say what I said you said then what did you say?"

"Good morning Mrs Gilligan; how is Patrick, this morning?" "Sure, he's no better, sir." "Why don't you send him to the hospital to be treated?" "To be treated, is it! Faith, an' it's the delirium trimmins he has already."

"Is it the Dothness of the Do, or the Doneness of the Did?" proposed a Hub tutor to a little Yankee kid. The Boating urchin's answer free at oncely took the bun: "The pwopah tawm to use would be, the Didness of the Done."

A little boy was asked how he liked his new baby sister. "Well," he replied, "I don't think she agrees with me." "And why not?" was asked. "I don't know," said he, "but I always want to cry when I see mother kiss her."

"Oh, mamma," said a little girl who had stopped in front of a glass case containing dentists' samples, "here is just what you want." "I have all the teeth I require," replied the mother. "But you haven't a thing fit to crimp pies with, have you?"

"Who was Moses?" asked a Sunday-school teacher. "He was an ox-driver," said a little boy. "An ox-driver!" repeated the teacher in astonishment. "What put that idea into your head?" "'Cause," replied the boy, "wasn't he found among the bull-rushers?'

We learn from a reliable exchange that a good, healthy hippopotamus is valued at $20,000. Here is an idea for the fashionable girls who lead a $1,000 dog along. Get a hippopotamus and kill the other girls with envy. This suggestion is thrown out without any charge.

At a party one evening, Sully, the painter, was speaking of a belle who was a great favorite. "Ah," said Sully, "she has a mouth like an elephant." "Oh, Mr. Sully, how can you be so rude?' "Rude, ladies, rude! What do you mean? I say she has got a mouth like an elephant, because it is full of ivory."

"Now be a good little boy, Willie," said his mother to him one day, wishing to impress upon him the reward in store for the just, "and when you die you will have a gold harp to play on." "I don't know how to play on a gold harp," he grumbled, "and I don't want nuthin' anyway that I've got to die to git. Let Johnny be good and git the harp, and gimme a drum."

At a London dinner party the other evening the ladies entered one room and the gentlemen another. In each room there was a basket of flowers, and the ladies were asked to make choice of a flower from the basket, the flowers being all different. The gentlemen went through a similar proceeding in another room, and on the ladies entering the drawing room the gentlemen and ladies saw how chance had assorted them.

If Rich

The following lines, which are a paraphrase of Horace's well-known saying:

"Those wights who though the venturous ocean range,
Not their own passions, but the climate, change,"

Impart a lesson to all who think that they would be better and do better if their circumstances were changed. A writer in the Christian Standard brings out the futility of his expectation:

One evening, passing along a crowded street, I heard one boy saying to another, "If I were rich, I wouldn't"——and then the rest of the sentence was lost and I hurried on with the throng.

But I have wondered of an since, how that sentence was finished. Did the boy say,—

"If I were rich, I wouldn't snub my poor relations;" or, "If I were rich, I wouldn't spend all my money on myself;" or, "If I were rich, I wouldn't work any more," or what?

We cannot know, but there is one thing quite certain. Whatever the boy does now that he is poor, he would do if he were rich.

If he is generous now, he would be generous then. If he is mean now, he would be mean then. If he works faithfully now, he would work with fidelity then.

For "he that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much,"

English Elections.

The elections for a new House of Commons took place in Great Britain and Ireland during the fortnight beginning November 24, and ending December 8. The result of these elections was in several respects surprising and interesting.

In the last House of Commons, there were three hundred and fifty-four Liberals, two hundred and thirty-seven Conservatives or Tories, and sixty-one Irish Home Rulers. Thus the Liberals had a majority over the Tories of one hundred and seventeen, and over the Tories and Home Rulers combined, of fifty-six. But it must be added that of the sixty-one Home Rulers, only thirty-five followed the lead of Mr. Parnell, the Irish Nationalist leader. The other twenty-six were practically supporters of the Liberal party.

The Liberals were thus, in the last House, very strong, and the Liberal ministry of Mr. Gladstone was able, for five years, to have its own way in policy and legislation.

The situation is greatly changed by the recent elections. The new House of Commons will contain three hundred and thirty-four Liberals, two hundred and fifty Tories, and eighty-six Home Rulers. Thus the Liberals have lost twenty seats, the Tories have gained thirteen seats, and the Home Rulers have gained twenty-five seats. The new Home Rulers, moreover, are pledged and devoted adherents of Mr. Parnell, to a man; so that the real gain to the Irish Nationalists is fifty-one, and the real loss of the Liberals is fifty-six.

In short, the Liberals in the new House, will only have a majority of eighty-four over their Tory rivals, and the Tories and Home Rulers combined will have a majority of two over the Liberals.

Mr. Parnell and his party, therefore, has achieved his avowed purpose of securing enough Home Rulers in the new House to hold the balance between the Liberals and Tories, and to be able to make terms with one or other from a commanding position.

The greatest, perhaps, of the questions which will come before the new House, is that of the Irish demand for Home Rule. That demand means simply that Ireland shall have a local Parliament, which shall sit in Dublin, and make laws for the local government of the island. The connection Ireland and Great Britain would still, in that case, be maintained by the executive power, in the person of the Lord-Lieutenant, appointed by the Queen.

Since Mr. Parnell can convert, at will, either the Liberals or the Tories into a majority of the House, it is not improbable that some scheme of Irish Home Rule will, at no distant day, be adopted and put into operation. Indeed, both the Liberals and the Tories are considering how large a measure of Home Rule they can safely and successfully grant to the sister country.

Some of the features of the recent elections are interesting. In former times, the greatest strength of the Liberals has always been in the boroughs,—that is in the cities, towns, and villages; while that of the Tories has been in the counties. This time, the position of the parties is exactly reversed. The Tories made their gains in large towns like London, Liverpool, Manchester and Leeds. The Liberal gains on the other hand, came almost wholly from the old Tory strongholds in the counties.

The reason of the latter fact is, that the recent reform bill gave the suffrage to two millions of men of the laboring and the agricultural classes, who for the most part live in the countries; and these new electors seem to have very generally voted for Liberal candidates.

The elections were also notable for the defeat of some prominent men. No less than twelve members of Mr. Gladstone's late ministry were left out of the House, while four members of the present Tory ministry suffered the same fate. The most eminent defeated Liberal was Mr. Childers, who was Mr. Gladstone's Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Marquis of of Lorne, son in-law of the Queen, and lately Governor-General of Canada, was defeated; and so was Jacob Bright, the brother of John Bright.

The curious position in which the elections have placed the three parties in the new House, will undoubtedly give rise to exciting scenes and critical events when that House meets. The general prediction in England, however, is that the life of a House so constituted will be a brief one, and that fresh elections are likely to take place at a not distant day.

Fishing Tackle.

On the principal of preparing for war in time of peace now is the time to overhaul the fishing tackle and put it in readiness for the spring campaign. The rods should receive careful attention and the ferrules tested to see if they have loosened by any change of temperature or by the strain of last season's work. The whippings should be replaced if frayed, and, if necessary the rod should be varnished. If the angler is not expert at this work he should send it to his rod maker whom he knows to be the most expert of all, at least he believes him to be, which is just as well. Reels should be cleaned and oiled, lines and leaders should be tested and if there is any frayed gut in the leader or among the fly snoods cut it out and tie it anew. Fly snoods should be free from all cracks where the gut joins the fly, the most usual place for them to break, and the fly should be re-tied or the gut cut and whipped on tight, with silk. This is pleasant work for winter evenings and brings its reward in finding all things in readiness for the first trip to the streams.

Looking Beyond.

We seldom remember to look above,
While worshipping aver at human clay,
Till the precious treasures of earthly love
Are hid in the shadows of Death away.
Then a sombre veil is lifted aside,
To admit our love, as they pass along.
But what they may find at the other side
Is hid from the eyes of the gazing throng.

Those precious treasures that brighten our lives
Grow brighter still as they vanish for aye,
For Death's deep shadows the spirit survives,
While we shed our grief on the mould of clay.
We toil at our wearisome task each day
Till the lips grow cold and the voice grows dumb
And we drift from the present life away
To the unknown shores of the life to come.

And the mystic touch of the spirit hands
That falls on the heart is the magic link
That guides our feet through the burning sands
Till they rest in peace at the river's brink
And when we are borne by the mighty tide
Away from the grasp of the hands we love,
We humbly trust that the waters may glide
To the hoped-for shores in the realms above.

Jan. 21.

WE regret to have this week to chronicle the death of our worthy citizen, Mr. Robt. Montgomery. He was teken suddenly ill with inflammation of the lungs, and owing to one of the lungs being already almost gone, the disease made rapid progress, and in eight days death claimed its victim. A large number attended the funeral on Sunday.

There is no necessity of passing a sleepless night and annoying the entire househol with that Cough, as West's Cough Syrup will cure you like magic, the best known remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption in its early stages, and all Throat and Lung diseases. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Price 25 cent, 50 cents, and $1.00 per bottle. Jan. 28

MR. JAMES, the celebrated music teacher, has returned to Markdale, and altho' frequent invitations and special inducements were offered him to go to Toronto to teach, he has decided to make Markdale his centre for '86. He has been solicited to take classes in different parts of the country since his return. Markdale will have the first chance, but will have to act promptly if classes are desired.

MR. J. SPARROW last week shipped another carload of cattle to Toronto, and brought back with him one high bred three year old cow and ten well bred ewes for breeding purposes here. The stock was purchased from the farm on which Mr. S. was born in the County of Peel. The farm was recently sold for $10,000. Mr. Sparrow should be encouraged in his stock enterprise.—[Chatsworth News.

THE printed address labels is a complete mode of telling how your subscription stands; for instance if your subscription expires the 1st January, 1886, the label will be marked Jan. '86, and when you renew for a year, or if you have done so, the figures will be changed to Jan. '87. We are anxious that every subscriber should understand the address label, and then there should be very few allow themselves to fall in arrears.

EUPHRASIA AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the above society was held at Dodson's hotel, Rocklyn, on the 14th inst., when the following gentlemen were elected officers for 1886: J. D. Crabtree, president; Thos. Gilray, vice-do. Directors—W. J. Shepherdson, J. Boyce, A. Crabtree, R. Ireland, H. Johnston, G. Crabtree, J. Menary, J. Erskine, J. W. Boyd. Auditors—W. H. Dodson, J. B. Winter, J. L. Wilson, sec-treasurer.

THE annual tea-meeting of Ebenezer church, 11th line Euphrasia, was held on Wednesday evening, 20th and was a decided success The edibles were abundant and toothsome, and the program very interesting. Rev's. W. Casson of Markdale, Thibaudeau of Woodford, Young of Meaford, and McLean of Euphrasia, were the speakers, each of which did no discredit to themselves. The chair was ably filled by James Patterson, Esq., Proceeds $51.—COM.

TONIC SOL-FA.—That the Tonic Sol-fa method is the Best System on Earth for the Vocalist, has been frequently and conclusively proven. This is the united testimony of many of the ablest Teachers of music in Europe and America. As a Vocal method it is Complete, the only true, natural, educational system in use. Such results can not be obtained from any other system. It is complete as a Primary method, but its greatest utility is not fully seen till we come to more Advanced work such as the singing of Classical Choruses. "Methods of Teaching" have been my life study. I know whereof I affirm. J. H. James.

WEDDING BELLS.—A preasant affair in the shape of a wedding took place at Keady on the 21st inst., when Mr. Mathew Hutchinson of British Columbia and Miss Hannah Jane, eldest daughter of James Douglas, Esq., of Derby, were made one. The happy event took place at the residence of the bride's parents where a large attendance of friends and acquaintances were present. Rev. Mr. Ross officiated. The bride and groom were among our most respected young people, and we wish them a happy and prosperous career through life.—COM.

MR. JAMES will give a Lecture and Entertainment in Haskett's Hall on Wednesday evening, Feb. 10th, for the purpose of organizing a class in Note-reading, Singing and Voice-culture. The program will consist of a Lecture on Music in general, Singing and Voice-culture in particular. Criticisms will also be given on different "Systems," "Methods of Teaching," &c. There will be a number of Select Solos and Readings given during the evening. None should neglect this opportunity to learn to read and sing music at sight. Mr. James has been very successful as an Instructor in the art. He is rated among the best Teachers of Singing in Ontario. His terms are low for a teacher of his ability. Join the class.

IT is customary, in some localities, to teach children to think of a text as they drop their pieces of money into the cotribution-box. A certain little girl at Sunday-school, recently, saw the box approaching, and began to search in her memory for a text. She hesitated for a few moments, dropped the dime in the box, and exclaimed, triumphantly: "A fool and his money are soon parted!"

SWELLED NECK.

Mrs. Henry Dobbs, of Berridale, Parry Sound, testifies to a prompt cure of enlarged glands of the neck and sore throat by the internal and external use of Hagyard's Yellow Oil. Yellow Oil is a sure relief for all painful conditions.

WHY is the earth like a school blackboard? Because the children of men multiply upon the face of it.

A MODERN wit defines the difference between men and women: "A man gives forty cents for a twenty-five cent thing he wants, and a woman gives twenty-five cents for a forty-cent thing she does not want."

A WESTERN newspaper is responsible for the following: School-teacher, to a stupid and fat boy: "You are better fed and taught, or else I am mistaken." Stupid Boy: "Yes, I be, 'cause I feeds myself, and you teach me."

"I REMEMBER," said a Detroit boy to his Sunday-school teacher, you told me always to count fifty when angry." "Yes? Well, I'm glad to hear it. It cooled your anger, didn't it?" "You see, a boy he came into our alley and made faces at me and deared me to fight. He was bigger'n me, and I'd have got pulverized, I remember What you said, and began to count." "And you didn't fight?" "No, ma'am. Just as I got to forty-two, my big brother came along, and the way he licked that boy would have made your heart glad. I was going to count fifty and then run."

THE band concert has come and gone, and if there is anything in the old saying "laugh and grow fat," there should be a material increase of that commodity as a result of this concert. The weather was most unpropitious, hindering many from attending, and they missed a treat, for the band always gives a good entertainment, and this was no exception to the rule. It's a delight to listen to Mr. Anderson on any occasion, and it is well worth travelling a hundred miles on foot to hear W. J. Benson; I tell you he's a cracker, and no mistake. It's a mighty big house he can't bring down, and he down'd them all on Friday night. The band gave some good selections and Mr. James' efforts were highly appreciated. Mr. Marsh gave a comic reading from "Mark Twain" which was rich in itself, and well rendered. In fact all the performers did themselves credit, not excepting the chairman, Wm. Brown, Esq. The farce was most amusing and brought rounds of laughter from a delighted audience. We trust our band may go on and prosper, improving themselves, as well as wafting sweet strains of music on the atmosphere of our village from time to time from their brass instruments.

JOHNSON'S NEW HOTEL.—Amongst the new buildings erected in town the past season Johnson's new Hotel holds a conspicuous place. Situate on Barker street within a hundred yards of Poulett, right in the centre of the business part of the town, the handsome brick structure appears to advantage and at once attracts attention. He has for some time past been busy fitting it up, and this week has moved into the new house, where he has one of the handsomest and most conveniently arranged hotels in town. In order to afford good cellarage, the ground floor is reached by broad steps leading into an ample hall. On either side of this are snug sitting rooms, and to the rear are the large dining room, bar, etc. Ascending the stairs we find on the first floor two handsome parlors in the front, and on this floor and the next are about twenty fine bedrooms, well ventilated, opening into commodious halls, and well furnished. Last, though not least, is the ample kitchen, situated to the rear on the ground floor, which Mr. Johnson rightly judges to be the most important department of the house, and he has provided every facility for getting up first-class meals for his guests. Mr. Johnson has long been favorably known amongst farmers and the travelling public, and in his handsome new premises he will no doubt do a larger business than ever. —[Owen Sound Times.

HOARSENESS AND LOSS OF VOICE.

Public speakers and singers are often distressed with hoarseness, and much danger is lurking in the bronchial pipes. Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam is a prompt remedy for the irritation, and cures all throat and lung difficulties.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"Am Pickles Smith in de hall to-night?" anxiously inquired the President as the notes of the triangle died away.

"Yes, sah," was the prompt response. "You will please step forward; I hev a few words to say to you."

Brother Smith walked forward in an uncertain way, wondering whether he was to be complimented for cleaning the snow off the sidewalk, or censured for trading off an old wheelbarrow for a sixth dog, and the President said:

"Brudder Smith, it am come to my knowledge dat you believe you has a mishun on airth. You believe it am your solemn dooty to be on hand at ebery funeral in your nayburhood, whether friends or strangers, an' offer your sarvices an' consolashun. You stand ready to knock off work in de day time, an' to rout out of bed at night, an' it seems a long week to you when somebody isn't on his dyin' bed or on de move to'rds de graveyard."

"Yes, sah," humbly replied Pickles. "I'm not gwine to ax you to quit, Brudder Smith, but Ize gwine to tell you dat, of all pussons on airth except criminals, de man or de woman wid a mishun am an enemy of mankind. De woman who emagines dat de Lawd put her on airth to relieve de poo' an hungry will do mo' harm by feedin' lazy loafers and profeshunal tramps fur a y'ar, dans he kin offset in five by relieving genuine destitooshun.

"De man who emagines dat his mishun am to spread de light of de Gospel by singin' an' praylin' on de public streets, will be de cause of mo' cus-words, an' breed mo' ill-will dan his work for religun can compensate.

"De woman whose mishun am to carry from ten to thirty poo' fam'lies frew de winter may lay up credit fur herself in Heaben fur good intenshuns, but she am also layin' out work fur de polesce an' de courts.

"Brudder Smith, you am one of our oldest an' best members, an' I doan' want to hurt yer feelin's. Since you took up dat mishun your woodpile has run short, your rent gone behind, an' your fam'ly looks run down. If I were you I'd drap it. I'd bring myself to believe dat de mishun of a mar'd man was to take good keer of his fam'ly and lay by a few dollars fur a rainy day. Pull de stockin' off de feet of a woman wid a mishun an' you'd find holes in de heels. Go into de home of a man wid a mishun an' you'll find a sufferin' wife, half-fed children an' a hat full of dunnin' letters. Brudder Smith, you may return to your seat."

NOT ENTERTAINED.

The Hon. Whyfore Pillsbury sent to the Secetary's desk a resolution declaring it to be the sentiment of the Lime-Kiln Club that the United States should purchase the Sandwich Islands at once.

"What would be de object of purchasin' dose islands?" blandly inquired the President.

"I dunoo, sah."

"Am you eber bin dar?"

"No, sah."

"Am you eber gwine dar?"

"No, sah."

"Do you know de locality of dose islands?"

"No, sah."

"You may sot down. Your resolushun will not be entertained. When de time arroves fur dis club to advise Uncle Sam to buy real estate we well telephone you."

Whyfore sat down, but he was not crushed. He privately informed Elder Toots that it looked like a trick to deprive him of prestige, and that he intended to write the resolution on a postal card and forward it to Washington.

MADE A REPORT.

The Committee on Explosives made a report through the Chairman. Torpedo Johnson, which startled even the oldest members. The committee had been asked to investigate and report on the query: "Suppose that 100 pounds of nitro-glycerine was exploded under Paradise Hall? What would be the effect?"

The report stated that, after a series of careful experiments on boxes, barrels and wood sheds, the committee had come to the conclusion that—

1. The hall would be lifted 200 feet into the air.

2. In striking the earth again the jar would knock down every stove-pipe, smash most of the relics in the museum, and shake off at least fifty yards of plastering.

3. The President and other officers occupying the center of the hall would be instantly killed.

4. Giveadam Jones, Samuel Shin, Shindig Watkins and the Hon. Cabiff would be blown into Canada and probably more or less injured.

5. Every almanac in the library would be totally destroyed, the new two-shilling water pail blown to atoms and serious doubts existed if the lamp chimney would bear the strain.

Several members started for the door before the report was fairly ended, but the President rapped in a vigorous manner and called out:

"Ebery one o' you' uns sot down! De fust man who tries to evade bein' blown up by 100 pounds of nitro-glycerine will receive mortal injuries from another seurce! De report am 'cepted an' 'dopted.'"

THEY ARE "SOT."

The Rev. Penstock wanted to inquire, on behalf of 6 000 000 colored people, if the two bear traps owned by the club were nightly set at the lower doors and in readiness to protect the hall from evil-disposed people.

Samuel Shin, on whom this duty devolves, was happy to inform the Reverend that the traps were nightly "sot" and baited with plug tobacco.

AMENDED.

On motion of Waydown Bebee by-law No. was 63,894 amended so as to read: "Any person coming before this club with a slave or ointment warranted to cure chilblains shall not be permitted to experiment until he has given bonds in the sum of $25, and the first experiments shall be made on the feet of members who are in arrears for dues."

CAN'T DO IT.

Chancery Jones, Attorney-General for the club, then announced that he had looked up the law in the case and satisfied himself that any member who, by accident or mistake, dropped a silver quarter into the contribution box instead of a button, could not reclaim the same except by burglarising the safe.

The meeting then went home.

HOUSEHOLD.

"DON'TS" FOR WIVES

Don't disturb your husband while he is reading his morning or evening paper by asking foolish questions. He may be only reading the latest scandal or divorce suit, but he is just as much interested as though it were foreign news or market reports. Be patient, and when he comes across anything he thinks you can comprehend perhaps he may read it to you.

Don't communicate unpleasant news or ask a favor before eating. The heart is not easily touched when the stomach is empty.

Don't ever tell a man he is good-looking. Some other woman probably will sometime and in that case he won't know that her opinion concurs with yours. He carries a pocket hand glass, and he will shortly become addicted to pejamas.

Don't ever tell a man he has pretty legs Men who have been known to bear up under facial compliments fail completely when they realize their legs are noticeably good.

Don't put the morning paper at the bottom of the pile, and don't have more than a dozen different places for the button-hook.

Don't impose upon your husband just because he is good enough to assist you a little in your housework Don't leave the stove handle on the red-hot stove, and don't ask him to empty the ash-hod. Draw a line on the ash-hod, and don't run a free horse to death.

Don't gather all his receipts and notes that he has put carefully away on the sitting-room table,—and tuck them in the fire the moment his back is turned.

Don't monoplize every hook in the closet. Graciously tender him one nail for his very own—and then, in mercy, hang your "Mother Hubbard," your pelerine, your shopping-bag and your bonnet some other place

Don't be inexplicit in giving directions. When you ask him to go up stairs for your portemonnaie, tell him it is either on the table, or in the further corner of the left-hand side of the upper bureau drawer, or in the pocket of your brown dress in the closet. He will have no trouble in finding it—if you can tell him just where it is, especially the pocket.

Don't ask him where he has been the moment he enters the house, or where he is going if he starts out for a walk before breakfast. It nettles him, and men hate to have such pointed questions sprung upon them. Besides that, we live under a free flag.

Don't ask him to walk the floor with the baby half the night. A man who tramps industriously around the billiard table three nights in the week or buys an admission ticket to the opera can't be expected to be on duty at home the other three nights. Have mercy on him and give the man an opportunity to recuperate.

Don't waste your breath in useless vituperation against his favorite chum. Cultivate the chum yourself—ostensibly—when your husband is not around, and matters will assume a different aspect.

Don't put pins in your curl papers or let your crimping pins dangle on your forehead. They are abominations and feminine implements of warfare that men despise.

Don't leave hair in the comb or your neck curls where they will stick to his hair brush. Don't put a long hair in the soap or in his tooth-brush purposely.

Don't mend his hosiery with cotton having knots in it larger than a pea.

Don't scold him because he leaves ashes in his pipe. One of the privileges of a married man is to leave an old pipe full ashes in just the a position to empty the contents on the window sill or the mantelpiece the moment it is touched.

Don't indulge in flights of temper when your husband suggests how his mother did. If he objects to having eggs boiled in the tea kettle, and prefers them washed previous to cooking, endeavor to please him by indulging him in his fancies. In the meantime bring your sons up as carefully as you can, and when they are married, you yourself will doubtless be held up as an example of virtue; and revenge is sweet.

Don't be too prodigal in the use of kindling wood. There is no fruit of his toil that a man guards as jealously as he does his kindling wood. He would fain put it where thieves break not through and steal. So, just because you have free access to it, don't burn up enough to last a week in one day.

Choice Recipes.

JUMBLES.—Halt a pound of butter, half a pound of sugar, half a pound of flour, two eggs. Cream butter and sugar together, then add the eggs without having been beaten; stir all well together, then add the flour. Roll out with your hands in round strips half an inch thick and two inches long, and join the two ends together, forming them into rings. Bake in a quick oven in buttered tins, keeping them a good distance apart. They are very nice.

CREAM PUFFS FOR DAISY.—The following is very nice; for a family of four I use but half: Stir into a pint of boiling water three cups of flour and one cup of butter rubbed smooth. When cool stir in five eggs and bake in small tins, half-filled, about fifteen minutes. Cream: Two eggs, one cup of sugar, a small cup of flour boiled with a pint of milk until thick. Flavor to the taste. Split the puffs and spread the cream between. Will some one please give me a good recipe for chicken salads?

TO MAKE YEAST.—Take three or four good-sized potatoes, pare and grate them in a coarse grater; have a kettle of boiling water, pour it on the mush until you have two quarts of the potato starch; then add one tablespoonful of salt, the same of sugar. Let it cool, then put a cup of good yeast, or dissolve one cake of compressed yeast, add, and place it where it will be warm, but not hot.

BREAKFAST ROLLS.—One quart of flour, into which a little salt and two teaspoonfuls baking powder have been sifted, half a tablespoonful each each of butter, and lard, one pint milk. Rub together the butter, lard, and flour, then add the milk. After thoroughly mixing, put the dough on a board, roll it out about half an inch thick, and cut with a floured tumbler. Double each cake, and bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes.

INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Not a Hospital, but a pleasant Remedial Home, organized with

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

And exclusively devoted to the treatment of all Chronic Diseases.

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward elements of nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we have been enabled to originate and perfect a system of determining, with the greatest accuracy, the nature of chronic diseases, without seeing and personally examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained through it, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." By R. V. Pierce, M. D. 1000 pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our terms for treatment and all particulars.

MARVELOUS SUCCESS.

SIGNS OF DISEASE.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES.

Recognizing the fact that no great institution dedicated exclusively to the treatment of chronic diseases, would meet the needs of the afflicted of our land, without the most perfect, complete and extensive provision for the most improved treatment of diseases of the air-passages and lungs, such as Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, we have made this branch of our institution one of the leading Departments. We have every kind of useful instrument for examining the organs involved, such as rhinoscopes, laryngoscopes, stethoscopes, spirometers, etc., etc., as well as all of the most approved kinds of apparatus for the application of sprays, fumigations, atomizations, pulverizations, inhalations, and all other forms of approved medicinal applications.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung diseases, viz.: A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, postpaid, ten cents; A treatise on Chronic Nasal Catarrh, price, postpaid, two cents.

PILE TUMORS.

PILES, FISTULA IN ANO, and other diseases affecting the region of the lower bowel, are largely treated, and with marvelous success, by specialists, who give their whole time to the study and treatment of this class of affections. We never fail to cure pile tumors, however large. When the patient can come here for treatment, we will guarantee a cure.

RUPTURE.

Fortunately for suffering humanity, a method of treatment has been perfected and thoroughly tested in our institutions, by which in from six to fifteen days radical and perfect cures of the worst forms of piles are effected without causing any severe suffering. Send ten cents in stamps for our large illustrated Treatise on Piles.

Hernia (Breach), or Rupture, no matter of how long standing, of what size, or what the age of the patient may be (if not under four years), is speedily and radically cured in every case undertaken by our specialists, without the knife, without dependence upon trusses, without pain, and without danger.

THROW AWAY TRUSSES.

There is no longer any need of wearing clumsy, awkward, chafing, old trusses, which, at best, give only partial relief, which never cure, but often inflict great injury and induce inflammation and strangulation, from which thousands annually die.

NOT SAFE.

There is no safety in depending upon any kind of truss, though, no doubt, every man who has suffered the agonies of a strangulated hernia, and died, thought himself safe. Both the rupture and the truss keep up a mental strain and induce nervous debility and various organic weaknesses of the kidneys, bladder, and associate organs.

CURES GUARANTEED in every case undertaken. Can any sufferer ask for greater inducements than these?

Notwithstanding the great number of ruptures treated in the three years past, many of them of immense size and of such a character that no other plan of treatment could possibly have succeeded, every case to which this perfected system of treatment has been thoroughly applied, has been perfectly cured. Only a few days residence at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute is necessary.

Abundant references, by permission of those whom we have cured, will be furnished to any one wishing to call upon or write them.

An illustrated treatise on Rupture sent to any address upon receipt af ten cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION.

Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained unparalleled success. Many of the diseases affecting the liver and other organs contributing in their functions to the process of digestion, are very obscure, and are not infrequently mistaken by both laymen and physicians for other maladies, and treatment is employed directed to the removal of a disease which does not exist. Our Complete Treatise on diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs. Our specialists have acquired, through a vast and varied experience, great expertness in determining the exact nature of each case, and, hence, have been successful in nicely adapting their remedies for the cure of each individual case.

The treatment of diseases of the urinary organs having constituted a prominent branch, or specialty, of our practice at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, and, being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete but concise work on the nature and curability of these maladies, we have published a large illustrated treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES.

INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved marvelous success. These are fully treated of in our illustrated pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. It includes numerous testimonials from well-known people. Sent by mail for ten cents in stamps. Send for it at once.

STRICTURE.

STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULÆ.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary fistulæ, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treatise on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience, is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in postage stamps, for a large, illustrated treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES.

Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, arising from overstudy, excesses, and other causes, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with a measure of success heretofore regarded as impossible. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN.

So alarmingly prevalent are those chronic diseases peculiar to females, and so famous have our institutions become for their cure that we were long ago obliged to create a special department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of these cases. The physicians and surgeons in this Department have made these delicate diseases their sole study.

Hundreds are brought to our institutions from far distant States on beds, and they go home well and strong. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Every important case (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) has the benefit of a full Council, composed of skilled specialists. Our Department and rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute are so arranged as to be very private, and free from the annoyances so common in other institutions. Send ten cents in postage stamps for our large Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates.

DELICATE DISEASES.

Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary vital losses, and kindred affections, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

To those acquainted with our institutions it is hardly necessary to say that the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with the branch establishment located at No. 3 New Oxford Street, London, England, have for many years, enjoyed the distinction of being the most largely patronized and widely celebrated institutions in the world for the treatment and cure of those affections which arise from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices.

We, many years ago, established a special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced medical men.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY.

We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing that no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Many who suffer from these terrible diseases contract them innocently. Why any medical man interested on doing good, and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there are probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little.

We fully agree with the celebrated Dr. Bartholow, who says, "I think it a reproach to our profession that this subject has been permitted, in a measure by our own indifference, to pass into the hands of unscrupulous pretenders. Because the subject is disagreeable, competent physicians are loath to be concerned with it. The same unnecessary fastidiousness causes the treatment of this malady to be avoided in private practice."

We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

Our Complete and Illustrated Treatise on these subjects is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES A SPECIALTY.—Although we have, in the preceding paragraphs, made mention of some of the special ailments to which particular attention is given by the specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, yet the institution abounds in skill, facilities, and apparatus for the successful treatment of every form of chronic ailment, whether requiring for its cure medical or surgical means.

All letters of inquiry or of consultation should be addressed to "Death from exposure" was the verdict recently rendered by a Helena (M. T.) jury on the body of a horse thief who had been hanged by vigilantes.

Gounod, the well-known operatic composer, has commenced a new oratorio on the subject of St. Francis d'Assisi, the thirteenth century priest who preached to the birds.

The mild weather preceding the opening of the year was very conducive to the health and strength of game birds, which are now unusually abundant, at least throughout New England.

In the theatre at Marseilles a gentleman seated in the stalls drew a revolver from his pocket and blew out his brains. He was in love with an actress who was performing while the deed was committed.

The farmers in the neighborhood of New London are excited over the supposed discovery of petroleum fountains, which, if it prove true, will interest geologists amazingly, as that whole region is underlaid with primitive granite!

To the list of funny typographical errors we must add the announcement of the Brooklyn Union that "at Worcester, Mass. a cremation society has just been organized, with a list of officers whose names are significant of wealth and intelligence." The Union meant to say "cremation."

The walls of the famous mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople are said to be sadly in need of restoration. The cubes of mosaic constantly fall out, or, worse, are picked out to be sold to strangers, and many of the arcades and lesser walls would tumble down had they not been rudely shored up.

At this moment it takes twenty-two policemen in relays to watch Lord Kenmare's mansion at Killarney. Each policeman, by the time all is told, costs nearly £100 a year, so the Government (that is, the taxpayers of Great Britain and Ireland) are at this moment paying £2,000 a year for the protection of Lord Kenmare's mansion.

The sheriff of Forsythe county, Ga., who carried on a circus, and whose inability to manage the animals caused much amusement to the employees, has gotten out of the predicament by disposing of the menagerie at auction sale. An elephant brought $1,300, other animals in proportion down to parrots, which went off at $1 each. Monkeys commanded $2 apiece.

It is proposed to erect a new Bourse in Paris. The one which at present exists is commodious and excellently situated. One of its most peculiar features is the daily gathering in the square around it of men who rant by the hour together on political topics, holding forth something in the style of street preachers or stump orators. Crowds collect around them.

Dakota is crying aloud for spinsters, and the editor of the Fargo Argus says: "We can accomodate 10,000 girls with husbands in Dakota on ninety days' notice. We have published 2,000 letters from as many young women, and made as many matches." With all this talk it is strange to learn that Major Edwards, editor-in-chief, and Major Plumley, managing editor of the Argus, are both unmarried, although they have looked over the 2,000 love letters.

The boar hunting, which has only been established at Arcachon, in France, for two years, attracts a good many sportsmen, both French and English. It is, however, a hard and serious task for men, horses, and dogs. The chase seldom lasts less than three hours, and often more. The last boar killed weighed 300 pounds, and put seven hounds hors de combat before he received the death blow from the master. His head now adorns the wall of the club at Arcachon, and the tusks are six inches long and as sharp as a knife.

The Drunkard's Raggit Wean.

(Sung to the air of "Castles in the Air.")

I saw bit raggit laddie gang wan'rin through the street,
Shiverin' 'mang the snaw wi' his wee hackit feet,
Greetin' i' the cauld blast, greetin' wi' the pain;
Wha's the puir wee callan? he's a drunkard's raggit wean.

He stans at ilka door, an' he keeks wi' wistfu' e'e,
To see the crowd aroun' the fire a' laughin' loud wi' glee,
He daurna venture ben, though his heart be o'er wae fain,
For he maunna play wi' ither bairns, the drunkard's raggit wean.

Now the wee bit, bairnie, his heart is unco fou,
His head is blawin' cauld, and he's drookit through and through,
He's greetin' for his mither, an' he wan'ers whaur she's gane,
Ach! his mither she forgets her puir wee raggit wean.

He kens nae faither's love, an' he kens nae mither's care,
To soothe his wee bit sorrows, or kame his tautit hair.
Like him when he waukens, or smooth his bed at e'en,
For ah! he fears his faither's face, the drunkard's raggit wean.

Hey the wee laddie, wee guileless an' nae young,
Mean that lea's the faither's tip 'ill settle on his tongue;
Aye the first words his mither speaks his infant lips 'ill stain,

A HOUSE COSTING $2,500.

Figure 1 shows a perspective view, and figure 2 and 3 the first and second story plans of a country or village house, in modern style. The plan is so arranged, that a sitting-room or library, and a bed-room can be added when desired, as shown by the dotted lines on the first-story plan. In which case, the window which now lights the main hall on the first story can be changed to a door, and this have direct communication from the hall. There is a cellar under the hall, dining-room, and kitchen, seven feet in height, with outside steps and plank stairs accessible from the main hall, in the first story. The cellar is excavated to a depth of four feet below the grade line, and the loose earth rammed against the walls, after they are dry, and the top is sloped so that all water may run off. The loose earth not required in grading, is removed from the premises. The cellar is provided with windows which have heavy plank frames, and an outside double-battened door, hung with heavy strap hinges, put on with screws. This door is reached from the outside by flag-stone steps set on brick risers, all resting from the outside by stone dowels made and hung in the usual way. The entire cellar bottom, and across the front, covered with concrete three inches deep, put down in board moulds, and well rammed in place, with the top of the concrete left smooth and level.

FIG. 1.—PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

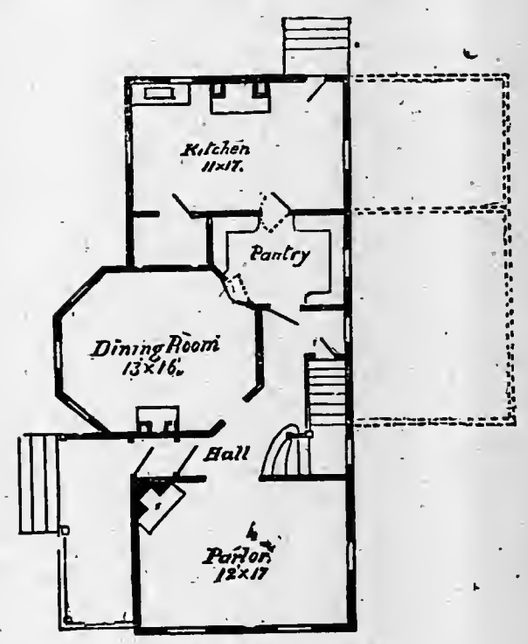

FIG. 2.—PLAN OF FIRST STORY.

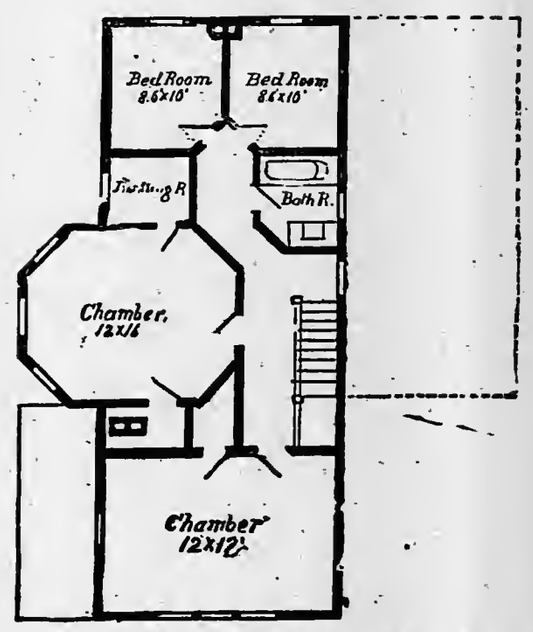

FIG. 3.—PLAN OF SECOND STORY.

The foundation walls are of large, flat stones, bedded in cement mortar and properly leveled. The foundation walls and chimneys are of good, hard-burned brick laid in cement mortar. The outside of the foundation walls below grade, are plastered with good cement mortar; the chimneys for the parlor and dining-room are brought together in the closet on second story, with all flues separate and continuous to the top. Iron thimbles and heater-pipes set as required. Zinc safes for the stove pipes which connect with the chimney in the closet on second story, are set in the partition walls.

The chimneys have neatly axed blue-stone caps. Cellar, areas, door, and windows have blue-stone flag sills, all set in good cement mortar. All exposed brick-work is laid in cement mortar, stained red, and at the finish the whole cleaned with dilute acid and oiled with two coats best linseed oil, stained with Venetian red. Glazed tile facings and hearth to all fire-places, carefully set in cement, the same supported upon four-inch brick trimmer arches, leveled on top with concrete.

The attic is left unfinished. All closets are plastered in two coats; all other rooms and halls, pantry, and store-room, are hard-finished on two coats brown mortar and seasoned lath. The frame of the house is of sound, seasoned spruce timber of the following sizes:

Girders 6 by 8 inches.
Sills, 4 by 8 inches.
Floor beams, 2 by 9 inches.
Header and trimmers, 4 by 9 inches.
Cellar beams, 1 by 6 inches.
Plates, 4 by 6 inches.
Outside studding, 2 by 4 inches.
Veranda sills, 4 by 6 inches.
Veranda plates, 4 by 6 inches.
Ladder studding, 2 by 4 inches.
Door and window studding, 4 by 4 inches.
Rafters, 2 by 6 inches.
Hip and valley rafters, 2 by 8 inches.
Veranda floor beams, 2 by 8 inches.
Veranda Rafters, 2 by 6 inches.
Veranda ceiling joists, 2 by 3 inches.

The beams and principal timbers of second story are trussed with wrought iron rods of one inch square, with nuts at each end, and double cross-bridging not above six feet apart, well nailed and fitted in place. The angles of all partitions are firmly anchored at their joinings, to prevent the cracking of plaster. The first story is ten feet in height; the second story, nine feet all in the clear. The outside walls are sheated with sound, surfaced hemlock, thoroughly nailed to each stud, and are covered with heavy builder's paper; and the lower story to the belt course is clap-boarded with clear white pine six-inch beveled clap boards. The roofs are covered with one-by-three inch shingle lath. The roofs, gables, and side walls of the second story are shingled with best-quality white pine shingles laid five inches to the weather.

The cellar window frames have one and one-half inch jambs and two-inch rebated plank sills, and one and one-half inch sash, glazed with single-thick glass and hung with strong, malleable iron hinges, and provided with suitable locks and fastenings. All other window frames have one and one-eighth inch jambs and two-inch rebated sills, with one and one-eighth inch bead hanging stiles, all of white pine. Casements of bedroom sash and one-half inch thick, glazed with single-thick glass and hung with brass-gilt cast iron fasteners. Sills and pocket linings to match. All other sashes are one and one-half inch thick, glazed with double-thick American glass, and hung with cast iron weights and best hempen cord. Outside blinds for all except cellar windows.

The corner boards, gables, cornices, eaves, and all other finish outside, veranda posts, railing, steps, etc., are all of white pine, as shown on the drawings. The floor throughout are of kiln-dried yellow pine well driven together and nailed to each beam. Veranda floors laid with simply jointed edges. The newels, rails, and balusters of the main stairs are of cherry, the shelves of all closets are of white wood or white pine. The water-closet seat and top of bath tub is of cherry. All doors of white pine. Those on the first story, five-panelled, and moulded both sides; those on the second story, four-panelled, and moulded both sides, except closet doors of the second story, which are moulded on one side only. All other inside wood-work of clear, kiln-dried yellow pine; stained mahogany color in parlor, dining-room, and hall; all other rooms left in the natural color of the wood. All inside wood-work to have one coat of wood-filler, and two coats of some good preservative rubbed smooth.

All exterior metal and wood-work is painted two coats patent prepared paint, in shades of warm brown. Pantry and closets have suitable wardrobe hooks. Hardwood saddles to all doors, with rubbed-tipped stops where required.

The front door has a bronze faced mortise door lock, with bronze knobs, roses, drops, and escutcheons. Closet doors have rim locks; all others have brass-faced mortise locks, and white porcelain knobs. Front door has bronze, loose-joint butts; all others have japanned, iron, loose-joint butts. Cresting and finials, galvanized iron. All flashings and linings of gutters best, I. C. charcoal tin. A gong bell, with bell pull to match front door knob, a suitable furnace, with registers and pipes complete, a kitchen range, a forty-gallon galvanized iron boiler, galvanized iron sink, twelve-ounce planished copper bath tub, and wash-out water closet, with all the necessary cocks, traps, vent pipes and soil pipes, all left in complete working order. Estimate of cost, $2,500 to $3,000.

"How Long?"

The English tongue is at the best sadly confusing and contradictory to foreigners. If the foreigner be a German, the probabilities are that it will take him a long time to emerge from his linguistic fogs. During a certain trial it was thought important by counsel to determine the length of time that two quarters of beef, two hogs and one sheep remained in an express wagon in front of plaintiff's store before they were taken away by the defendant.

The witness under examination was a German, whose knowledge of English was rather limited.

Counsel—State to the jury how long it was after you took the meat from the store and put it in the wagon until it was taken away.

Witness—Now I shoost can't told dat. I dinks bout twelve feet. I not say nearer as dat.

Counsel—You don't understand me. How long was it from the time the meat left the store and was put into the wagon before it was taken away by the defendant?

Witness—Now I don'd see what you ax dat for. Dar vagon he vas back up mit der sidewalk, and dat is shoost so long as it vas. You tell me ev you pleeze how long der sidewalk vas. Dan feet? Dwelve feet? Den I tells you how long.

Counsel—I don't want to find out how long the sidewalk was, but I wish to know (speaking very slowly) how—long—this—meat—was—in—the—wagon—before—it—was—taken—away.

Witness—Oh py cracious, I don'd sold my meat dat vay! I don'd measured meat, not yet! I veigh it already. But I dinks dat meat vas 'bout dree foot long.

Counsel (desperately)—Look here, I want to know how long it was before the meat was taken away after it was put in the wagon.

Witness (looking knowingly at counsel)—Now you try and ged me in a scrape. Dat mead was shoost so long in der vagon as it vas in der shop. Dat's all I told you. Dat mead was dead mead. He don'd grow no longer in ten dousan' year—not mooch!

Counsel—That will do.

Something Good in Old Fashions.

Mrs. Agassiz, in her charming "Life of Professor Agassiz," gives an account of local customs in his early home in Switzerland, and of the personal profit he derived from them. It reveals an educating power in some of these old customs, which has been lost in the improvement of our modern life. She says:

"In Swiss villages it was the habit in those days for the trades-people to go from house to house in their different vocations. The shoemaker came two or three times a year, with all his materials, and made shoes for the whole family by the day.

"The tailor came to fit them for garments, which he made in the house. The cooper arrived before vintage, to repair old barrels and hogsheads, or to make new ones, and to replace their worn-out hoops; in short, to fit up the cellar for the coming season."

The influence of such visits on children gifted with imitative skill may be easily imagined. Young Louis was a sharp observer. He watched the shoemaker and tailor to see how their work was done, and was bound to do it himself in some fashion.

He acquired a good deal of skill in all departments. He could cut and put together a pair of shoes for his sister's dolls as well as an expert, had enough skill as a tailor to be equal to all emergencies in school and university life, and was able to make a miniature kennel perfectly water-tight. He was accustomed to attribute his skill in manipulation in later life to the training of eye and hand gained in his childish imitation of the village mechanics.

A Cure For Drunkenness.

The Cure of Drunkenness is a task with which the regular practitioner has been unable to cope. Nine-tenths of mankind look upon drunkenness as a social vice, which a man may overcome by force of will. Drunkenness is a bad habit we all admit, in the moderate drinker. In the confirmed drunkard it becomes disease of the nervous system. The medical treatment of this disease consists in the employment of remedies that act directly upon those portions of the nervous system which, when diseased, cause lunacy, dementia, and the drinking habit. Remedies must be employed that will cure the appetite for strong drink, steady the trembling hand, revive the lagging spirit, balance the mind, etc. The nervous system of the dram drinker being all unstrung or shattered, must be given a nutriment that will take the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevent the physical and moral prostration that often follows a sudden breaking off from the use of alcoholic drinks. Lubon's medicine may be given in tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Those of our readers who are interested in this subject, should send their address for Lubon's Treatise, in book form, on drunkenness, opium, morphine and kindred habits, which will be mailed free to any address, when stamp is inclosed for postage. LETTER POSTAGE.

The question of reducing the rate of postage on letters has been considered at various periods by the Post Master General and the Government, but they have as yet been unable to see their way clear to make the very desirable change. It appears strange at first thought, that Canadians are required to pay three cents postage on a letter to the States, while they can send theirs to us for two, and it is just as strange that the American publishers have to pay postage on their papers sent to regular subscribers, while the Canadian publisher has his papers carried free.

There is no doubt the Americans can better afford to carry letters at a rate of two cents than the Canadian authorities, for the simple reason that the Dominion of Canada has a larger geographical area than the United States, while their population is ten to our one, so that the cost of carrying mails and maintaining the postal department in Canada is much higher than that on the other side compared with the revenue derived. It is of course intended that the Post-office Department should be self-sustaining or as nearly so as possible, yet we consider that were the rate lowered from three to two cents per half ounce, (the United States is two cents for one oz.) the increase in the number of letters together with letters that would be used where post cards are now made to do duty, would go a great way in making up the difference in revenue, and furthermore we are of opinion that the postage should be put on newspapers. We can see no just reason why newspapers should be carried entirely free of postage. We expect that our thousands of papers should be carried to their destination with care and dispatch, and should be willing to contribute to the department that runs the machine. It would be money out of the average publisher's pocket to pay postage on papers as per regulations of three years ago, and have a reduction of letter postage to two cents, yet it would be the greatest benefit to the greatest number, and would therefore have our support.

The matter will likely come up for further consideration at the coming session of the Dominion Parliament, and we earnestly hope to see the desired change, putting us on an equal footing with our American cousins, as we are now equal, if not ahead, of them in other respects.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

January 19th, 1886.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—Recently I observed in your columns that some of our township fathers in council assembled at Owen Sound, had under consideration a motion that should have passed a dozen years ago.

A more competent inspector of schools has been long called for.

In sixteen years experience as a teacher in this county—fourteen of them in the South Riding—I do not remember one original or valuable idea emanating from the P. S. I. that would help the teacher to teach, or the learner to learn.

Some of the East Grey representatives think that it does not follow because we have an incompetent, that they have one, and that there is nothing but "hearsay" to condemn him.

I have met him a few times as an examiner, the last was in '76, when I noticed about twenty gross errors in pronunciation in his reading of a page of the fourth book (dictation for those writing second class papers). Take, as a sample, Atchilles for Achilles, two errors; legends for legends; coach for couch.

Such evidences of illiteracy we may expect to find in the speech an Old Country "clod-hopper," but not from an inspector of the rising and intelligent Co. of Grey.

It is well known that the present Inspectors cannot meet the requirements of the Educational Department. I have heard several intelligent teachers affirm that they would be plucked in a Third class examination. I have no doubt but that a compulsory Second would cause them to "step down and out."

It is self-evident that many, both in and out of the council, regard two of the Inspectors at least as altogether incompetent, neither nature nor education nor "experience" has been able to redeem them from downright inefficiency.

Every ratepayer ought to be obliged to Dr. Christoe for his motion. He and Mr. Gamey and others must have felt the urgent need for better inspectors.

The passing of pupils at entrance and other examinations is little owing to the Inspectors and a good deal to the ability and energy of the teachers our Solous should make a note here.

Yours truly,
F. W.

Our village requires a constable. Who did I hear saying that John Lilburn would fill the bill? Come Johny, get your handy cuffs.

You noticed our village band in your last issue, as having serenaded our friend Mr. Mercer. It was rather a misfortune to our band, as they got all broke up, or rather their instruments, and will not be in readiness for an emergency. Three more on the tapis, a farmer, a carpenter and railroader. The band will surely have their funds replenished.

From a correspondent.

Not very long since, a wedding was to take place in our village: everything was prepared—the cake baked, the fatted calf killed, the hands asked, and all ready; even the day came and the train which was to bring the groom arrived, but no groom. The next train was waited for, and came, but still the principal party was wanting, and the company had to break up. The faithless one has not yet turned up. It is a shame for any person to break trust in such a manner. There is likely however to be two real weddings in town e'er long. We trust they will do it up Brown this time; if not, our citizens will begin to think there is not much Virtue in the business.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Euphrasia Council.

The members elect of the township council of the township of Euphrasia, for the year 1886, being, Thos. Gilray Esq., Reeve; Wm. Fawcett, Esq., Deputy-Reeve. James Boyd, James Erskine, and Henry Hurd, Esqs., Councillors.

Said members elect, having assembled at Dodson's Hotel, village of Rocklyn, at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday, the 18th day of January, 1886, made and subscribed their declarations of qualification and office in due form, deposited the same with the clerk, and took their seats at the council board.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed. W. H. Dodson, on motion of the Reeve, and J. L. Wilson, on behalf of the council, were appointed auditors at a salary of $12 each, and a by-law passed accordingly.

Robert Myles was appointed assessor at a salary of $100, and a by law passed accordingly.

The Reeve and Deputy-Reeve were appointed a committee to enquire into the validity of the Treasurer's sureties (in compliance with statute).

A. T. Buchanan, A. C. Paterson and D. R. Ellis were appointed members of the local board of health to act in conjunction with the Reeve and Clerk.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay to the deputy-returning officers at last municipal election for their own services, and that of their poll clerks as follows, viz: Nicholas Hewson, $7.10; James Struthers, Esq, $7.50; Nathaniel Curry, $7.10; Daniel Silverthorn, $6.70; Thomas Ellis, $7.00; George Crabtree, $6.00; also to R. Dunlop, clerk, for services in connection with said election, $20.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay for the use of buildings required as polling stations at last municipal election as follows, viz: School house in Union S. S. No. 4, $2; school house in S. S. No. 14, $2; school house in S. S. No. 15, $2; school house in S. S. No. 9, $2; Orange Hall, Kimberley $2; Carpenter's shop at Rocklyn, $2.

The County Treasurer was requested to strike off from his books $10.32, charged on non-resident roll against the W½ of lot 6, in the 2nd con. for 1885, and the township Treasurer ordered to receive $7.32, being said amount minus $3 charged for statute labor, as it is shown that the statute labor has been performed.

$5 charged to William Kernahan for statute labor struck off collector's roll, as it is now shown that the labor has been performed.

The Reeve was authorized to get plan and specification for a new Town Hall made out.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz: A. Sunter, $1, printing; J. Clugston, 50 cents, services rendered; J. Falls, $3, fitting up agricultural hall for use at last nomination; Richard Millar, $25, land taken for road purposes; R. Dunlop, $10, to pay for printing ballot papers; G. Cruikshank, $9.25, repairing road scrapers; A. McCauley, $1, repairing crossway.

Council adjourned until Monday, the 1st of February next.

YOUNG FOLKS

SLIPPERS.

"Sh-h-h-h now! Somebody might hear."

"No, they won't. Listen, Uncle Phil. Me and Susie want to buy a pair of slippers for grandfather, handsome ones you know—for a New Year's present. We're going to put our money together, because one of us hasn't got enough. We've got thirty cents apiece. Will that do?"

"Yes, I think it will," said Uncle Phil.

"Or, p'raps that's too much?"

"Well—no, I think it will be about right."

"We'll go down this afternoon and you can show them to us. And, Uncle Phil, you can keep a secret, can't you?"

"You must p-r-r-romise not to breath one word!"

"Keep it till we say you may tell."

"Keep it in a pansy."

"In a what, Susie?"

"In a pansy. That's the way to keep a' secret. I heard mamma read it in a book.' Tom gave a very provoking laugh, but Susie hunted out a book, and ran to mamma to show her the poem in which came the line—

"The secret kept inviolate."

"There," she said, "a violet's almost the same as a pansy."

"I'll keep it," said Uncle Phil, solemnly, "in violet or pansy or anything you say, Susie. I'll keep it if I have to get a dozen people to help me."

"Pretty ones, we want," exclaimed the two as they stood before Uncle Phil's show case.

"With rosebuds or forget-me-nots, and things on," said Susie.

"Pshaw, that's what they have on girl's doings," said Tom, in contempt. "When I was down at cousin Roland's he had a splendid pair—a tiger's head on the toes. When he he crossed his feet and put 'em up on the fender it made you think of a fight."

Uncle Phil had no tiger-headed slippers, but he found a pair of dog's heads which charmed Tom, though Susie did not like them at all. She spied a pair, with daisies and a fern leaf, which exactly suited her fancy. She declared the dogs were ugly and snubby-nosed and puggy looking (as, indeed, they were), which made Tom angry.

"I'm a boy and I'm bigger than you, and I'm going to have the dogs."

"Isn't it polite to give up to the ladies, Uncle Phil?"

Uncle Phil could not say no to such an appeal, and began to realize that he had undertaken a task quite beyond him, as customers waited and there appeared no prospect of the very differing tastes being brought to an agreement.

"I'll tell you," he said at last, "each of you take one slipper you like best and leave grandfather to choose."

Nothing better could be done. They were wrapped separately, and Tom wouldn't speak to Susie as they walked home.

New Year's was always a busy season, but mamma thought it a good time to have a little talk with the children; and she always managed to find a half-hour for them.

So, with little Bert on her lap, Susie's curls falling over one shoulder, and Tom's short-cropped head resting on the other, she tried to impress on them a lesson of love for the year coming, drawn from experiences of the year that was gone.

As she whispered of kindness and gentleness between brother and sister, Tom glanced shamefacedly over at Susie, and wished he hadn't been so cross. And Susie's little heart was soon filled with a plan which brought her back to mamma as soon as the others were all out of hearing

"Mamma let me go down to Uncle Phil's please, all alone. She had never been so far by herself, but she coaxed and coaxed "because it was for New Year's" so the little fur cap went on over the curls, and soon the small lassie stood again smiling up at Uncle Phil.

"I thought I'd change," she said holding up the daisies and fern leaf. "Tom's the biggest, and of course he knows best, so I think I ought to give up, don't you?"

Uncle Phil had his own opinion about that, but he kept it to himself as he wrapped up the mate to Tom's dog.

She wanted to get into the house without Tom's seeing her, and she did, for he was at that moment in the barn, looking lovingly at the puggy dog's head.

"But I'll do it!" he said resolutely, and he went out by the alley gate and down the street, reaching the store a half hour after Susie had left it.

"I believe I prefer the other slipper, after all, Uncle Phil," he said in a very off-hand manner. "I think they will really be more suitable."

Uncle Phil looked puzzled, then seemed about to speak, then checked himself and turned quickly to the shelves.

As Tom was going out of the door he stood holding it half open so long that a lady customer looked impatiently at him as the sharp wind shook her ostrich tips. Then he marched back to his Uncle.

"That's bosh, you know, Uncle, Phil, about being more suitable and all that. I think the dogs are twice the prettiest, but I'm sorry I was so ugly to Sue—and—good-bye——"

Now he felt like an honest boy.

He met Susie in the the hall skipping in to tea as he got home. He seized and raised her from her feet with a mighty hug.

"O Tom dear! I'm going to be good to you all the new year."

"Me, too, Sue," was his fervent though rather indifferent answer.

She was half afraid he would read in her beaming face all about what she had been doing. And he clapped both hands over his mouth for fear it would laugh itself out—this secret which must be kept inviolate.

"I can't find my slippers," said grandfather, coming into the sitting-room, with stocking feet on New Year's morning.

"Here they are grandfather. You must have left them here last night." Susie and Tom, having crept into his room over night and taken away the old ones had just now unwrapped each a new one and placed before his chair.

"No, I didn't," said grandfather, stoutly, as he seated himself and drew them on.

There seemed an uncommon stiffness about them, and he held up both feet into a better light to see what was the matter.

"Oh—h—h—!" cried Susie.

"Oh—h—h—h—h—h!" screamed Tom.

"Why! I exchanged mine!" exclaimed Susie.

"So—did—I!"

Both stared as if the double exchange ought to have made the two more alike than ever before.

As the others gathered around to see, Uncle Phil relieved himself by a fearful shout of laughter, and then went on to explain how it was that the slipper question was unsettled, and seemed likely to remain so, for Tom declared that Susie's choice should be kept, while Susie insisted that Tom's should.

At last Uncle Phil proposed a solemn family council on the matter.

But grandfather gathered a boy in one arm and a girl in the other, and gave Tom a loving kiss, and Susie two. Then the ear old gentleman settled it himself, and how do you think he did it?

"I shall keep them both," he said, with a decided stamp of the flowery slipper. That was how.

And to this day the puppy dog and the daisies and fern leaf move slowly side by side about the house, serving as an every day reminder to Susie and Tom that they had resolved to be good to each other "all the New Year."

SAVED FROM THE GRAVE.

How a Chicago Dentist Restored His Wife to Life.

Five weeks ago the wife of Charles P. Pruin, a dentist of Chicago, gave birth to a child. This was followed by an attack of puerperal mania. They were living at the suburb of Oak Park. As his wife grew worse rapidly Mr. Pruin consulted a physician, who, after seeing the patient, recommended the use of anæsthetics to quiet her nerves. The doctor here alluded to did not handle the case, but an Oak Park physician was called in and he also adopted the same course of treatment, administering

STRONG DOSES OF MORPHINE.

The lady was found to be rapidly sinking, till one night she fell back on the pillow lifeless. Her breathing had ceased and the pulse was gone. The attending physician, who was by her side, made the usual examination and distinctly pronounced her dead. Still, the husband would not be convinced. He placed his hand upon his wife's chest and by some method tried to produce an artificial respiration, having long made a special study of anæsthetics in connection with his profession. He proceeded to work the arms back and forth, pressing his hand on the chest, thus producing an artificial movement. The two doctors who stood by not only endeavored to dissuade him from continuing the operation, but remonstrated with him for committing what they deemed a profanation of the dead. He continued his efforts, and after a lapse of some minutes the patient

BEGAN SLOWLY TO REVIVE,

She has steadily improved and is now able to move around. The doctors confess that she would certainly have died but for these extraordinary efforts at restoration.

Directions to Speakers on Religious Topics.

1. Don't talk too much.
2. Don't talk unless you are posted.
3. Give the best you have.
4. Don't talk when people are asleep. Wake some one man and you will hold the rest.
5. Don't try to show off your learning.
6. Get hold of the most stupid man and you'll hold the rest.
7. Don't try, but don't be afraid, to make people laugh. Milk that slops one way will the other.
8. Be natural; don't try to be some one else.
9. Avoid cant and pulpit tones.
10. Don't talk too long. A man in London, who preached until the people all left, said he thought it was a pity to stop when there was nobody to hear.
11. Don't hesitate to repeat what God uses.
12. Don't keep on talking just because you are holding the audience. Send them away hungry.
13. While the people are gathering use the time with song.
14. Shoot where people stand. As the old Quaker said to the burglar: "Friend, I am going to shoot where thee stands. Thee had better get out of the way."
15. Don't gesture and move about too much, and don't talk with your hands in your pockets.—D. L. Moody.

Proud of His Sister.

The Chicago Tribune relates the case of a young man who was regarded as a phenomenon, because he took his sister to all the best entertainments, and actually devoted himself to her during the lecture and opera season. Being praised for his unusual attention to his sister, the young man promptly and proudly replied:

"No, there's nothing wonderful or extraordinary about it. She is the only woman I know in whom I have the most thorough confidence. She is always the same, always pleasant and affectionate, and to tell you the candid truth, I am afraid she'll go and marry some of those imitation men around here, and be unhappy all her life.

"She has nobody else to look to, and I'll take care she does not have to look to anybody else. I suppose some day a genuine man will come along. If he's a genuine man, I won't object. Until he does come, she's good enough for me, and If I ever find as good a girl, I'll marry her."

The example is most commendable. A young man would do well to seek his sister's society until he finds another lady as good as his sister.

The circulation of the London Times is now confined to clubs, hotels, restaurants, persons who hire it to read, a very limited class of business men, and families of exceptional affluence; but thousands coming under the latter head do not take it. It is, no doubt, always glanced over—for few persons actually read through its yards of print—by the majority of peers and members of the House of Commons. The effect of the new enfranchisement will be to diminish its influence still further, as the new voters know nothing of it. While, however, its circulation declines, or at best stagnates, it probably is as an advertising medium more valuable than ever. The London morning paper having the widest circulation among the well-educated class is the Standard.

A GLENGARRY DOUBLE SLEIGH OF FIFTY YEARS AGO.

BY JOHN FRASER, MONTREAL.

No. 17.

The old people of Montreal may have some faint recollection of a Glengarry double sleigh of half a century ago, but to the young of this generation, and even to young Glengarrians of the present day, it will be a novelty to them to learn how their worthy grandfathers used to come to town. Therefore, we shall bring them back to those quiet old times before the introduction of railways in this Canada of ours.

There were two noted annual arrivals in those days which caused more talk and created greater excitement on the streets of old Montreal than the arrival of an ocean steamer. One was the first Indian canoe from the North-West, carrying the news and the letters of a past year from those then nearly Polar regions. The other was the first batch of Glengarry double sleighs to reach "John Grant's" or some other of the Scotch Inns or Taverns of Montreal about Christmas week, loaded with all good things to replenish the cellars of the citizens, and to place before the traders in pork, butter, cheese, etc., an opportunity for profitable investment.

Glengarry was then, as now, some 70 to 80 miles from Montreal, but travelling was different. You could not then take an early train at Lancaster or Alexandria and come to "Town," as Montreal was then called, spend some six hours and get back the same night. To undertake a journey in the old days in winter was a matter of a week—two days to come down, three days here, and two to return. A contemplated visit in the old time by a Glengarry farmer was known from one end of his concession to the other. It was spoken of for weeks at Kirk or Chapel as an event, and many and various were the little commissions imposed upon him to execute.

Since the construction of railways the farm houses are stripped, nearly weekly, by traders purchasing everything the farmer or his good wife has to sell, such as eggs, butter, cheese etc, therefore doing away entirely with the annual visits of the Glengarry double sleighs to Montreal during the past thirty years. The present object is to picture one of those old double sleighs with which the writer was familiar in his young days.

The county of Glengarry, at the time of which we write, was fairly an agricultural one. The land had not yet been overworked nor impoverished. The farms were well stocked, having from 10 to 15 head of horned cattle, some half a dozen of good horses, a team or two of oxen, some 15 to 20 pigs, and about 50 sheep on each farm, besides a well-filled poultry yard of hens, turkeys, ducks, geese. From such resources at hand the reader may fancy the people lived in great comfort. The only scarcity was ready cash.

The young men of the county usually went to the shanties during the winter months, with their teams of oxen or horses, to haul the square timber from the woods in which it was cut to the nearest stream back—thence to be floated in the spring. By this means they earned a good amount of ready cash which they carried safely to their homes in the spring. The hospitality of the people was unbounded, particularly to strangers, just such as existed in the Acadian land of old time, and, unmolested by visits of revenue inspectors or guagers, Donald and Evan "plied the beverage from their own fair sheaves, that fired their Highland blood with mickle glee."

A great change has taken place since those primitive days. The young men during the past forty years have almost entirely left the county, a goodly number of them to follow the occupation of contractors on public works in the United States and Canada; many of them have prospered. Not one half, we believe, of the young men could now be found in the old county of Glengarry as were there at the time of the Rebellion of 1837, when nearly two thousand fighting men were mustered in one week.

We invite the reader to come with us, in retrospect, to a farm house in Lochiel, in the then backwoods of Glengarry. There is a large home-made sleigh standing empty under the barn shed. It is some 10 to 12 feet long; 4 to 5 feet wide, with sides 3 to 4 feet high. The runners were cut from a large birch or elm tree. The whole is "home made," except the iron on the runners and the necessary nails and bolts. The whipple trees and traces may be the same as used for plough or harrow. This is the old Glengarry double sleigh, all home made, strong and well built, of which we write.

Now to the loading—let us take a peep at its contents:—Some ten or a dozen small tubs or kegs of butter in the bottom, a dozen or two small cheeses, a few bags of timothy seed, then much prized, a few fowl, turkeys, geese, etc., to fill up gaps—then 8 to 10 well fatted hogs, (Glengarry pork was nearly equal to Irish) besides many little odds and ends, such as home-made socks and mits, then much prized in Montreal, and, maybe, a few extra hides and stray furs collected at the farm house during the year. This was something after the fashion a Glengarry double sleigh was loaded in the olden time before leaving for Montreal. The whole, we suppose, to weigh about 2,500 to 3,000 pounds, representing a cash value from $200 to $250.

The time is the second week of December, with good sleighing; the delay in starting is waiting to hear if the ferries had frozen over. All is now ready. Food for man and horse had to be added to the load. This was some dozen bundles of hay and a few bags of oats for the horses and a small kist or box containing a good sized boiled ham and a couple of loaves of bread with a few other small items, such as a select cheese and a little "oreudie" for the men on the road. By the way—this top load of hay towering high, something like a loaded elephant, served as a nice protection for the men from the cold winds by making a cozy seat in the centre of it, and if the good wife made up her mind to go down to town she would be nearly as comfortable as at her own fireside.

The reader might suppose the cost for such a trip of eighty miles would be very expensive. It did not cost over a dollar and a half in cash to reach Montreal. Here it is, an actual fact. The end of the first day found them at the Cedars, a halt having been made at midday to water and feed the horses—this cost nothing; they were fed from out of their sleigh supplies. The men also had their food with them, but we shall allow them to have indulged in a few pots of beer on the road during the day, costing about a quarter of a dollar. Beer was then cheap—three or four coppers a glass. This was the actual outlay in cash the first day until they reached the Cedars.

The horses had to be stabled at the Cedars costing a quarter of a dollar for a double stall for the night. The men fed their horses from their own supplies, costing nothing As for the men (there were always two with a double sleigh) a double bed would cost a shilling, but Glengarrians of that day were accustomed to rough it, and invariably made beds for themselves in a corner of the old-fashioned large bar-rooms by using their buffalo robes and blankets, thereby saving a little. We shall, however, suppose they spent a quarter each for beer, or something else, to wash down the food from their supplied box

The first halt the second day was at the Cascade, to water the horses, and sixpence for beer. The next was at St Annes, to water, and another sixpence for beer. The third was at Pointe Claire, for an hour, to feed horses and men, and we shall allow a shilling for beer. Lachine is the next halt, to water, and sixpence for beer.

The charges for beer on the road may not have been actually indulged in by the men, but they had to pay about sixpence at each halting place to the country innkeeper for the use of his sheds to water and feed their horses, and for this payment were each entitled to a glass of beer, take it or not.

About sunset the second day a long string of double sleighs (Glengarrians always came in squads of twelve to fifteen) might be seen between Dorr's brewery and the Tanneries jogging along at the slow pace of about five miles an hour. If their approach was slow, they made noise enough, announcing the coming of the Cameron and the Macdonnell men to town.

The reader of to-day never heard the merry cling-clong of the loud sounding large Glengarry sleigh bells of those days. They could be heard fully half a mile distant. Those Glengarry bells were as characteristic of the people as were their own bagpipes. Highlanders always make a noise by making themselves heard and felt when they come to the front—be it at market town, in the legislative halls or on the battlefield.

Just as the shades of evening are closing over the unlighted streets of old Montreal, the sleighs are passing down St Joseph street, some wending their way to "John Grant's," on St Henry street; others to "Sandy Shaw's," at the corner of Wellington and Grey Nun street; a few to "Widow McBarton's," on St Paul street, opposite to the centre of the present St Ann's [illegible] and a portion of them finding their way to "Jemmy Cameron's," the Glengarry Tavern on Main street.

There were a goodly number of these taverns in Montreal, having large stables. These were the resort of the Glengarrians as they could stable their horses for a trifle of a dollar a day, while they feed themselves of their sleigh supplies, therefore costing them a mere trifle for the two or three days in town. The men could live like princes as they thought, at a cost of half a dollar a day each. This was the charge per day at any one of those Scotch Taverns.

The morning talk the next day at the breakfast table, rich or poor, was of the arrival of the Glengarry sleighs. Even now-a-days, when we have railway trains arriving every hour, can hardly realize the importance such an arrival was to the old inhabitants of Montreal. Perhaps for a whole month previous our Island City had been cut off from the outside country, waiting the freezing of the rivers and lakes. So many articles of country produce became scarce and dear, and sleigh loads of provisions and things from the Townships, Argenteuil and Glengarry, were anxiously looked for.

An early visit to the Scotch Taverns by the thrifty housewives of old Montreal was the first duty of the day. There they found Donald, Evan and Sandy [illegible] with all the native dignity of Highlanders to greet their town customers and to welcome the ladies to inspect their good things, the tubs of butter, cheese, turkeys etc., soon found ready customers.

Glengarry butter had a special character of being good in those old days, and the first arrivals found ready sale to private families, the traders and merchants picked up the balance. Some of the older Glengarrians who had visited town several times before had learned that sides of pork cut into so-called "roasting pieces" found a ready sale, therefore they had prepared themselves for the demand, by which they profitted largely.

Our Glengarry friends soon found their sleighs empty and their pockets full of good hard silver. We shall allow them to prepare for their return home, after purchasing such needed articles as they required for their houses and farms, these being mostly in the hardware line—such as axes, saws, nails etc., but one very common article, Liverpool salt, took up most of the sleighs; almost every sleigh carried half a ton of salt. This article was cheap, about a shilling a bushel, but one of the most expensive for the farmer to buy from the country merchant owing to the heavy charge of transport in those days.

The old Glengarry double sleigh, like the once far-famed mail coach of England, is now an institution of the past—a relic of departed days! We shall never again see one on the road. We might use the old phrase,—"Their usefulness is gone." Never again shall their loud sounding bells, once so familiar here, be heard on the streets of Montreal, announcing their welcome arrival during the Christmas week. Those days are gone, never again to return.

Relic of departed days, farewell! The writer has endeavoured to picture on paper those sleighs to the best of his humble ability. Although not a Glengarrian, he was familiar in his young days with a Glengarry double sleigh as most Glengarrians. He has seen squads of twenty-five and more times fifty on the road at one time, and was with the Glengarries on their march to Montreal in February, 1838, when there were about one hundred double sleighs conveying the two regiments.

Hats have not varied much since the season began. The effort made to place the trimming toward the back takes well with a garniture of ostrich tips; otherwise it looks stiff. Stockinette hats at $3.50 often have a brim of silk Astrakhan; the latter is also used for flat or full crowns, with beaver, felt or velvet brims, the joining of the two materials being hidden by a double row of cord or tiny folds of velvet. Smooth-ly covered hats of velvet, with tips and birds, are certainly the most stylish designs shown. Figure No. 20 shows a popular shape, with straight brim turned up in the back. The picture is of brown felt with the brim covered with brown velvet, banded with brown and gold ribbon, [illegible] full bow of moire ribbon in the back reaching to the crown and four tips drooping on the front. Figure No. 19 represents the design of seal-skin trimmed with fur pompons. The shape shown in figure No. 18 is a turban covered with bouele cloth in a [illegible] regular fashion, caught here and there and finished with a bright wing on the side.

CHAPTER XXV.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH—THE BLACK TENTS

The haven of refuge which the fugitives reached just in time for the saving of their lives was one of those fertile spots called oases, or by the native population elwah, which are dotted here and there like islands amidst the ocean of gray sand by which they are surrounded, though seldom so far apart.

How they keep perpetually verdant and fair in the midst of such arid and terrible surroundings is one of the miracles of nature, which can only be explained in one way, namely, that it is God's will that they should be.

This elwah which they had come into proved to be about a mile in length and the same in width, and therein the grass grew tall and even rank, and studded with bright flowers, whilst all the trees except the prickly and sombre palms bore ripe and luscious fruit, for there were pomegranates, olives, apricots and plantains, with of course the date, for in Egypt, wherever you find a dozen trees together, be sure there is a palm tree amongst them.

This elwah was not flat, but full of little dells and hollows, and the sound of rippling water told the tale that it was not without its invariable cool and refreshing stream or fountain.

All these things were first seen after the sand clouds had swept by and when the pale-faced moon and all the countless stars had come out once more, but long before then the three exhausted riders had somehow or other not only reached the ground, but also sank down upon it.

The extreme of lassitude had been occasioned by the poisonous wind that always accompanies a sirocco, and which has at times caused people to faint, and the delicate even to drop dead in the very streets of Cairo, where the prudent always keep at home with closed doors and windows when such a wind is blowing towards the city.

As for the horses, they trembled in every limb and looked thoroughly knocked up and exhausted, though when they had cropped the long, rich grass for a few minutes they seemed to be much restored thereby.

"Do you think we shall be again pursued, now that the storm is over?"

The question was put in accents of the deepest anxiety by Nellie.

"I don't think so, darling. My own opinion is, and it amounts to a conviction, that our pursuers must have been overtaken and buried beneath the dust clouds which, by the mercy of Providence, have risen."

"And how far do you think we are away from Cairo, Frank?"

"Fully nineteen or twenty miles. Perhaps more, and certainly not less."

"Then we are but a hundred from Alexandria, our destination?"

"I am afraid we are at least a hundred and ten miles still from Alexandria. The exigencies of our flight prevented our riding straight in its direction, lest some canal or short arm of the Nile might stay our onward course, and in effect deliver us over to our pursuers."

"Then there is no longer any chance of reaching that city before morning?"

"I fear not, Nellie. You see our horses are not what they were. That long chase and the hot wind have taken a lot out of them. But God has done so much for us, namely, by guiding us hither, that to my mind it would be ungracious to doubt that He will deliver us from all peril and convey us as safely to Alexandria as he has to this oasis of safety."

"I feel that you are right, Frank, and if I could but get a drink of water I should feel everything in a more cheerful and hopeful light. My throat is so dry and burning that I feel almost as if I was going to faint."

"But there is no need for that, dear, for water can't be very far off."

This was evident from the fact that they could distinctly hear it bubbling and gurgling. All that therefore remained to be done was to discover it.

They did not trouble about securing their steeds, knowing well that they would not wander from the fertile oasis on to the dry and arid desert roads, and also that their instincts would soon conduct them to the water unassisted.

Then at a sign from Captain Donelly, Pat took the lovely girl on one side, whilst Frank rendered her similar support on the other, and in this manner they led her along in the direction of the water.

Where it could be was somewhat of a mystery to them, for they could see the entire circuit of the oasis and the surrounding desert as well, and yet naught did it present to their gaze but grass and fruit-laden and palm trees.

It was when they had reached the exact centre of the oasis, they arrived at a little dell, and, descending into it and rounding a huge lichen-covered rock, they came suddenly upon that for which they thirsted, and at the same time upon what they were not prepared for—a couple of black goats, some tents, a fire burning in a hole and wild looking people seated around it, with their camel saddles placed on the ground to rest against, their long spears stuck upright in the earth, rifles, pistols and scimitars lying handy to their grasp, and the camels' heads and long necks of camels stretching forward out of the darkness.

All this composed a scene which was picturesque and Rembrantesque enough, but unwelcome, for in an instant Frank Donelly had recognized the encampment as Bedouin one—a wild people who live by theft and murder without scruple, whenever honest means of livelihood fail them.

Nellie would have urged an immediate retreat had not the barking of a dog at this moment betrayed their approach, causing the Bedouins at once to handle their weapons and sing out a hoarse challenge.

It was that to avoid them now would be a sheer impossibility. Frank Donelly stepped boldly forth in advance of his companions, saying:

"We came in the name of Allah to ask for His free gift to all men, water."

"In the name of the prophet, how many of ye are there?" demanded a venerable looking old man who was evidently the patriarch and chief of the tribe, and as he put the question the younger Bedouins stood to their arms.

But when at a sign from Frank, Pat Monaghan came forward, supporting the trembling Nellie, they laid down their weapons again and laughed in a most unpleasantly suggestive manner, Frank thought.

In another minute all three were surrounded by men, women and naked children, whilst the modesty of some of the younger girls caused them to lift their scanty holiday garments to hide their faces, albeit that the act left them entirely nude; yet this was their idea of delicacy, and who shall say that it was not quite as proper a one as our own, since 'tis the face, and the face only, that can exhibit evil passions of any description whatever.

The women seemed pleased at the discovery that Nellie wore her hair cut straight across her forehead like their own, but the whiteness of her exposed neck, shoulders and bosom caused them apparently the most unbounded astonishment, as also did their plumpness, and they commenced to pat her glossy flesh with their little brown hands until the young English girl began to fear they must be contemplating the cooking and eating of her.

She lost no time, therefore, in bartering a bracelet that glittered on one of her rounded arms for a crimson silk kuffeeh, or headdress, that was sewn all round the edges with little silver coins, and the bargain being struck she first carefully unfolded and examined her acquisition, and finding it perfectly clean, next deftly draped the exposed portions of her lovely person therewith, making of it a kind of fichu or chemisette.

This accomplished she seated herself with her two companions amongst their new acquaintances, who certainly showed no savageness of disposition in their present behavior, but instead hospitably pressed the fugitives to partake of their evening meal, which consisted not only of dates and honey and abundance of camel's milk, but also of some savory kabobs that had been cooked over the fire, which the Bedouins, according to their usual custom, had lighted in a hole.

Frank Donelly whispered to his companions on no account to refuse the proffered hospitality, for not only did he fear that the doing so might give offense, but he also chanced to remember that in the fourth chapter of the El Khoran it is written: "Woe unto him who turneth the edge of the sword against them whom he hath entertained, for his name shall be blotted out of the book of life, and the flames of El Swat shall consume him," and he knew the Bedouins to be most devoted Mussulmans.

He did not not know, however, that for conscience sake they were given to read the book of their phophet literally, and that whilst they would have refrained from using the edge of the sword because it was forbidden, they would not feel the slightest scruple about killing with the point.

What won their present politeness was the fact that their guests were so well armed, for the Bedouin of the desert (though he is not without courage) likes to rob and slay with as little risk to himself as possible.

Meanwhile Nellie sought to win the friendship of her own sex by playing with and caressing the children, which she knew to be in general the shortest way to at all events a mother's heart. And truth to say the shapely, naked youngsters were by no means unkissable, for their skins were of a rich golden brown and particularly soft and glossy.

While thus engaged, however, her beauty seemed to make a great and, under the circumstances, dangerous impression on the Bedouin chief, who after watching her intently for a few minutes through the pale blue smoke of the opium and hempseed that he was smoking, muttered aloud:

"By the ninety-nine names of Allah I would give two she camels great with foal for her, for she is moon-faced and as lovely as a houri."

Hearing and fully understanding this half mental soliloquy, which was uttered unconsciously by the chief whilst in that half dreamy state which was produced by the vile mixture which he was smoking, Frank Donelly represented that he and his companions were tired and in urgent need of sleep and rest.

Then he gave Nellie a hint "not to accept an invitation to sleep with the Bedouin women in one of the tents, but if it was made to her to say that she preferred the open air along with her 'brother,' for that directly their entertainers were asleep, he hoped they would be able to steal silently away and rebetake themselves to their horses and the desert."

CHAPTER XXVI.

A TIMELY WARNING AND A SUDDEN FLIGHT.

It was as much as Nellie could do to resist the importunities of the women of the tribe to share the shelter of one of the black tents with them.

The fact was, these tawny visaged, henna stained and kohel daubed harpies hungered more after the rings that sparkled on Nellie's taper fingers and dangled from her little pink ears than they did for her society; though perhaps a few of them anticipated with cruel joy the banging and thumping that they would give her white body with their brown and bony fists in the forcing her to surrender them up, or say that they would slash at it with their knives if the resistance became desperate.

It was the old chief who at last came to our heroine's assistance and declared that she should do what she liked, for he in turn feared that what spoil the women got from her they might keep, and furthermore did not care to risk her receiving any injury at their hands, inasmuch that while he intended to kill her male companions, he was resolved to put her to some more profitable account, and after he had destroyed her memory and blunted her reason, to sell her as an imported Circassian to some rich pasha.

Unconscious of all the cruel schemes that had been devised concerning her and her companions in the wily brains of the Bedouins, Nellie laid herself down between her lover and Pat Monaghan and awaited with patience whatever should come next, anticipating no special danger, and brave in the courage of those who guarded her.

Of course neither of the three felt the slightest desire to slumber, whereas the Bedouins, on the other hand, went to sleep as fast as ever they could, for they were in no hurry to take the blood of the Feringhees, through knowing that the repose of the fatigued always becomes sounder toward morning.

Wherefore, resolving to cut the throats of the two men about an hour before dawn, they could see no reason why they should not take it easy during the interim, which they proceeded to do with the utmost nonchalance.

'Tis true, however, that first half a dozen of their number went forth and found the three horses of the unbelievers, which they caught and picketed with lances and trail ropes in a little hollow close by, in company with their other cattle.

This done, they also lay down and went to sleep with clear consciences.

The conduct of the Bedouins somewhat puzzled Frank Donelly. He saw nothing of the appropriation of the horses, only their hosts evidently seeking a real repose, for that it was real their snores were not long in testifying, and this action did not seem to go hand in hand with treachery.

At length he felt a drowsiness himself, and began to fear that pretense would soon end in practice unless he was very careful to keep awake.

So he betook himself to counting the brown limbs of the Bedouins, as they lay stretched in every conceivable, aye, and inconceivable attitudes as well, upon the ground, and after that he had a try at the stars, which, each one like a young moon, twinkled from out the indigo-hued firmament.

But this occupation soon made him more drowsy than he was before, and it is hard to say what might not have happened had not his attention been suddenly attracted by observing a little boy approaching them with evidently the utmost secrecy and caution.

The moonlight, shining full upon his plump, golden-brown nakedness, revealed the fact that he was trembling violently, and Frank saw that he was bent upon reaching them by a kind of detour, but for what purpose he could not even guess.

He therefore lay quite still and continued to watch the boy's movements, but not for long with any success, for the little fellow passed out of sight, nor did he make the young officer aware of his presence again until, a few minutes later, approaching the trio from behind, he squatted down just at their heads and began to gently touch each in turn.

It was then that Frank Donelly darted out a hand suddenly and seized the urchin by an arm, for he suspected that he had come to try to steal something.

In his best Arabic he demanded of him what he wanted.

But he was evidently not exactly understood, for the Bedouin, like the gypsey, has a language of his own, and his children know very little of any other; indeed, both races, that is to say the Bedouins and the gypseys, trace their descent from the same one of the twelve sons of Ishmael, and have many words, habits and customs in common.

But all this is neither here nor there. The little fellow in question, and who was a perfect Cupid in bronze, of about nine years of age, was acquainted with one intelligible word, and he whispered it twice though his teeth were chattering in his head the while and his body all of a tremble.

"Dour! Dour!" And as he uttered the words, which mean literally, "Kill! Kill!" but also signify murder or assassination, he sought to make them more impressive by first pointing towards the neighboring camp and then successively drawing a podgy finger across his short sturdy throat and giving it a succession of digs into the bronzed flesh of his pretty little plump chest, rolling his truly magnificent eyes about the while as though simulating agony.

However, without all this dumb action he was perfectly understood, and Captain Donelly let him know it.

A look of satisfaction thereupon covered his face, and he next endeavored to express in pantomimic action that if they would follow him he would show them how to escape, and herein he also made himself understood.

Frank Donelly resolved to trust to him implicitly, and Nellie, who had heard all, encouraged him in the determination.

She, in fact, recognized the youngster as one whom she had more especially fondled and played with during the evening, and doubted not but that it was the notice which she had taken of him which had stirred up his gratitude even to the attempted saving of their lives, perhaps at no small risk to himself either.

And now all three got up and prepared to follow the little fellow, who at first led them right away from the sleeping Bedouins, but then in a circle around the top of the punchbowl shaped dell, and at last down into it again at quite its opposite extremity.

The three fugitives now found themselves all amongst the horses, camels and dromedaries of the tribes and in another minute had recognized their own steeds, picketed with spear and trail rope in true Bedouin fashion.

They instinctively made towards them, but their little guide caught hold of Nellie and Frank, and first shaking his head next pointed towards a couple of dromedaries, expressing in pantomime that they would go quicker.

Capt. Donelly, at all events, knew that to be true enough, but he did not feel that they would be authorized in appropriating the dromedaries nevertheless, and he was also afraid of getting their little friend into trouble.

He expressed his fears on this point in a whisper to Nellie, who at once rejoined:

"Oh, let us take him with us. I feel sure that if we leave the dear little fellow behind they will find out he helped us and kill him."

It was then Frank's turn to ask the youngster by signs if he would like to accompany them in their flight, but when he clearly understood what was meant he looked scared and drew back and shook his head vehemently, so that Donelly said at once to Nellie:

"I dare say he has a mother and father, and sisters and brothers as well, so that no harm is at all likely to befal him. The greatest good we can do him is to get away as fast as ever we can 'ere we are espied by any one and observed together."

Pat Monaghan had, during this brief colloquy, been releasing the steeds.

By rare good fortune, neither their bridles nor saddles had been interfered with.

Had they have been removed, the e is no knowing how they would have got over the difficulty.

"Now, darling, lose not a moment," said Frank.

"But I must somehow reward this dear little fellow for what he has done."

"Let it only be with a kiss, then; for if you give anything that can be afterward found on him, don't you see how it will implicate him?"

Nellie could see it in an instant.

"You are quite right," she said, hurriedly.

"A kiss only it must be," and clasping the pretty bronze Cupid in her arms, she bestowed on him half a dozen ere she let him go.

No sooner had she done so than a dog began to growl and then to bark.

The Bedouin boy thereupon made them an impatient sign to hasten away.

But it was hardly needed, for they were already making all the hurry back they could.

Frank Donelly swung Nellie up into her saddle and placed the reins in her hands. Then he mounted his own steed, Pat Monaghan losing no time in following his example, and a second later, nodding their adieux to the Bedouin boy, in single file, and as noiselessly as possible, they were making their way up and out of the little dell of the fountain.

Hardly had they gained level ground, however, when the Bedouin camp seemed to awake to life and action.

The first barking dog had been imitated by others, and now men's gruff voices joined in and it was plain from what they said that the fugitives were already missed.

Then all at once there was a report of a gun, followed by a shriek.

"They have shot the boy. I know that was his scream," gasped Nellie.

"If it was they have done the little chap a kindness by sending him to heaven, whereas had they let him live to be a man his accumulated crimes would in all probability when he came to die have dragged him down to the other place," said Frank, to comfort her; the truth to tell, he felt very sad about the affair himself.

"Oh, 'tis terrible," sobbed Nellie. "But he only cried out once, so his pain was short. When they catch us perhaps they will torture us to death, eh, Frank?"

"I've never heard of Bedouins torturing their prisoners. Besides, we aren't their prisoners yet, Nell. Once out of this oasis and on to the desert again and we will head straight for yonder mountains, which they say are honey combed with caverns and rock-hewn tombs, and where I hope we'll be able to play a successful game of hide-and-seek with our pursuers."

"But if they should pursue us on their fleet dromedaries?"

"Come, come, Nell; we won't anticipate the worst, but the best. Here we are; out of the oasis and on to the desert once more."

"Bedad, an the nagurs are losing no time in taking up the running, yer honor, for here they come, on camels, on dromedaries and on horses as well," broke in Pat.

One has to know a woman's walk pretty well before he can tell by her limp whether it is rheumatism or tight shoes.

There is a difference between coal dealers. An honest one says of another: "His weighs are not my weighs."

The young housewife who wants to have home happy should always make the best of everything—particularly the best of bread.

"New Water Works," says a black head line in an exchange. New older works, but we didn't know that new water acted similarly.

THE FARM.

Danger to Horses.

Farmers as a class, though very suspicious, are after all very careless in many things where a little care might be well repaid. Although horses are not kept in such large herds as other kinds of stock they are more exposed than any other kind to any contagious disease that may be abroad in the land. On this subject the Spirit of the Farm says:

When we consider for a moment the number of diseases of a contagious nature to which horses are subject, and the careless manner in which they are exposed to the same, it is astonishing that we do not have epidemics of this kind oftener with our horses. To fully appreciate the risk that is incurred we need only visit the city or country towns on court days or Saturdays, and see the number of horses of all kinds and conditions that stand tied and almost touching each other in every available space about town, to say nothing of the numbers that are packed together in the public stables. The latter, as a rule, are much safer from coming in contact with disease than those outside, for no sensible stableman would admit an animal inside of his stable that is affected with any kind of contagious disease if he knew it; but it often happens that neither the owner of the horse nor the stableman is aware of the disease until it is too late to remedy the evil.

Contagious diseases of a most virulent character may be perpetuated for an indefinite length of time by feeding horses in stalls where the disease has existed. Of this kind we may mention glanders and Spanish itch especially. Either of these most fatal disorders may be conveyed to other horses by feeding in a stall where horses suffering with them have been kept. To destroy the virus take a pint of sulphuric acid and put it in a bucket of water, and with an old mop wash all parts of the stall, especially the trough and manger, as well as the sides of the stall. Then put a few pounds of stick sulphur in an old iron pot and, stopping the stable as well as possible, burn it, so as to fumigate the stable thoroughly, taking due precautions against fire—it is a good plan to set the pot in a tub of water—then whitewash with lime and carbolic acid. This will protect them thoroughly.

Timely Suggestions.

The meal for the calves should be fed to them dry. It is a mistake to mix it in the milk. A good mixture for the calves is wheat bran or middling and linseed-oil meal, two parts of the bran to one of linseed meal, and then add the same bulk of oats. A calf will eat from half a gill to a quart, according to its age and size. Feed twice a day.

That is the cheapest building which gives the greatest amount of room in proportion to the money cost. Judged by this rule a very small barn cannot well be cheap. There is too much outside covering in proportion to the room inside. A large barn will also bear greater elevations without appearing to be out of proportion. To be cheap the barn should have a good stone basement at least 8½ feet in height. The room thus gained will usually be the cheapest in the building, and for winter care of stock it will be much the most valuable.

Comparatively few farmers are aware how much valuable time may be saved by system and forethought. Now, during these long winter evenings, excellent opportunity is offered to prepare as complete a working plan as possible for every month in the year. Write down every kind of work you expect to do, every crop you intend to plant, and all improvements that are contemplated.

Posts and rails should be made and drawn to where they are to be used, and, of course, the tops of the trees used up for firewood. This business of preparing fuel is too much neglected; the advantage of having a full supply of it well seasoned and ready for use at any time is not fully appreciated.

Absorbents, spread liberally over the floor where horses and cattle lie, make the apartment look better and smell sweeter, and render them more healthful for the occupants. They are worth all they cost for sanitary purposes alone, but they will pay a large profit again in the fertilizing material that will accrue from their use.

Ox Yokes.

There are three parts of an ox which are more liable to be made sore by ordinary work in the yoke than any other—viz., the top of the neck and the shoulders. We often see oxen with sores on these parts. Sore shoulders are often caused by the bow being too wide. Sometimes it is caused by the bow being too square, or too sharp on the outer edge. The bow should be perfectly round at the shoulder joint; the drop of the staple, as a general thing, should come down about half way from the top of the neck to the shoulder joint; the leader especially needs a more crooked yoke or a longer staple than when drawing on the rib. Many of our farmers seem to care but little about the yokes their cattle work in. They put them in too long or too short a yoke in the winter time, and they crowd, so it is hard getting along the road; and then the yokes are made by a person who does not understand his business and the yoke rolls back on the neck. Some are too straight and others too crooked so the oxen can't travel. The fact is farmers are not particular enough about the yokes and bows their oxen work in.

How Dreams Come True.

BY MARION MANVILLE.

She slipped a piece of wedding cake
Under the pillow upon her bed.
"I wonder what I shall dream about?"
With a happy sigh to herself she said
"I wonder if ever a dream comes true?"
Oh, busy thoughts, will you fly away—
"Mine never did that ever I knew;"
But that's no sign they won't some day

"I hope 'twill be nice," with a pretty pout
And a little toss of the golden head,
Then she blew the winking candle out,
And said her prayers, and went to bed.
"I never shall dream if I lie awake"—
Oh, waking dreams, ye are theirs, no doubt,
But the last thought fades into dreamland's realm—
"I wonder—who—I shall—dream about?"

"What did you dream in the canny spell
Of the wedding cake?" a fond voice said.
"I—don't remember." Oh red, red rose!
What have you done that you hang your head?
Two little hands in a strong, firm hold—
"Then may I tell my dream—to you?"
A whisper, a shy voice half afraid—
"Isn't it funny how dreams come true?"

"Two is better far than one
For council or for fight."

Our respected confrere Mr. Fawcett of the Flesherton Advance was married on the 27th Jan., to Miss Maggie Carberry of Chinguacousy, Peel Co. We wish them domestic felicity, as well as journalistic prosperity, and here goes our slipper.

THIS is a slice out of the verbal part of a recent examination for a good Civil Service post: "What is the principal property of heat?" Answer: "To expand." "And that of cold? Answer: "To contract." "Give me an example." Answer: "The days are long in summer and short in winter."

TEA-MEETING.—The annual tea-meeting of New England Methodist church will be held on (D. V.) Wednesday, Feb. 10th, 1886. Tea served from 5 to 7 o'clock, after which addresses will be delivered by Revs. C. E. Perry, J. E. Howell, T. L. Wilkinson of Parkdale, and others. Music by New England choir. Admission, 25 cents.

DON'T fail to hear Mr. James' Lecture and Entertainment in Haskett's Hall next Wednesday evening, 10th inst. The Lecture is spoken of in high terms of commendation. The program is a good one and will contain several novel features. The admission fee is so low that all can attend. The Band will be present in full force. See posters.

Mrs. Robert Hooper, of Kinloss, county of Bruce, in a letter, says: "I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints for a number of years, and am glad to say to the public as well as friends that McGregor's Speedy Cure brought me around, and I am now all right, thanks to McGregor's Speedy Cure. Hundreds of like testimonials are frequently received, and are daily proving that this is truly a wonderful remedy, curing Sluggish Liver, Bilious Headache and Costiveness, where all else fails. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 4

SOLD OUT.—Messrs. Ketchum & McGuire, of the Dufferin Post, have sold out to a company, to be known as the Post Printing Co. The price received was $2,000. The company is composed of Messrs. Mungoven, Hughson, Irwin, Duffy, Bennett and others. Mr. D. J. Mungoven will be editor, and the Post will be Conservative in politics.—[Shelburne Free Press.

REV. S. CLEAVER, B. A., of Burlington, visited Markdale Methodist church last week in view of building a similar structure in his town. He was very much pleased with the design throughout; and also conferred with Mr. Richards, the contractor, while here, as to the building of his proposed edifice. There are several others also looking to Markdale church as a model from which to build.

A SHARP student was called up by the worthy professor of a celebrated college, and asked the question, "Can a man see without eyes?" "Yes, sir," was the prompt reply. "How, sir?" cried the astonished professor, "can a man see without eyes! Pray, sir, how do you make that out?" He can see with one, sir," replied the ready-witted youth. And the whole class shouted with delight at the triumph over metaphysics.

SOLD OUT.—Rutledge & Crosson, butchers, have sold their business to Alonzo Brian of this village. the latter being now in possession. We regret to lose Rutledge & Crosson, both of whom are good citizens, good business men and desirable neighbors. They go to Acton to follow the same calling. Mr. Brian is now dealing out fish, flesh and sausage, and will no doubt receive a fair share of patronage. We wish him success.

CRUTCHES RENDERED USELESS.

The poor cripple who has to use crutches on account of Rheumatism, stiff and swollen joints, contracted cords, and other aches, pains and lameness, may throw aside his crutches if he will try Hagyard's Yellow Oil faithfully.

EUPHRASIA and Osprey councils have each appointed their defeated candidate for reeve, as Assessor, both having served well their respective township as reeve for many years in the past, viz: Mr. R. Myles for Euphrasia, and Mr. Thos. Gamey for Osprey; while in Glenelg Edward Rutledge, one of the defeated candidates for councillor was chosen as Assessor. It is sometimes fortunate to be unsuccessful.

MR. JOHN J. DALTON, provincial land surveyor, of this place, has just returned from Toronto. We think it of special importance to our readers to mention that he has brought with him copies of the original Field Notes of ten of the surrounding townships which he had been industriously employed in preparing for the benefit and peace of the farming community. We may congratulate ourselves in having a man of Mr. D's enterprise and care in our vicinity.—[Chatsworth News.

A NEW swindle is on foot that farmers should look out for. A clerical looking gentleman represents himself as an agent for a religious society and delivers Bibles and hymn books gratis. We do not advise our readers to whistle up the dogs as soon as any clerical looking gentleman comes to the premises, but if one comes along acting as we have stated, takes his dinner, for which he insists upon paying 25 cents and asks them to sign a receipt for it, they are safe in applying the boots on sight, for if the receipt is signed they will find themselves let in for a good round sum in a neighboring bank not many months afterwards.

EVERY year every local paper gives from $100 to $5,000 in free lines for the sole benefit of the vicinity in which it is located. No other can or will do this. The local editor in proportion to his means does more for his town than any other ten men, and in all fairness, man with man, he ought to be supported, not because you happen to like him or admire his writing, but because a local paper is the best investment a community can make. It may not be brilliant or crowded with great thoughts, but financially it is more of a benefit to a community than the preacher or teacher. To-day the editors of local papers do the most work for the least money of any man on earth. Subscribe for your local paper, not as a charity, but as an investment.—[Judge Davis.

Speers—Hudson—That this Council adjourn to meet at Feversham on Saturday the 27th Feb.—Carried.

THE FARM.

Farmers' Clubs for the Young.

Too much cannot be said or done to aid or encourage farmers' clubs. They should be a reunion of farmers and their families; a free, social comparison of successes and failures, from which new hints may be gained, an occasion from which every man may return with the feeling that he has improved his mind and helped his neighbor.

Gov. Robinson says: "The secret of power lies in combination; combined sentiment that shall grow out of the intelligence and culture of such a union, cannot fail."

Young farmers need the club and grange more than do their fathers. Talking in public, in the farmers' club or grange, or in the farmers' convention, is a very beneficial training. Young farmers and young men, expecting to become farmers, can do much in the way of getting a good agricultural education without going to the Agricultural College, if they choose, yet the privileges of the college and witnessing the experiments are far better than the home farm Farms are schools—they are next to the college.

The present tendency is in the direction of farmers' clubs, or gatherings, institutes, granges, etc. At first we had only one or more in each county, and these societies are yearly multiplying. To complete the system we want the small societies formed in all the towns, and the whole united into one grand and co-operative system of popular agricultural education, under the auspices and patronage of the government.

The farmers, especially the young farmers, I trust, will consider this question. How gratifying would it be to know that four or five hundred of these clubs existed, scattered all over this Commonwealth

It was my fortune, whether good or bad, to commence farming when prices of produce were very low. Butter 15 cents per pound, potatoes at one shilling per bushel, eggs 12 cents per dozen, pork 5 cents, beef 4 cents, etc. But, with all these seeming discouragements and obstacles, I liked farming and firmly believed then, as now, that if intelligently conducted, it will bring the average man as many good things in this world, that are worth striving for, as will any other occupation.

If it be seriously urged that farmers cannot afford the time for mutual improvement, I answer, they cannot afford, at the present day, not to do it.—Daniel Dwight.

Sundry Suggestions.

Mr. L. P. Smith, a packer of forty years' experience says: "The quantity of grain that will make a pound of beef will make more than a pound of pork, and a pound of pork is generally worth more than a pound of beef. A Berkshire hog is at his best ere he is twelve months old, while a bullock will require three, if not four years. If time and interest on money go for anything then it is in favor of the hog."

A cut or a sore on a cow's teat is always difficult to heal, on account of its being constantly kept irritated by the milking process. Care should be taken to soften the scab before commencing to milk. This will prevent the sore from cracking open more, and if it is slightly oiled after milking it will generally heal very soon. There should be a little turpentine mixed with the oil in the fly season.

There is much waste in throwing corn on the ground to be fed to fattening hogs. They will not eat all if fattening, as where a hog has all he can eat he is rather dainty, and objects to taking his feed with any surplusage of dirt. In very cold weather hogs or cattle fed out-doors will retire to shelter before eating all they would if fed under other conditions.

If pork has ever soured or spoiled in a barrel it is not safe to use it for pork again, no matter how thoroughly it may have been cleansed. The cost of a new barrel warranted to preserve the pork is much less than the value of meat which it will hold. It is true the fault may not originally be in the barrel, but rather in modes of management, but, having once spoiled a lot of pork, the barrel had better thereafter be left to other uses.

Many persons are prevented from using petroleum on wood work, and especially on the roofs of houses, by the fear that it will make the wood more inflammable. This is not the case. The oil enters the pores and so fills them that the wood is harder and less likely to ignite than before. Coal oil or crude petroleum, with something to give it body, makes a cheap paint for all wooden implements, and to coat over the ironwork of plows and cultivators to prevent them from rusting in the winter.

The Potato Rot

There has been very widespread complaint of the potato rot this fall. In some fields there has not been half a crop, and as a rule the general yield has been far below the average. Why cannot these serious losses be averted by proper precaution? We believe they can be in very many, if not in all instances.

At least one cause of decay in the tuber is fungous growths upon the vines, which later spreads down the vine and to the tuber. This fungous growth is in turn caused by dampness, warm, wet weather being especially conducive to it.

Now, how may we avert the danger hereafter? First plant no tubers that have been subject to this potato disease. Second, do not plant on low wet ground. No serious results might follow in a dry season; but look out for a wet one. Third, if you discover this rusty-looking fungous growth on your potato vines, dig the tubers at once, even if they are not half grown. Half a crop is better than none at all. They are certain to decay if left until the fungus attacks them.

When dug, pototoes should be put in a cool place, and a dry one, if they have been exposed to the fungus. Farmers who have tried this method report satisfactory results. It is too late now to act on this suggestion, but save it in your farmer scrap book (you no doubt have one) for another year. Your motto will then be: Watch for the yellow tints on the potato vines.

Pigs in Winter.

Many farmers have either killed or sold their heavy hogs by this time, and their place is now supplied by younger members of the porker family. It is important that these pigs be cared for during the cold weather in such a way that they will not suffer from the severity of the cold, nor be stunted in growth for the want of proper nourishment. The little pigs should always have a good warm place to sleep, and plenty of good food, so that they will grow rapidly from the start, until ready for market. Pork is low now, and it must be made cheap, and to do this it will not do to let there be a standstill in growth. At no time does it pay to feed out grain, unless there is a sufficient amount of growth made to pay for it, and this can not be realized with an animal at a standstill. All feed to an animal which does not grow in proportion, is lost, and in these hard times farmers cannot afford to waste any grain whatever, but to yield a profit it must be seen that each animal gives increased weight, in proportion to the amount of grain expended upon it. From this the importance is seen of making every young animal grow from the start, and most especially is this warning needed in the management of the pigs in winter time.—Stockman.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

During the past week a distinguished delegation from Marietta, O., consisting of the Hon. Coley Strawder, Hon. Cush Henderson and Deacon Fletcher, have been visiting the Lime-Kiln Club. The object was to secure "pointers" for the benefit of the colored society, in Marietta, known as "The Solemn Band of Gideon." The delegation had never tackled a town of over 4 000 inhabitants before, and were rather 'off color' in Detroit.

The Hon. Strawder, for instance, insisted on walking in the middle of the road, and in using lard and lamp-black on his boots. The Hon. Henderson lost his wallet containing $10 while buying peanuts on the market, and had to raise his fare home by spouting his silver watch. Deacon Fletcher mailed letters in fire alarm boxes, followed a brass band a mile and a half in the mud, and was foolish enough to mix up in a dog-fight and get knocked down by the man who owned the second best canine.

The delegates went away happy, however, and chock full of information for the benefit of their band. They were granted a charter to work to the thirty second degree, and start out with sixty-seven members, every one of whom has a bald spot on top of his head and knows the difference between a spring chicken and a motherly hen.

TOO HIGH.

The Secretary announced a communication from Prof. Artichoke Johnson, of Pekin, Ill., expressing his willingness to appear before the club and deliver his celebrated lecture on "The Gradual Decay of the Umbrella." His terms would be $50 cash down, with a written guarantee that he should have a feather bed to sleep on.

"While I myself have had no less dan a dozen umbrellas gradually decay on me," said the president, "I doan regard de subjeck as one of deep public interest. De Seckretary will reply to de effeck dat de price am too high too shed rain."

PETITIONS

The following petitions were presented: From twenty-four colored citizens of Atlanta, asking the United States Government for better protection against traveling doctors who claim to be able to cure a corn of five years' growth inside of three days.

From thirty-five white citizens of Richmond praying the Lime-Kiln Club to use its influence with the present Congress to prevent colored people from going to the post office more than twelve times in twenty four hours.

From eighteen colored residents of Toronto, asking the influence of the club to bring about a closer relationship between the black races in the two countries. As matters now stand a Canadian colored man never enters the United States without putting his money in his boot and feeling a chill go up and down his back.

From 108 leading colored citizens of New Orleans, praying the club to instruct Congress to make it a gallows offense for any white man to "dose" a watermelon with intent to lessen the colored population.

The above petitsons were referred to the proper committee, with power to send for persons and papers and expend the sum of twenty-five cents for stationery and postage.

FROWNED DOWN.

Pickles Smith offered a resolution to the effect that a committee be appointed to investigate and pronounce on the skull of Demosthenes, now hanging on a nail in the museum and labelled: "After Using." He had heard serious doubts expressed as to whether the skull was genuine, or one made to order in New Yoek and would like the fact settled.

"Brudder Smith, sot right down?" exclaimed the President as he brought his gavel down with a bang. "When we label and hang up a skull in dis museum we hev gone too fur to back water. Dat am not only supposed to be de skull of Demosthenes but it am 'spected dat ebery individual member of dis club am ready to take off his coat to support de supposishun! When you start out to make a museum de first great step am nebber to doubt your own labels."

REINSTATED.

The case of Whalebone Howker was then called up by Sir. Isaac Wolpole. Several weeks since Brother Howker signed a paper recommending a certain brand of stove-blacking, and sold the maker the right to use his picture on the package. This is in violation of by law No. 17, and Howker was suspended for six months and fined $600. Sir Isaac desired to appeal in his behalf. The suspended brother lived next door to him, and the way he took on o' nights kept his neighbors awake. He had lost flesh at the rate of a pound a day, and his family were greatly concerned for his health. The fine hung over him like a ten-ton grindstone, and his suspension seemed more than he could bear.

"Whar am Brudder Howker jist now?" asked the President.

"In de aunty-room, sah."

"You kin bring him in."

Brother Howker was brought in. He had tightened his belt to the last notch, so as to appear fearfully emaciated, and walked with a step which seemed to prove that this vain world had no further charms for him. He also managed to get off three or four groans which seemed to come from down among the shoe-pegs.

"Brudder Howker," said the President, "friends have interceded in your behalf, an' I hev decided to result your fine and reinstate you as an active member of de club. Dem bet dis solemn warnin' 'll be sufficient. From dis time out I want to see you a changed man. You kin now take your disposition sent behind de stove, an' I'd advise you to let dat bait out about two inches afore it cuts you in two."

NOT ANY.

Waydown Bobee, the elected poet of the club, arose to ask if it was the intention of the club to offer any winter prizes for poems written by colored people.

"I dean fink it ar'," replied the President. "De fack am, poetry has become so commen an' cheap nowadays dat we kin git all we want fur de askin'. Las' summer, when we offered $5 fur de best poem on de watermelon, mo' dan thirty pussons spent $100 of deir valuable time in competin' fur de prize. Incouraigin' poetry am incouraigin' laziness. Samuel Shin will now sound de triangle to bring dis meetin' to a stop, an' befo' looking de alley doah he will see dat de b'ar-traps am properly sot to embrace any vile pusson who may seek to enter de hall by dat route."

THE MOTHER OF ANGELS.

BY BESSIE STAR KEEPER.

It is Sabbath evening. A solemn stillness pervades the air. The church bells have long since ceased ringing. My children are asleep in their cosy nest upstairs. And I, with my feet on the fender, sit dreamily looking into the fire. There is no one else in the house and I can rest in my easy chair undisturbed. What thoughts come crowding in upon my mind, visions of the past, regrets, self-reproach. The wind is rising and a mournful wail sweeps past the window. What waves of unconquerable longing, what billows of anguish come rolling over me. I rise and walk rapidly up and down the room, struggling against the overwhelming agony, how long I know not, but at last the storm is over, for the same dear voice which commanded the waves of Galilee has said, "peace; be still!" and Sabbath calm again possesses me, driving out this spirit of unrest that will at times seize upon me.

I said my children were asleep upstairs. Two are there, but three are under the snow. O friend, do you know what that means? Do you know what it means, when the wind is whistling down the chimney, to realise that out in the desolate grave-yard, down in the frozen ground, lies the babe, that scarcely entered your home ere it left it, whose first feeble wail was a farewell—the little daughter, just learning to lisp your name, when an unseen finger closed her lips forever? A darling boy; your pride; a treasure guarded so jealously, and without whom it seemed 'twould be impossible to live; whose feet ran on such willing errands; whom you folded to your bosom with all the intensity of a mother's yearning affection while the blue eyes loving'y looking into yours gave emphasis to the caressing "mama darling;" suddenly, without warning, snatched from your arms, the loving eyes closed, the dear voice hushed, the willing feet nevermore to run to meet you? If you understand the bitter, bitter meaning, God help you, for He alone can make light to shine in this darkness. And He will help you.

Though so many centuries have elapsed, the promise is as sure to-day as when it first was given—"My grace is sufficient for thee." It is useless for friends to counsel us to "be resigned," it is worse than useless for us so to counsel ourselves. Zealous Christians speak no reproof, come not to us with saintly homilies on the blessed meaning and mission of affliction, or duty of submission. We have heard all that before. But sometimes we cannot bear even a sympathetic hand-clasp. Only leave us alone with our grief and our God, let us wait upon Him, and the time will come when in the midst of our mourning we shall say: "He leadeth me beside the still waters." O what stillness after our turbulent grief! Sister mourner, do you know we are mothers of angels?" The preciousness of that thought is taking possession of me to-night as I resume my chair by the fire.

"They are not dead—
But gone into that school
Where they no longer need our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule."

The cold grave and desolate churchyard pass; I see the gates of pearl, the streets of gold, the crystal sea, and the "great multitude which no man can number," forever free from pain, or crying, or sickness; happy where there is "fulness of joy forevermore." The wind dies away and in its stead I hear the sound of "harpers harping on their harps," and the triumphal song of the redeemed. And above it all there comes to me the well remembered greeting—"here's my mama's darling boy," and as I strain my eyes to see my children on the other shore, the vision fades; but my sorrow will never again be quite the same. Heaven is a reality.

Perhaps you have asked why does God give us our children only to take them again and leave us desolate. But, bereaved mother, would you give the remembrance of the happiness that was yours for a season, the thousand treasured words and ways, to escape this pain? I know you would not. Rather let us, from the remembrance, gather inspiration to truer womanhood and nobler lives, as deep down in our hearts we say:

"The mother of angels must walk softly."

A Cure For Drunkenness.

The Cure of Drunkenness is a task with which the regular practitioner has been unable to cope. Nine-tenths of mankind look upon drunkenness as a social vice, which a man may overcome by force of will. Drunkenness is a bad habit we all admit, in the moderate drinker. In the confirmed drunkard it becomes disease of the nervous system. The medical treatment of this disease consists in the employment of remedies that act directly upon those portions of the nervous system which, when diseased, cause lunacy, dementia, and the drinking habit. Remedies must be employed that will cure the appetite for strong drink, steady the trembling hand, revive the lagging spirit, balance the mind, etc. The nervous system of the dram drinker being all unstrung or shattered, must be given a nutriment that will take the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevent the physical and moral prostration that often follows a sudden breaking off from the use of alcoholic drinks. Lubon's medicine may be given in tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Those of our readers who are interested in this subject, should send their address for Lubon's Treatise, in book form, on drunkenness, opium, morphine and kindred habits, which will be mailed free to any address, when stamp is inclosed for postage. Address, M. V. Lubon, 47 Wellington street east, Toronto, Ont. Mention this paper.

CHAPTER XXVII.

ESCAPE IMPOSSIBLE?—PAT CAPTURES AND DISMOUNTS A BATTERY.

Pat Monaghan had not exaggerated matters when the Bedouins really were already in pursuit of them, on horseback, and mounted on fleet dromedaries.

Of course, they were not yet clear of the oasis, but that the fugitives had reached the boundless desert sands and were skimming across them as yachts under full sail skim the seas; and for all this their chances in the life and death race that was assuredly about to ensue would be small indeed against the long-legged camels and the swiftfooted dromedaries of the wild sons of the desert from whom they were seeking to escape.

"God save all our people!" exclaimed Captain Donnelly presently, with great fervor, as the remembrance suddenly occurred to him, "for Arabi Pasha counts upon sixty thousand of the Bedouin robbers and cutthroats to help him to rid Egypt of its Christian population. I have heard so on the best authority."

"I dare say they will be officered by those who will be able to keep them well under control, for I do not even yet believe that the war minister is one-quarter so black as he is painted," replied Nellie, gravely.

"You are welcome to think what you like of him, darling, since you cared for him so much that you preferred risking the perils and hardships of the wilderness with me. I think, though, that those infernal mountains are a little nearer, for I vow that desert air is more deceptive to distance than even water. There come the Bedouins out into the open desert at a trot.

"It was even so; there they were, humped on their camels and dromedaries, or bestriding their horses like Centaurs, with their long beards and the loose ends of their ticket kuffeeh (or shawl head coverings) streaming in the air, and the white moonlight glinting on their bright lance points, gun barrels, drawn swords and the whole battery of lesser weapons that each man carried in his broad leather belt.

"One of the camels, too, was surmounted by a small piece of artillery called a ginjaul capable of throwing a half pound ball to a great distance and with accurate aim as well.

"No sooner did the Bedouins discover the exact position of those of whom they were in search than they waved their tasseled lances and sent up a wild whoop into the moonlit heavens that sounded not unlike the chorus of wolves over an unexpected meal.

Nellie trembled and felt faint at the fierce and barbaric yell, and the young officer could not help exclaiming, "Would to heaven that we had hazarded the railway cars after all." But no sooner had the vain regret escaped his lips than Nellie rejoined, "You acted for the best, Frank, and God will protect us here as perfectly as in the train. We shall have to endure, perhaps, a longer suspense, but that is all."

As for Pat Monaghan, he replied to the Bedouin yells with a cheer that was almost as wild and quite as reckless, and as he too had a spear to wave he did it with a will.

In fact, like the petrel, which is only lively and cheerful in stormy weather, Pat was in his element again, and felt as men are prone to feel after a bottle of champagne.

When the Bedouins presently discharged their firearms and the bullets therefrom all fell short, making scores of little fountains of sand where they dropped, his joyous excitement reached its zenith and he exclaimed:

"Be jabers and if there was but another score of the old corps here to make up a matter of half dozen, we'd soon rid yer honor and the young leddy of them scarecrows," and at this point Pat sent up an eldrich shout of defiance.

"It's no use wishing for the impossible, Pat, and we must take comfort from the old saw that he who fights and runs away will live to fight another day."

This from his master; but Monaghan was not to easily pacified.

"Faith its running away widout any fighting at all, we are. Half a crust is better than no bread, so on the same principle one bite at a Bedouin would be more satisfying than six snaps at the empty air. But surrender and turf, it may come to that yet, for those ugly bastes wid their corporations on their backs are making the running, and no mistake, and the chap wid the swivel gun on his shoulder is slewing round to fire."

Frank Donelly gave utterance to an ejaculation that sounded like one of alarm, for on glancing round in turn he saw that the camel that carried the ginjaul headed the chase, and that it had been drawn up motionless to permit of the little piece of artillery being fired.

The match gleamed, and with a puff of white smoke a puff of red flame the ginjaul exploded with a shrill report, and the iron ball therefrom hummed over their heads and fell far in advance.

It was a most unpleasant discovery that they were already well within range of this novel kind of "bow-chaser," albeit that there was some ground for congratulation in the first ball having missed them.

Still, it was far from likely that all the rest would follow suit, which was evidently also the opinion of the Bedouins, so frantic was their joy on perceiving it splash up the sand in front of the fugitives.

"We must ride farther apart, aye, the length of an arm and sabre apart," said Frank Donelly, who rightly guessed that if the Bedouins were inclined to spare either of them it would be Nellie, and who therefore wished to give her a chance of life, though it might be denied to himself and Monaghan.

He thought she would not conjecture the reason of the change in formation, nor did she, beyond that it might be in order that a ball should not slay more than one at a time as the aim gradually grew to be more accurate, and this supposition caused the blood to run cold in her veins, for she felt that their peril must be great indeed.

Yet all three still tore on for dear life, heading straight for the mountains that every minute seemed to become vaster and nearer in their front, and which, could they but reach in time, might afford them some hiding place from their savage pursuers, though even that was but a bare hope on their parts, and on the other side of those hills they knew that there was another desert a hundred times more vast and terrible than even the one which they were now traversing.

On, still on, but now the agile dromedaries began to draw ahead of all their other pursuers, of all at least save the one that carried the ginjaul, and who seemed to be swifter than any of them, even though every now and then he was drawn sharp up to permit of that quaint but provoking piece of ordnance being discharged from his back.

The worst of it was that at each shot the aim of the swarthy-visaged, red-turbaned cannoneer was evidently improving, that is to say, if he hadn't been playing with them all along as a cat does with a mouse.

At last a ball hummed past so close to Pat's ear that he involuntarily raised a hand thereto to still the ringing in it.

Next he uttered a strange national interjection (in naming it after one of the nine parts of speech we are speaking mildly) and the next instant, to the infinite surprise of both his master and Nellie Trezarr, they beheld him turn round and spur furiously toward instead of away from the approaching score of Bedouins, who were now, however, stretched out over fully a quarter of a mile of desert, the gun camel and two dromedaries being well in advance of the others.

"Come back, madman!" shouted Frank Donelly, at the top of his voice, but Pat Monaghan wasn't as mad as his master deemed him, for though he rode straight at the camel and its rider and with fully as much ardor as that where with Don Quixote charged the windmill, yet he gained far more by the encounter than did the Knight of La Mancha, for though he made pretense to charge with his spear, yet no sooner did he get close by than quick as lightning he slung that, under the circumstances, useless weapon, and drawing his revolver gave the huge camel and the two dromedaries a couple of charges apiece.

To miss such bulky targets was almost impossible, and the camel immediately toppled over onto its nose dead, whilst one of the dromedaries sank on its side uttering the most plaintive bellows and its companion, maddened with the pain of a less serious wound, tore trumpeting across the plain, at right angles to the course that it had hitherto been pursuing; so having accomplished all that he had desired or intended, Pat came galloping back wild with glee to his companions, yelling at the top of his voice as he drew within earshot: "Faith, an' I've silenced that battery and dismounted it as well, an' sure, now that I've had a rale brush with the enemy I'll run away as fast as ever you like."

"I shouldn't wonder if you had saved all our lives by your courage, and whatever happens we'll consider ourselves indebted to you and it to no small degree, my brave fellow," responded Captain Donelly, as the three once more sped across the level desert side by side.

And in truth Monaghan had rendered no small service, since the race was now almost one of horse against horse, for the other camels that the Bedouins possessed seemed to be of no great account, two being heavy with foal and the remaining three evidently old and stiff.

Yet, though, thanks to Pat's valor, circumstances had wonderfully improved with them, the three fugitives were far from being out of the wood, for not one of their human foes was much the worse for Monaghan's skilful diversion in their favor, and though they were doubtless not a little disconcerted at the Feringhees being possessed of weapons that could do such a maximum of damage in such a minimum of time, their vastly superior numbers evidently gave them confidence that they must come off triumphant in the end, and so they still kept up the pursuit with ardor and with an increase of savagery.

But the race would now take a longer time in the running (both pursuers and pursued knew that), and the latter were cheered by the very minute nearer and nearer looming of the mountains, those mountains from whose summits Cairo and Alexandria are alike visible, with the blue ocean lapping the latter town and marking the highway to England.

Another ten minutes and the ground began to rise, five more and the desert sands were left behind and the bright blossoms of the prickly pear gleamed from between clefts in the bare and arid rocks, whilst higher up from between the natural columns of pillared basalt the wild fig and plum, the pomegranate, the date and the melon all bloomed together, amidst clustering masses of the pink and yellow wild rose.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE DEFIANCE OF THE SCORPION EATER.

Whilst ascending the mountain side Captain Donelly began vaguely to wonder what was to be done next. During their flight towards these hills his only thought had been of reaching them as the only possible place of safety, but now that they were reached, the question arose, wherein was their safety?

True, he had both read and been told that at a certain height they were perfectly riddled with caverns, which had been bored into their sides to form sepulchres so long ago that the race who had made them were forgotten even in those ancient days when Pharaoh reigned in Egypt and Joseph was his Vekil. But then, suppose that they could not find those caves, or worse still, that their pursuers saw them enter one of them, or even tracked them thither by the best points of their horses, for in either of these cases would it not in all probability form a perfect death trap for them, no matter whether their foes had the temerity to rush in and dispatch them at once or take the more prudent course of blockading the entrance and so starving them to death?

These were disturbing thoughts enough, and almost, indeed, too much for one man to bear, for the young officer could perceive that his faithful attendant, Pat Monaghan, placed the most perfect trust in his ingenuity for getting them all out of the scrape and that Nellie Trezarr reposed an equal degree of confidence in him.

How he wished that he could only believe that he deserved it, but he neither could nor dared so believe.

He was quite alive, however, to the vital importance of now or never getting well ahead of their pursuers, so that whatever ruse they endeavored to put in practice should be at all events unseen by them.

So in half a dozen words he expressed his views to his companions, and all three urged their horses up the now steep incline with what speed they were able, though never could they get beyond sound of the hoof-strokes of their pursuers.

Rough and rugged every now and then was the zigzag ascent, whilst sometimes the fugitives would have to ride in Indian file along the edge of a precipice of dizzy depth and where a single false step or stumble on the part of a horse would have launched both itself and rider into space, to be caught after many a gyration in mid air amongst the topmast branches whose leaves were stirred by the desert air hundreds of feet below.

On one occasion on looking down they descried their pursuers at least a hundred feet beneath them on the same winding path, and so situated that had they had any loose rocks at their command they could have rolled them over and crushed the Bedouins, or have hurled them from their narrow perch into mid-air, but their were no sufficiently heavy masses of stone about, capable of being rendered serviceable in this manner with a less efficient instrument than a lever or a crowbar, so that the flight had to be continued without pause and with no knowledge of where and how it would end; but anyhow, to attempt to cross the mountain, to descend on the other side and then to renew their flight across a second desert as vast and level and trackless as many a sea was not to be thought of.

Frank Donelly was still racking his brains and encouraging Nellie by turns, whilst Pat Monaghan brought up the rear whistling in subdued tones one popular Irish song after another, when all at once the soft cadence of some reed instrument became clearly audible at a little distance in the front.

The air was monotonous yet not unpleasing, but as much could not be said of the player, who at the next turn in the ascent was suddenly revealed to their view standing in the centre of the narrow mountain track and intently regarding the steep mossy banks on the right whilst he played.

So intent was he on what he was about that he neither heard nor saw those who were approaching him as fast as ever the steepness and roughness of the road permitted.

Then all at once he dropped his instrument and darted out his arm, and as it was withdrawn Captain Donelly perceived that it grasped a serpent which was writhing and twisting in a futile attempt to escape.

Whilst thus engaged the utter and unredeeming hideousness of the man became apparent.

He was clad in a mass of fluttering rags, and wherever his skin was bare (which it must have been in a hundred places at least) it was covered with coarse hair like a gorilla.

His naked and emaciated arms and legs were in the same condition, whilst a curly iron gray beard and whiskers reached upwards to his eyes and downwards to his waist, his long matted elf-locks streaming over his broad shoulders in the same filthy and unkempt condition.

To complete this appalling looking being's description his huge broad nose was almost blood red, his leaden lipped mouth showed through a volume of champed-up foam ranges of jagged yellow teeth that would have done credit to the jaws of a wolf, his ears were tremendous and almost as red as his nose, and his eyes gleamed beneath joined bushy brows with a dull red luminous glow that told either of madness or something more fearful still.

To add, if it were possible, to the horror of this seeming ghoul's appearance, he carried a big but somewhat dilapidated basket on his back, through every fissure in which a serpent's head was thrust forth, whilst over his shoulders, across his brawny breast and in and out through the filth of his hair and beard crawled a perfect colony of huge scorpions, their scales rattling and their death-dealing tails sometimes lashing the air.

Captain Donelly had by this time recognized in the strange and repulsive looking being who stood directly in their upward path one of those scorpion eaters and snake wizards that are so common in the cities of Egypt at certain seasons of the year, though at other times they are never seen, and who reap a rich harvest by charming houses from being entered by serpents or anathematizing away those who have already made a home therein; who also head sundry of the religious processions and pretend to be imbued with the spirit of prophesy, on which occasion they become so excited that they not only foam at the mouth, but scatter it all about them as they rave, when it is eagerly collected by their credulous dupes who fancy it will secure them certain admission to Paradise when they die, no matter what may be the number and weight of their sins.

But in half the time we have taken to describe this ghoul-like being Captain Frank Donelly had determined what he should do with him.

Doubtless he thought the mountain was his home and he was acquainted with its every cavern, in which case he would be able to show them many a secret hiding-place, from whose snug seclusion they would be able to laugh their foes to scorn; wherefore willing or unwilling, he should guide them thereunto.

He had no doubt that the man knew something of English, from the number of times he had doubtless performed before English-speaking people in Cairo, Alexandria and other places, and therefore at once tackled him in the language he best understood himself.

"My good fellow," said he, "we are pursued by Bedouins who would rob us of all that we possess and then murder us. Save us from such a fate and it shall be the best paid night's work that you have ever performed in your life."

The scorpion eater evidently understood what was said to him very well, but the promise of good pay altogether failed to win his services.

"Accursed Kaffirs," he yelled, "and is it to me that ye would appeal for your miserable live? To me who have quaffed of the blessed Zemzem well and kissed the black stone of Mecca? To me who have rubbed my brow against the sacred camel and flung stones at the devil? To me, who, by the leave of Allah and the friendship of the prophet, can handle the deadliest reptiles with impunity? By the hundred and fourteen Chapters of the El Khoran, if ye expect aid or assistance from Abou Seif the santon, ye are fools and the sons of fools."

The air of exultation with which he said all this sufficiently revealed the hatred which he bore to the entire European race, and as he concluded he planted himself right in the centre of the narrow pathway, with his right arm stretched toward them, and in the hand pertaining thereto, as though it had been a lethal weapon, the serpent he had just charmed forth from its nest in the bank, and which was a horrid looking reptile of at least five feet in length, and a flesh color inclining to rose, with a flat triangular shaped head, scintillating, rainbow-hued eyes, and an open mouth that displayed enormous poison fangs.

The snake looked as though at the charmers bidding it was prepared to leap from his hand upon who ever approached him, but so much more serious to Frank Donelly's notion was the danger fast coming up behind than the one which barred their passage in front that with a cheery word to Nellie not to be afraid, for that he was only "an old fool and humbug," he urged his horse forward, and as the huge serpent actually did spring toward him at the charmer's bidding, with one hissing sweep of his sabre, which for some little while he had held bare in his hand he cleft it right in twain the tail end dropping on the narrow path and the deadly head (fortunately, perhaps, for his horse's legs) going over into the abyss that yawned on their left.

Then, ere the somewhat astounded santon could draw another serpent from his basket, which it seemed to be his intention to do, Frank Donelly had him by the beard, which, grasping firmly, he first of all gave his beard a good shaking thereby and then said in stern tones:

"You will either save us or perish yourself. That you can save us I know, and if you dont or won't, I swear to you that the most remarkable thing which these Bedouins shall find about us when they overtake us will be your head severed from the body. Can you understand that?"

"Yes, yes," gasped the now frightened santon, "let go my beard and I will serve you truly. By Allah and the prophet, I will save you all."

"You can walk beside my horse as well as in front of it, for whilst I hold you in this way I'll be the better able to take off your head on the slightest show of lukewarmness or treachery. If you serve us well you shall be well paid—aye, paid beyond your most greedy desires; and you must know well enough, you old fool, that if you delivered us over to the Bedouins, they would only throw you a few paras for your pains."

All the while he was preaching to him in this manner, Frank Donelly was dragging him along likewise, for they were in no position to waste even a minute.

By the time that he had finished speaking, however, the santon seemed to see the force of his remarks and to fall in with his reasoning as well, for he said in more decided tones, "I will save you," and presently added, "Behold, the door that leads to safety is at hand."

Canadians who have been Knighted

The honor of a baronetcy, writes a correspondent, was granted to Canadians in three instances before the late Sir George Cartier was called to receive it. Sir James Stuart, Sir John Beverley Robinson and Sir Louis Hydolite La Fontaine are the three Canadian baronets whose patents precede that of Sir George Cartier. Sir James Stuart, who was Chief Justice of Lower Canada from 1838 until his death in 1853, was created a baronet in 1840. He was the President of the Special Counsel which assisted the Governor-in Chief to rule Lower Canada from 1838 till the union in 1841, and as such was of great service to the Home Government in the part he took in the framing of the Union Act. His son, the present Sir Charles Stuart, of Temple Bar (England), succeeded to his title. Sir Louis La Fontaine and Sir John Robinson were created baronets in 1854. The former, who became Sir Stuart's successor as Chief Justice of Lower Canada, had, while a member of the Parliament constituted by the Union Act, strenuously labored to establishing and maintaining forever in practice, the great principle of Responsible Government. He died in his chambers at the Court House, in Montreal in 1864, when his title descended to his eldest son, a miner, who, dying shortly afterwards, left it to his little brother. This latter baronet did not, however, long survive his elder brother and the title became extinct. Sir John Robinson, for many years Chief Justice of Upper Canada, was, perhaps, the greatest lawyer that ever adorned the bench of that Province. He distinguished himself to such a degree by his clear and forcible logic as to deserve to be surnamed the Canadian Mansfield. He was succeeded at his death by his eldest son, the present Sir James Lukin Robinson, of Beverley House, Toronto, one of whose brothers is Lieut-Governor of Ontario.

A GHASTLY TABLE.

The Most Remarkable Piece of Furniture in the World—Composed of Petrified Human Hearts, Intestines and Eyes.

Probably the most horrible and ghastly piece of furniture ever conceived, will be shown at the exhibition of the Franklin Institute, this year. The table is now in the Palazzo Pitti, Florence, Italy, and is the work of Guiseppi Sagatti, who was several years engaged in its construction. The material was drawn from about a hundred human corpses, and the table consists of a circular top resting upon a pedestal with four supports representing claws. The face of the table is about three feet in diameter and appears to be a fantastic but artistic work in marble, though, in reality, it is composed of the hearts, livers, muscles and intestines of the human body. The weird craftsman who originated this singular piece of furniture has been dead for many years and his work was completed half a century ago, the last corner of the table committing suicide over it before it was secured for the Palazzo Pitti.

Sagatti spent several years in perfecting a system of petrifaction and succeeded in discovering a process whereby the natural animal reaction in a corpse after death could be changed to mineral reaction by first securing immunity from decay by an embalming process, and afterwards immersing the body in a bath where it absorbed silicl particles. For the purpose of a practical illustration of the method and its results he set about making the table. The corpses necessary for the purpose were obtained from one of the hospitals. The intestines were used in the construction of the ornamental pedestal, and, having been pressed into shape, were petrified. The claws of the table were formed from the hearts, livers and lungs, which still retain the appearance of live flesh. The leaf of the table was composed of the larger muscles of the body artistically arranged together to form the desired effect. The table was intended to be highly ornamental, and though nothing was to be used in the construction but parts of the human body, the mind that first conceived it was not at a loss to find means of ornamentation. A hundred pairs of eyes or more and as many pairs of ears were petrified and artistically arranged around the edges. The effect was the most blood-curdling that could be imagined. The process succeeded in preserving the eyeballs in their natural state, so that after polishing they retained their color and general antemortem appearance with an intensified brilliance. This completed the task of the savant. He was proud of the result of his labors. The test of his process of petrifaction was eminently successful. He communicated his method to the medical world, but naturally it never became generally adopted, though it was well understood by surgeons and physicians.

A CURIOUS STORY.

There is scurious story attached to this remarkable piece of furniture. Before it was deposited in the Palazzo Pitti it was in possession of a Florentine gentlemanamed Giacomo Riccabocca. It was the central piece of furniture in his drawing-room and he delighted to exhibit it to his friends, at first speaking of it only as a grotesque piece of handicraft, the work of a mad sculptor, and subsequently, turning down the lights to add effect to the recital of its real history. One Christmas he had several guests from a distance. Early in the evening they sat down around the ghastly table and began a game of ecarte. Play was heavy and it had continued for several hours. The wax tapers cast a dim light over the scene and caused the eyes of stone which caught its rays to assume a ghastly glitter. Riccabocca was a heavy loser. He was noticed to be very pale, often shuddered and repeatedly wiped his brow, on which the cold sweat was plainly visible. He gave less attention to the cards than any of the others, and frequently turned his gaze upon two of the eyes at the edge of the table opposite him.

At last he rose and paced the room excitedly. But the ornamentation of the table seemed to fascinate him, and he kept his looks fixed on it. At last he sat down, and, despite the advice of his friends, who could not understand what was the matter, insisted on resuming play. Still his eyes were fixed on the ghastly rim of the table. He bet his money recklessly and played his cards as carelessly.

"Change your seat: that one is unlucky," said one of the guests.

"No, I cannot," was the reply, in a plaintive tone.

The guest covered the horrible eyes on the table with his arms, but Riccabocca pleaded for him to uncover them, and began talking excitedly.

"I have not yet told you the truth about this table," he said. "Perhaps you will not believe me. Those parts of the human body which you see and fancy to be the fantastic work of a sculptor are not natural stone. This claw is not of marble. It is the heart of a woman turned to stone. Those eyes are not of glass. These are vitrified eyes of men. To-night, sitting here, those two eyes became brilliant with the light of life and fixed their gaze on me. They burned into my inmost being, but I was so fascinated that I could not look away. Their uncanny glitter seems to reach my very soul. They will affect me through eternity. I cannot stand it. They will drive me mad."

He seized an old dagger from where it hung on the wall. Before any of his guests could interfere to prevent his design he plunged it in his breast and fell dying in the arms of his friends.

"I escape them at last," were his last words. The blood welling up in his throat choked further utterance, and he lay dead beside the table.

His heirs were only too glad to accept the liberal offer of the governors of the palace for a relic which would have ever been a ghastly reminder of the manner of their inheritance.

"Bless me!" he said, looking at the clock, "it's after eleven. How the time flies! I had no idea it was so late." It's better late that never," she said, hiding a yawn.

What is the origin of motion?" asked a celebrated preacher. Well, there are many origins. A call to come up and have a drink will bring fifty men to their feet in a second, and a spider down a girl's neck is the origin of the liveliest motion the world ever saw.

SEED WHEAT.

We have learned that quite a number of farmers have been speculating in "Russian Amber" seed wheat, but who have come to the conclusion that $6 per bushel is more than the wheat is worth,

We saw a sample this week, and it is the opinion of grain buyers that it is Manitoba wheat, and frozen at that; not being worth more than 80 cents per bushel laid down here. When farmers will speculate in shoddy goods, patent churns, hay forks, or even seed wheat, we may look out for squalls. It is surprising how people will drive close bargains and put economy in practice to a fault in matters and dealings generally with their neighbors and resident and responsible business men, and the minute a stranger comes along, they are ready to take the bait, and fork over their hard earnings with enthusiastic liberality. We have often warned the public against having any truck with those land sharks, but we might as well recommend the rascals to the sympathies and generous support of the public, for all the difference it makes, as it appears nothing but bitter experience will teach some.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Some days ago Mr. W. Hanley was summonsed before J. W. Armstrong and M. Richardson, J. P's, by order of Capt. Campbell of No. 6 Company Volunteers (31st Battalion), upon charge preferred against him for not accompanying his Company last year to annual drill, and also for not returning his military clothing to the proper officer. Several witnesses were heard when the court rose for dinner. After the court again resuming business, the case evidently going hard against the defence, Capt. Campbell leniently withdrew the case by Mr. Hanley returning his clothing and paying all costs, to which he assented.

Wedding Bells.—Mr. John Chard and Miss Minnie, daughter of Peter Holman, Esq., of this village, were united in marriage by the Rev. Mr. Ayers a few days ago. The young couple has returned from their wedding tour and are now settled down to the realities of life. We wish them happiness and prosperity.

Also our popular and enterprising editor of the Advance, A. B. Fawcett, Esq., on the 27th ult., had his cup of happiness made full by taking to himself a partner in life in the person of Miss Maggie, second daughter of Mr. James Carberry of Chinguacousy, Peel Co., Ont. The happy couple were united in marriage by the Rev. J. C. Wilmott, M.A., at the residence of the bride's father, after which they proceeded to Toronto and spent a few days there, arriving in Flesherton on Saturday evening last, when they were met at the depot by our genial boys of the brass band and were by them escorted home. The happy editor contributed handsomely to the band fund and treated our band in his usual gentlemanly manner. We wish to the editor and his bride a happy and prosperous journey through life.

SWELLED NECK.

Mrs. Henry Dobbs, of Berridale, Parry Sound, testifies to a prompt cure of enlarged glands of the neck and sore throat by the internal and external use of Hagyard's Yellow Oil. Yellow Oil is a sure relief for all painful conditions.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

A fire last Wednesday morning completely destroyed a barn, threshing machine, self-binder and ordinary contents belonging to Isiah Winters of Collingwood and situated on third line Osprey. Cause unknown.

The remains of Mrs. George Davidson, 8th line Osprey, were followed to their last resting place in Feversham on the 30th Jan. by a large concourse of friends.

The Presbyterians of Feversham intend holding their annual tea-meeting shortly, when something good may be expected.

Charles Neil intends opening out a splendid stock of goods some of those days in the building lately occupied by Hall Bros. W. H. Campaigne is doing a good business in the mills now; and business generally seems good in all lines just now in the village of Feversham.

W. L. B. Hamlin has again made his cheerful appearance; this time at McIntyre's corners, having purchased the stock of George Rheum. His family arrives next week.

It is whispered that Bridget, the wife of Phiz, of Maxwell, is no better. Her state is said to be critical.

J. Allison of Maxwell, is preparing to leave the hotel.

A fight in Feversham last Wednesday morning between George Madden and one Fisher, resulted in a few sore spots.

J. Allison sold out his furniture and household effects on the 30th Jan., and the new landlord is expected on Monday.

HEADACHE.

If you suffer from headache you may be sure that your Stomach, Liver or Blood is at fault, and perhaps all three are combined in bad action. If so, the best remedy is Burdock Blood Bitters, which cures Headache by regulating the organic action generally.

Holland Centre.

(From our correspondent:)

Rev. D. Perry started special services in the Methodist church here on Wednesday evening last, and the attendance is good.

Mr. E. H. Neelands, waggonmaker of Massie, has bought Mr. T. Williscroft's waggon shop, and, we understand, intends to move here in the spring. He is a good workman, and we are glad to see such men come to our thriving village.

Our new lock-up on the corner of Front and Mill streets had 8 or 10 prisoners put into it one night when the keeper slumbered. The doors were opened, and I do not know whether they sang or not, but no doubt they were glad to get something to eat. These prisoners were no less than 8 or 10 hens that had been put into Mr. Timson's building without leave, and he locked them up, of course, to find out who they belonged to.

Mr. Joseph Roulston gets two months in jail in Barrie on account of his professional services in the patent churn business.

NERVOUSNESS.

The unhappy and distressing condition called nervousness arises from debility, irritation, poor circulation and blood of low vitality. Reorganize the system by Burdock Blood Bitters, which gives permanent strength by invigorating the blood and toing all the organs with perfect action.

OWEN SOUND.

High School Raised To The Status Of A Collegiate Institute.

ELOQUENT ADDRESS BY THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION.

Owen Sound, Jan. 28.—The Owen Sound High School was yesterday raised to the status of a Collegiate Institute and personally dedicated by the Minister of Education. The Hon. G. W. Ross arrived here by the 1 p. m. train, and was escorted to the Queen's Hotel by the members of the School Board and other prominent citizens, where they partook of luncheon. The Minister was then taken to the School, where he delivered a brilliant address to the pupils and formally dedicated the School to the higher educational work of an Institute. In the evening a public meeting was held in the town hall, when the Minister delivered a most eloquent and impressive address, giving, as he said, "a bird's-eye view" of

OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM.

The hall was literally packed, many being unable to gain admittance to hear the hon. gentleman. Mr. Ross confined himself closely to educational matters, and delivered one of the most eloquent addresses ever listened to by an Owen Sound audience. The Institute building, the Minister said, was one of the finest in the Province, and the staff of teachers of the highest literary character in their several departments. He predicted a successful career for the Owen Sound Collegiate Institute.

In this climate it is of the greatest importance that a Cough should be cured immediately, as delay is liable to bring on Pulmonic Complaints that will take considerable time and money to cure. Always be prepared and have a bottle of West's Cough Syrup on hand, the remedy that was never known to fail. Cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness and all Throat and Lung troubles. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Druggists. Price 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

Feb. 4

Owen Sound, Ont., Feb. 1.—This morning about 6.30 a fire broke out on Poulette street in the premises occupied by W. H. Paulin, stove and tinsmith. A number of buildings were totally destroyed, together with contents. The following are the losses: W. Blanchard, & Co., general store, building and stock damage; Miss Hannah, millinery; W. Wooton, total loss; W. A. Grier, grocer, building and stock total loss; W. H. Paulin, tinsmith, total loss; Mrs. Malone, millinery, total loss; B. Wilcox, fancy goods, partial loss.

A BAD BREAKDOWN.

It is a common thing now-a-days to hear on complain of feeling all broken down with a faint, weary, restless languor, with strength and appetite nearly gone, and no well defined cause. This is general debility, which Burdock Blood Bitters promptly relieves, and most invariably cures.

15 below zero last night.

SEARCHING FOR PROOF.

There is no trouble in ascertaining from any druggist the true virtues of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for all painful and inflammatory troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, frost bites, burns, bruises, sprains, contracted cords, stiff joints, aches, pains and soreness.

Rutledge & Crosson moved to Acton to-day.

NO BLUNDERBUS.

There is no blundering in the dark—in the action of Burdock Blood Bitters upon the system. It is no scattering shot-gun prescription, no cure-all; but it acts directly upon the four cardinal points of health: the stomach, the liver, the bowels, and the blood, and works its cures in a natural manner through nature's channels.

This is the coldest snap this winter.

A SEASONABLE ITEM.

During the breaking up of winter, when the air is chilly and the weather damp, such complaints as rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat, croup, and other painful effects of sudden cold, are prevalent. It is then that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is found truly valuable as a household remedy.

Another Doctor and Drug Store is to be in Markdale shortly.

A WISE CHOICE.

In selecting a remedy for coughs and colds the wise choice is to take one that loosens the tough mucous clinging to the air passages. Such a remedy as Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, which promptly breaks up hard colds and their troublesome effects.

Jim. Munshaw is in town.

IN A DANGEROUS CONDITION.

Any man, woman or child is in a dangerous condition when neglecting a constipated state of the bowels. There can be no perfect health without a regular action of this function. Burdock Blood Bitters cure constipation by imparting a healthy tone to all the secretions.

John Noble is recovering his recent severe illness.

DEAFNESS.

The propriators of Hagyard's Yellow Oil have bona fide certificates of some most remarkable cures of Deafness, by that magical remedy for pain, Yellow Oil also cures Rheumatism, Sprains, Bruises, Sore Throat, and also inflammatory troubles.

Secretary Bayard's wife is dead.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Dability and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

County Council.

From the O. S. Times.

THE Council met in their new Council Chamber, at the Court House, on Tuesday last at 2 p. m. The members not being all present, the Clerk adjourned the Council to 7. p. m.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The Council met at 7. p. m. The following are the members composing the County Council of Grey for 1886:—

Artemesia—W. H. Christoe, Reeve; J. McArthur, Deputy-Reeve.

Bentinck—D. McNicol, Reeve; J. Messenger, 1st Deputy-Reeve; J. McCallum, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Collingwood—J. Rorke, Reeve; A. Campbell, 1st Deputy Reeve; W. Hewgill, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Derby—J. Robertson, Reeve; W. Brien, Dep. Reeve.

Durham—D. Jamieson, Reeve.

Egremont—W. Caulfield, Reeve; D. McCormack, Dep. Reeve.

Euphrasia—T. Gilray, Reeve; W. Fawcett, Dep. Reeve.

Glenelg—Chas. Moffatt, Reeve; A. McCuaig, Dep. Reeve.

Holland—J. Cameron, Reeve; A. Shute, Dep. Reeve.

Keppel—W. A. Totten, Reeve; J. Clark, Dep. Reeve.

Meaford—A. Thompson, Reeve; J. J. Johnston, Dep. Reeve.

Normanby—V. Lang, Reeve; G. H. Schenck, 1st Dep. Reeve; R. Watson, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Osprey—Andrew McGirr, Reeve; A. McIntyre, Dep. Reeve.

Owen Sound—John Chisholm, Reeve; J. W Frost, 1st Dep. Reeve; J. C. Miller, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Proton—S. Rogers, Reeve; J. Agnew, Dep. Reeve.

Sarawak—R. McNaught, Reeve.

St. Vincent—J. Bowes, Reeve; N. Read, Dep. Reeve.

Sullivan—J. Bearman, Reeve; J. Stewart, Dep. Reeve.

Sydenham—W. Lang, Reeve; H. Gordon, 1st Deputy Reeve; C. H. Heming, 2nd Deputy Reeve.

All the above members presented their certificates as being duly elected, except A. McGirr, Reeve of Osprey, and W. Brien, Deputy Reeve of Derby, who were absent through illness.

The Clerk called the Council to order and asked for nominations for Warden.

Mr. D. McNichol, Reeve of Bentinck, nominated Mr. Victor Lang Reeve of Normanby, as Warden. He said Mr. Lang had taken a prominent part in the affairs of the Council since becoming a member; and that he represented a township that had never been represented by a Warden. Mr. Lang also represented a large class in this county, namely the German population, and for these reasons he proposed him as Warden.

Mr. Caulfield, Reeve of Egremont, seconded the nomination.

Mr. John Clark, Deputy Reeve of Keppel, nominated Mr. N. Read, Deputy Reeve of St. Vincent, as Warden. He said the Council all knew Mr. Read; and then he was a Deputy Reeve. The Reeves had hitherto been running the Wardenship; but they proposed that the Deputy Reeves should now have a whack at it.

The nomination was seconded by Mr. Gilray, Reeve of Euphrasia.

There being no other nominations, Messrs. S. J. Parker and R. Edgar were appointed scrutineers in the ballot for Warden. They reported as follows:—Lang, 20, Read, 19.

Mr. Lang was then declared Warden, and after being introduced by his mover, Mr. McNichol, he returned his hearty thanks on behalf of his township and himself for the honor conferred upon him.

On motion a special committee of five were then balloted for to strike standing committees for the year, resulting in the appointment of Messrs. Christoe, Cameron, McNichol, Read and Clark.

Minutes of last day of December session were read and confirmed.

Mr. Geo. Inglis, Chairman of Board of Education, at their request invited the Council to be present at the formal opening of the Owen Sound Collegiate Institute by the Minister of Education, at 2:30 on Wednesday afternoon; also to the Town Hall in the evening, when addresses would be given by the Minister of Education and others.

The Council adjourned to 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The Warden read the following communications:—

Applications to be appointed Auditors, from R. Edgar, Owen Sound; from John McDonald, Chatsworth; and from Jno. Albery, Meaford.

A letter from Minister of Education in answer to memorial asking that summer vacations be shortened, stating that vacations were settled by act of Legislature.

A memorial of W. Armstrong, Clerk of the Peace, asking that his income be paid by stated salary, instead of by fees, as heretofore. He asked a fixed salary of $1,200; and stated in the early history of the Council also acted as County Solicitor, would perform the duties of both offices for a salary of $1,400.

Letters from Treasurer of County of Bruce in reference to moneys expended on county line, all of which had been paid by Bruce, and asking that half of the same be refunded.

Presentment of Grand Jury in December, 1885, setting fourth that the County Gaol was in good condition; glad to see alterations in Court House, which would make it more convenient; congratulating Council on small criminal list compared with size of county; and asking that jurors be allowed $2 per day instead of $1.50 while attending court.

Letters from Thos. Gordon, regarding a paper on stock laws read at the recent Farmers' Institute. As there was dissatisfaction with existing stock laws, it was thought that a general stock law should be passed, that stock should not be permitted to run at large except under care of an herdsman. The Council were invited to give their views by memorial to Government.

Letter from W. Ferguson, stating that in an appeal held at Flesherton against a certain By-law—that By-law was sustained.

Letter from Prisoners' Aid Association, setting forth that there was a large debt on their building, and asking aid from this municipality in common with others.

Treasurer's statement of non-resident land fund of each municipality; also statement that a five years' debenture of $25,000 had matured on 5th Jany., which he had re invested at 5 per cent. Debentures to the amount of $75,000 would also mature this year, requiring re-investment.

Application from Jno. J. Dalton, Chatsworth, asking appointment as County Engineer.

Letter from Co. Clerk at Stratford, asking Council to unite in a memorial to Government to make width of sleighs 8 feet 9 inches, and width of waggon tires to be not less than 3 inches.

Letter from township of York, asking this Council to unite in memorial to Legislatures to ask amendments in Municipal Act, regarding powers to open streets.

Report of W. Ferguson Inspector, respecting schools in South Grey.

A number of accounts were read.

Mr. Read presented report of special committee to strike the standing committees as follows:—

Finance and Assessment—Messrs. Christoe, McNicol, Rorke, Robertson, Caulfield, Gilray, Moffatt, Cameron, Totten, Schenck, McGirr, Rogers, Bowes, Gordon, Bearman, McNaught, Thompson, Jamieson, Chisholm—Rorke, Chairman.

Road and Bridge—Messrs. McIntyre, McCuaig, McCormack, Clark, Fawcett, Stowart, Agnew, Messenger, Heming, Miller, Thompson, Shute, Brien, Read, McArthur, Hewgill, Watson—Clark, Chairman.

County Property—Christoe, Read, Miller, W. Lang, McNicol, Watson, Johnston, Moffatt, McIntyre—Christoe, Chairman.

Education—Messrs. Gilray, Brien, Hewgill, Heming, Frost, Shute, Read, Campbell, McArthur, Rogers, Johnston, Schenck—Read, Chairman.

Printing—Messrs. Miller, Campbell, McCallum, Clark, Gilray, Bowes, Watson—Miller, Chairman.

Communications and Memorials—Messrs. Frost, Cameron, Read, Jamieson, Messenger, McGirr, Rorke- Frost, Chairman.

A By-law to appoint Co. Auditors was introduced and read first and second times.

The Council went into committee on above By-law—the Warden appointing R. Edgar, as one Auditor, and John Albery of Meaford, Jno. McDonald of Chatsworth, and Jas. Cavanaugh of Proton being severally nominated on behalf of the Council. A vote being taken, after a short discussion respecting the merits of each, stood—Albery 14, McDonald 8, Cavanaugh 15.

The By-law was then filled up with the names of R. Edgar, and Jas. Cavanagh—the salary of each auditor being fixed at $50.

By laws to appoint High School Trustee; to appoint a Board of Audit; and to confirm a By-law of Keppel, closing up a certain road, were read first and second times.

On motion a committee was appointed to inquire into the sufficiency of the Treasurer's securities and report.

On motion of Mr. Jamieson, seconded by Mr. Watson, the Warden was requested to prepare a memorial to

The Council then adjourned till 9 o'clock on Thursday.

CAPTURE OF KING THEBAW.

Burmese Royalty on Board a Bullock Waggon.

After the capture of Mandalay by General Prendergast a correspondent of The London Standard made his way as speedily as possible to the Palace. Of his trip and what he saw he writes :—

The Royal Gate, which no one but the King has ever before used, was passed through ; the equally sacred stairs beyond ascended, and we then wound through a long series of detached houses, the peculiarity of which seemed to be that one never went straight from one to another, but always round corners and up and down stairs and through gates. For utter irregularity of plan and structure I should say the Mandalay Palace beats anything ever erected. The houses themselves seemed to be either throne rooms supported by round gilded wooden posts, with interiors a sombre splendour of gold and dull red, or mere outhouses with stacks of arms of all sorts and lumber. I must except from this description one or two delicate little interiors which I saw but did not enter, belonging, I believe, to the Queen. The exteriors, from a small distance, are simply charming in their light elegance of form, and their rich gilding, carving, and colour. The latter is frequently obtained by what I am reluctant to call sham jewellery—little irregular coloured mirrors are massed in a pattern every here and there in the heavy gilding, and the effect a little way off is of gold and diamonds, emeralds and rubies. Closer the gilding is rough, and the glass is apparent, and everything looks

AS SCENE-PAINTING DOES FROM THE WINGS.

All above the floor is, of course, of wood, and there is never a second storey, for Burmese Royalty would be most gravely insulted were it possible that profane feet could tread above its sacred head. The roofs are the many-eaved pyramids of Indo China, which look clumsy and poor in pictures, but which, seen in a bright sun against the clear sky, in their own country and in their own bright colouring, have as fine an effect to my mind, at least, as any of the many devices with which man has covered his houses or his temples. After the buildings came a number of small fenced enclosures, shaded by trees, which, but for the fact that soft soil instead of smooth lawn filled them, would have been beautiful to a degree, and it was in one of these, in a little raised house, that we at last found and the Queen's mother. The King seated at an opening in the low platform of the house, had no particular richness in his dress, and was, as far as I remember, without jewelery, the only Royal appendage that I noticed being a huge gold spittoon, so heavy that it is said to take two men to carry it. In personal appearance he was stout, and looked a little heavy and unintelligent, but if anything I should judge him to be good-humoured. There was a certain quiet dignity about him, I think, and which I suppose seven years of absolute power must give any one. The really interesting figure to me, and I think to all present, was the Queen, who crouched behind the King in the orthodox Court position of respect. Only two European men were known to have seen her, and innumerable had been the stories we had all heard of her. She had been credited with uncounted executions, many of them of her relations or her rivals—and the two are here synonymous—one of the most horrible being the tale, well or ill founded I cannot say, that she had caused a poor girl, who had attracted Thebaw's attention and was enciente by him to be beaten to death. Many of these stories of what took place in these inner rooms are inventions, and let us hope that this at least is so. That she has possible rivals is certain, and only the other day I was speaking to some of her half sisters (the most dangerous of possible rivals), who still wept and at the mere mention of her name. She has a rather fine forehead, good eyes, a nose not as straight in profile as it might be, a rather small chin, to which the side lines of her face slope rather rapidly from the slightly prominent cheek-bones and broad forehead. She looks both young and clever, and but for one feature would, I think, be good-looking. This feature, it is scarcely necessary, I suppose to say, is her mouth. Her lips are thin and prominent, and a strong curve gives them a hard look, which spoils the rest of the face. When animated, as she mostly was when I saw her, for she was eagerly whispering to the King nearly all the time, she gave one the idea of much cunning power. The Queen's mother, one of the wives of Thebaw's father, the only one, I suppose, who has escaped death or imprisonment, sat near her, and was an uninteresting looking old woman, who is said, however, to have been the King's most prudent counsellor and whose advice if followed would have averted the present catastrophe. We retired after the interview, leaving Thebaw to make his

THE KING AND QUEEN,

SHUDDERED WITH THE MOST ABJECT TERROR

PREPARATIONS FOR THE JOURNEY.

I took advantage of the opportunity to look about the deserted palace, and found the white elephant close to the great throne room. He was a very ordinary animal, much like any other young elephant, but close inspection showed a couple of small dirty white patches behind his ears, which constitute, I suppose, his right to his title. Above him, in the tall golden house, was a white embroidered State canopy ; against the pillars stood great gold umbrellas, and near him a great hemispherical silver vessel three or four feet in diameter, from which I suppose he drank. It was empty, and as the sacred elephant had, like the king, been abandoned, I filled a brass bowl with water and offered it to him. Whether he was not accustomed to water, or regarded brass as an insult, I do not know, but the gift produced a considerable outburst of temper, and the bowl was roughly treated and finally stamped on by his Sanctity, whom we left to cool down to a sense of his new position. I hope the coming regime will respect him. At length the king came out, after causing a wait of the most prolonged kind. Arrangements had not been made for the transport to the steamer of himself and family until the interview, and the suggestion that some doolies, such as the wounded are carried in, were available was regarded as a good one. Eventually, a ratner of his own was entered by the King, the Queen, and her mother, and a still commoner one, which for dignity was perhaps inferior to the London four-wheeler, received some others of the household. These were followed by a train of attendants, mostly girls, on foot, carrying bundles of baggage ; and so, heavily guarded by troops, this melancholy procession of fallen greatness started for the river. Even as to the road the arrangements seemed defective, for a considerable detour was made, of which several explanations had been given, the most probable to my mind, being that it was a mistake. Anyhow it was dark before the Thevriah was reached, after a weary perambulation through the streets, which must have been painful to a degree to Thebaw. to suppose the ship is now well on her way I Rangoon.

COMMON BULLOCK CARRIAGE

The Princesse de Lamballe.

One of the most tragic stories of the French Revolution is that of the Princesse de Lamballe, the wife of a great grandson of Louis XIV., and the cherished friend of Marie Antoinette. Left a widow at the age of nineteen, she devoted herself to the queen, and engaged in various charitable schemes. A contemporary describes her as being a "sweet, kind, o liging woman, incapable of an evil thought."

When the black cloud of revolution and anarchy descended upon the kingdom, the princess hastened to the side of the queen, having been previously with her father-in-law in the country. On the evening when Louis XVI. took flight with his family, she also took flight, crossed the channel to Dover, and went thence to Aix-la-Chapelle, where she remained to watch the progress of events The news from Paris became more hopeless, the queen's letters more despairing, and Madame de Lamballe made her will, and set out for France. She had now irrevocably cast in her lot with that of the royal family.

Having so recently been in Germany, where it was supposed she had carried on communication with the exiled nobility, who were there plotting to invade their country, she was from the first subjected to the suspicions of the Republican party.

When Louis XVI., with his family, quitted his palace, to seek the treacherous protection of the Assembly, Madame de Lamballe accompanied them. With them she was placed in the prison of the Temple, whence, with two other ladies, she was taken to the Hotel de Ville, to undergo an examination on the charge of carrying on a secret correspondence. They were then transferred to the prison of La Force.

The end was not far away. One morning the princess lay trembling in her solitary cell, when the door was thrown open, and two rough-looking men, in the uniform of the National Guard, entered, and ordered her to get up and prepare to accompany them.

Leaning on the arm of one of the guards, she descended to the prison hall, where the men acting as judges were seated. The room was filled with armed executioners, whose hands, faces, and garments were stained with blood. From the gateway came the roars of the mob, calling for fresh victims. Twice the poor princess fainted before she could be made to undergo an examination, which ran thus :

"Your name !"

"Maria Louisa, Princess of Savoy."

"Your condition !"

"Superintendante of the queen's household."

"Were you aware of the conspiracies at Court on the tenth of August ?"

"If there were any conspiracies on the tenth of August, I had no knowledge of them."

"Then swear to love liberty and equality, and to hate the king and queen and royalty."

"I will take the first oath, but not the last. It is not in my heart."

Here some one standing near whispered,—

"Swear, then, or you're a dead woman !"

The prisoner made no reply, and one o the judges gave the usual signal for dismissal, saying,—

"Let madame be set at liberty."

Two of the men caught her by either arm and led her out between them, with the probable intention of saving her if they could.

Once outside, in the midst of the mob, in sight of the ground strewn with corpses, in hearing of yells for blood, her senses again forsook her, and she fell backward between her conductors.

Instantly she received on the head a blow from a bludgeon ; this was followed by a stroke from a sabre, and this by a rain of pike-thrusts, which brought her bleeding to the ground.

The last scene in the sad tragedy was the display outside the queen's window, by the mad populace, of the Princess de Lamballe's head, borne aloft on a pike.

The Early Experiments of a Great Engineer.

When about ten years old, Eads' father fitted for him a small workshop, and there he constructed models of saw-mills, fire-engines, steamboats, steam-engines, electrical and other machines. One of the part-times of his childhood was to take in pieces and put together again the family clock, and at twelve years he was able to do the same with a patent-lever watch, with no tools but his pocket knife. When thirteen, misfortune overtook his father, and he had to withdraw from school and work his own way. His parents went to St. Louis in 1833 and he went with them. The steamer was burned in the night on the way there, and he landed bare-footed and coatless, on the very spot now covered by the abutment of the great steel bridge which he designed and built. The only opening in the way of business that offered, was to sell apples on the street, and by this means, for a few months, he sustained himself and assisted in supporting his mother and sisters. In time he obtained a situation in a mercantile firm, where he remained for five years. One of the heads of the house having an excellent library, gave him access to it, and he used his opportunity well to study subjects bearing upon mechanics, machinery, civil engineering, and physical science. In 1839 he obtained employment as a clerk or purser on a Mississippi River steamer. He again made the best use of his opportunity to acquire the complete knowledge of the great river which he was afterward able to turn to such good account in the noble enterprises he so fortunately carried into effect. In 1842 he constructed a diving-bell boat to recover the cargoes of sunken steamers. This was followed with a boat of larger tonnage, provided with machinery for pumping out the sand and water and lifting the entire hull and cargo of the vessel. A company was formed to operate this device, and it soon had a business that covered the entire Mississippi River, from Belize to Galena, and even branched into some of its tributaries. By his methods, a great many valuable steamers were set afloat and restored to usefulness which it would not previously have been possible to save, as they would have been buried very soon beneath the river-sands. It was while engaged in this business that he gained a thorough knowledge of the laws which control the flow of silt-bearing rivers, and of the Mississippi he was able to say years afterward that there was not a stretch in its bed fifty miles long, between St. Louis and New Orleans, in which he had not stood upon the bottom of the stream beneath the shelter of the diving bell.

In Alabama they chew the tassels of the fir trees as a substitute for tobacco, "which," says a correspondent, "reminds me of the adage, 'be fir-chewers and you will be happy.'"

On the door-plate of a Brooklyn residence may be read : "Mrs. Gibbs, elocutionist, poetess, washer and ironer." The washer and ironer probable support the elocutionist and poetess.

The blissful elasticity of spirit which a self-made man is supposed to possess, is despondency itself compared to that ecstatic buoyancy of soul which permeates the being of the street arab who has learned to play a tune on the mouth organ.

THE BEAR AND THE SETTING HEN.

A Bear once fell in love with a Setting Hen, and told her one day that she might go to a picnic, and he would hatch out her eggs for her. She consented, and the gallant Bear took his position on the nest in the regulation manner, but soon got up looking as if he had been reclining in a bowl of eggnog as a substitute for an arm-chair. "The next Hen I fall in love with must do her own hatching," he remarked to himself in great disgust, as he took his melancholy departure ; "I hatched out the eggs at the very first clatter, but there are no chickens in them."

MORAL :—This Fable teaches that some duties pertaining to the domestic economy are too subtle and mysterious to be brilliantly discharged by the Lords of Creation.

PERSONAL.

Signor Baldi of Genoa boasts the possession of the fetter once worn by Christopher Columbus.

Sir Leonard Tilley received a New Year's turkey from a friend in Quebec that turned the scales at twenty-eight pounds.

Musurus Pasha, who will spend most of his time in England, has received the privilege of "the entree" at court for life.

George Bancroft, the historian, now 86, and George H. Calvert, 83, are the only Americans living who ever saw the great Goethe.

A. E. Poe, who claims to be a cousin of Edgar A. Poe, is employed in the unpoetical and exceedingly practical work of teaching in a public school at Glenwood Springs, Col.

Mr. John W. Mackay's grandson, called the "young Prince Colonna," is to be christened in grand style at a cost of $600, which, says the New York World, is said to be more than the child's father receives in a year for serving as an officer in the Italian army.

Mr. William Edgar Marshall, the artist engraver of New York city, is engaged upon a portrait of Confederate General Lee from a negative taken in Richmond during the war and declared to be, by General G. W. Custis Lee, the only profile negative of his distinguished father in existence.

Mr. George Augustus Sala makes English readers of his letters from Melbourne uncomfortable by declaring that laboring men in Australia earn eight shillings for a days' work of eight hours, eat meat three times a day and have no State church to support or State drones to feed.

Lily Macalister Laughton, regent of Mount Vernon Association is claimed to have "the smallest and most perfect formed foot in America." She also has her second husband, and it is related that just before her marriage she gave one of her slippers to a charitable fair, when it was raffled for. The lucky number was obtained by Bishop Potter's son, Frank Potter, who used his prize as a watch case.

N. Floquet, who wants to be President of the French Republic, has for his wife one of the most charming women in all Europe. She is a woman of affairs, too, and is known in the crowded corners of Paris as a good wife. "Wherever she shows herself," writes an admirer, "she is greeted with a hum of admiration. I never saw a finer quality of long, smooth, jet black hair than hers, and her clear olive complexion, smooth skin, black expressive eyes, rosy lips, and smiling eyes speak of perfect health."

There died in England a few weeks ago, aged 89, a wealthy old harridan in high life, in the person of Lady Rolle, who, in effrontery and imperiousness, out-Kewed Lady Kew. Although she exercised most autocratic sway as a hostess, she was on one occasion, at least, completely outwitted. Among her guests was the daughter of an Irish Earl, a very frisky damsel. The men in the house were not to her taste as partners, yet she felt like dancing. She whispered her wishes to some other young lady guests, and found them quite of her mind. Presently the sound of a waltz drew Lady Rolle to the room, when, to her rage and amazement, she beheld Lady H. whirling round in the embrace of a stalwart and handsome powdered footman, while her friends followed her in the arms of similar gallants.

Two Englishmen went to Boston, the home of American culture, to get some intellectual inspiration. This is their story : —"When we arrived in Boston we hired a cab, and told the driver to show us the principal sights. He jumped up on his box with alacrity." I'll take you first," he said, "to see J. L. Sullivan's house." "Who is he ?" we inquired. "Never heard of J. L ?" responded cabby. "Why, where do you hail from ?" "From England," was the reply. "Never heard of him there ? why, he's our great fighting man." "Rubbish !" said my friend impatiently ; "we come to see Boston, a great intellectual centre, and the first thing you propose to show us is the house of a brutal prize fighter." Cabby muttered that the house in question was a fine one, and then suggested driving us to the market."

Apropos of Lord Carnarvon's rumored return in England to the Secretaryship of State for the Colonies, the Herald remarks : It was this office in Lord Beaconsfield's Cabinet that he resigned on a question arising out of the Russo-Turkish war. He was a successful minister on the whole, though he failed in his attempt to confederate the South African Colonies after the example of Canada. He will be remembered in Canada as having been the Secretary of State for the Colonies when the act confederating the British North American Colonies was passed, and as the umpire in the dispute between the Dominion and the Province of British Columbia, although the so-called Carnarvon terms were the suggestions of the Canadian Government and not the Colonial Secretary's. Lord Carnarvon is still in the prime of a statesman's life, having been born in 1831. The office that Colonel Stanley, the present Colonial Secretary, is to take is not mentioned.

A Warm Pillow.

A lady in a country town left her child in her buggy while she stepped into a house on business. When she came out, horse, buggy and child were nowhere to be found, no trace was discovered all through a bitterly cold night. Next morning it was discovered that the horse had wandered into the woods, and, becoming tired, had lain down. The child, a bright little girl, was found by some boys, snugly sleepin against the breast of the horse, with its head lying on one of the animals forelegs. The little one had evidently become cold, and, when the horse lay down, went to make it get up, when, the boys think, the sagacious animal managed to place it with its head on its arm, so to speak, to keep it from freezing to death. The mother was overjoyed to recover her child and will keep the faithful horse as long as she lives.

BIG THINGS.

The most remarkable artificial [illegible] is that of the castle of Simonetta, [illegible] miles from Milan. It is occasioned by existence of two parallel walls of [illegible] able length. It repeats the report of a [illegible] sixty times.

The most remarkable whirlpool [illegible] maelstrom of the northwest coast of [illegible] and southwest of Moskenaesl, the [illegible] southerly of the Lofoden Isles. It was supposed to be unfathomable, but this has been shown not to exceed twenty fathoms.

The biggest diamond in the world, [illegible] deed, it be a diamond, is the Braganza which forms a part of the Portuguese jewels. It weighs 1,860 carats. However not a little doubt exists of it being a diamond, as the government has never allowed it to be tested. It was found in Brazil in 1741.

Among the most remarkable [illegible] echoes is that of Eagle's Nest, on the [illegible] of Killarney, Ireland, which repeats the call until it seems to be sounded from a hundred instruments, and that of the Abbey of the Naha, between Bingen and Coblentz, which repeats a sound seventeen times.

The greatest cataract in the world is that of Niagara. The Horseshoe fall, on the Canadian side, has a perpendicular descent of 158 feet. The hight of the American fall is 167 feet. The Horseshoe fall, which carries a larger volume of water than the American fall, is about 600 yards wide, and extends from the Canadian shore to Goat Island.

The greatest wall in the world is the Chinese wall, built by the Emperor of the Tsin dynasty, about 220 B. C., as a protection against the Tartars. It traverses the northern boundary of China, and is carried over the highest hills, through the deepest valleys, across rivers, and every other obstacle. Its length is 1,250 miles.

The largest tested, but uncut, diamond is the Manhattan, belonging to the Rajah of Mattam in Borneo. It is of pure water, weighs 267 carats, and is of pear shape, indented at the thick end. It was found about 1760 at Landark, in Borneo. It has been the cause of a sanguinary war. It was cut the Kohinoor, which is in the English crown jewels, was the largest tested diamond. It then weighed 793 carats. When in possession of the Great Aorengezbe it was reduced, by unskilful cutting, to 186 carats. During the Sepoy mutiny it was captured by British troops and presented to Queen Victoria. It was recut and now weighs 106 1 6 carats.

Strangled by an Octopus.

An American travelling in Europe ten years ago observed in the gayest cities of Paris and Vienna, and in the gambling halls at Monaco, Mr. C—, one of his fellow-countrymen, a scholarly, gravely man, whose tastes and pursuits in life, as in his work, lay wholly in study and research.

"What can bring him night after night to such places ? He looks unutterably bored," the stranger asked of an American official.

"He is the victim of an octopus," was the jesting reply. "His wife is one of those soft, clinging, absolutely selfish creatures who wrap themselves about a man's life and bend it to their will, stifling it and sucking all the strength out of his soul, precisely as the devil-fish would out of his victim. Mrs. C—— chooses to live a fast, dissipated life, and she forces her husband to share her in it by her incessant caresses and protestations of affection."

A year later Mr. C—— became a bankrupt, and soon after lost his reason, and in a few months he died. American correspondents writing home stated that the cause was unknown, as his domestic relations were most happy. But those who knew him best, said that he had been "strangled by an octopus."

Lavater declared that each human face bore a likeness to some animal, and also indexed the character ; thus we found in some men the features and qualities of the lion ; the mastiff, or the wolf ; and in woman those of the rabbit, the dove, the cow, or the serpent.

If we follow out this whimsical fancy, we may class many human beings with the clammy, bloodless octopus. They are sometimes men or, more often, women of weak intellects and indomitable will, who [illegible] consider their own comfort or wishes [illegible] life, and who have found wheedling [illegible] tle manners and caresses the surest [illegible] success.

Such women should remember that soft words and fond sentiments are [illegible] but action,—work, hearty and helpful [illegible] word, the fulfilling of the law which [illegible] us sacrifice self, strength, life itself [illegible] others.

We desire to hold up the mirror [illegible] them, that they may have a glimpse of their real selves. The cure is in their own [illegible] Even in the old Greek fables, human [illegible] who had degenerated into the [illegible] animals could regain their first nature [illegible] shap by watchfulness and prayer. So the Greek fables are true.

How Royal Beds Were Made.

A curious story of the way in which [illegible] beds were made some hundreds of years [illegible] has just been published. Whenever the Court of Henry VII. was made at the Palace of Sheen, it had to be done in the following fashion : "First of all the curtains were to be drawn, and a gentleman usher held them together. Then two Squires of the Body stood at the bed's head, two yeomen of the Crown at the bed's feet, and all the clothes were laid on the carpet until the [illegible] the palliasse were re-made. After this exercise the yeomen had to leap upon the bed and 'reel him up and down' to make the litter. Following this the survivor had to 'lay down the canvas again, then the feather-bed, and beat it well, and make it plain and smooth.' The two yeomen [illegible] took the fustian and cast it upon the bed without any wrinkles, and the sheet in the same fashion. Finally the yeomen had to beat the pillows and throw them up to the squires to lay them on the bed's head. [illegible] might please the King's grace. The clothes were at this point to be [illegible] pretty well up to the pillows and [illegible] down the space of an ell. In the [illegible] gracious chronicler says, when all [illegible] 'the several functionaries engaged [illegible] behind the curtain that divided the [illegible] and had a drink all round.'"

YOUNG FOLKS.

TWENTY-SIX PUSSY CATS.

BY MRS. P. L. MOORE, LONDON.

Pussy Cat A, "It's a very fine day—"
Pussy Cat B, "And you're glad to see me."
Pussy Cat C could not quite agree.
Pussy Cat D said, "Oh! let him be!"
Pussy Cat E grunted, "I'm not a she Old Pussy F, who is getting so deaf."
Irish Puss G said, "I'll sing Do, Re, Mi,
Pussy H is coming to tea—
Young Kitty I, who sings up so high,
Will sol-fa all the day—"
Pussy Cat J
Pussy Cat K had a great deal to say
Pussy L, had no news to tell
Pussy Cat M was learning to hem,
Her sister Kit N could write with a pen:
Pussy Cat O could never say "No."
Pussy P laughed "I've come to tea."
Pussy Cat Q had a horrible mew.
Made Pussy R shut him up in a jar;
Pussy Cat S picked some fine watercress.
Timid Puss T said, "I fear you're too free."
Pussy Cat U thought they'd make a nice stew,
Your Pussy V sniffed "Fiddle-de-dee."
Pussy W said, "We won't trouble you,
Mother Puss X, it would certainly vex."
Then this Pussy Y was beginning to cry,
Poor Pussy Tom Z came and bit off her head!

I finished my fine A, B, C of the cats,
And leave them to settle their rows and their rats.
'Good-bye,' alphabetical Pussies, to you
I will try not to cry—and you must not mew.

"Go-Ahead Tim."

"He said it, and I guess he knew," muttered little Tim James. "He wore better clothes than any of that crowd. He said once over, he did: 'A boy isn't the same as his father, and never need be; a bright boy like Tim, here, can be a first-class man if he tries.' Yes, he said it, and I am going to try."

Tim's father was a drunken loafer, and because people treated ragged little Tim without any sort of respect or kindness he felt that a boy was only "what his father was. The day before a man had said: 'Tim is no good; he is old James' boy.' Another man answered: "Tim can be as good as anybody's boy; a boy need not be what his father is."

This day there was a fierce snow-storm; the house was cold and cheerless, the little children hungry and his mother heartsick. "I'll go to work," thought Tim, "like the smartest man's son I ever heard of;" and off he started with an old shovel. He soon got a job at cleaning a sidewalk, and he went at it so vigorously that a man across the road, thinking he must be "worth something to work," set him next at his walk. It was easy, and before slower cleaners came along Tim had earned fifty cents. Then he rushed home again, only stopping to buy some sausages (Tim was so hungry and thought sausages fit for kings), a little coffee and a loaf of bread. His mother's face brightened at the sight of the food; the little ones shouted with satisfaction; and when they were enjoying their unusually good breakfast, Tim said: "Mother, I am going to do something and grow up to be somebody. I will work, and I won't loaf and drink. You see if I do! Mr. Willis—the rich Mr. Willis—said: 'Go ahead, Tim!' and I'm going to do as he said."

His mother had to laugh. Tim looked so little and yet so wide awake; but Tim had his will, and he was in earnest.

From that day he shoveled snow, run errands, sold papers, carried a shoeshop advertisement, blacked boots and cleaned out the stoves. The boys nicknamed him "Go-ahead Tim," and people began to know his rosy face and funny, business-like way. The next winter he got a place in a grocery and went to night school.

One day his Sunday-school teacher asked him why he worked so much harder at everything than did the other boys. Tim did not like to say that they had better chances than he had, but he quoted Mr. Willis and amused her by his admiration of that gentleman.

Perhaps she told Mr. Willis of Tim, but perhaps he only noticed as others noticed how Tim was trying "to be somebody." At any rate, people now had a good word for him, and they were ready to help him in little ways.

Old Tim really began to get ashamed when he heard his boy praised for industry and honesty. He was persuaded to go into the country and work on a farm away from temptations to drink. He was a poor worker and got poor pay, and he made his living and his family was better off without him.

At fifteen Mr. Willis put Tim in a carriage manufactory—a place he had been wishing for; and, as years went by, Tim, by doing his best, became an Intelligent, well to-do carriage-maker. His mother's old age was passed in comfort, and his sister Ann grew up, with his help, sober, hard-working men.

If any boy has a worthless father let him remember that a son need not follow his father in bad ways.

He Couldn't Get the Angel Out.

Eddy Johnson was very fond of music. His Uncle Henry was spending his college vacation at Eddy's home, and had brought his accordion. Eddy had never seen anything of the kind, and was much delighted while his uncle played college songs and Sunday-school hymns.

One hymn was always Eddy's favorite, and he soon asked his uncle to play "I want to be an angel." Eddy was much pleased; and as he watched his uncle it seemed so easy to play the tune, that he jumped from his seat and eagerly said, "O, uncle, do please let me take it! Let me play!"

His uncle laughingly consented and gave the accordion into the little boy's hands. Eddy took the instrument with an air of great satisfaction, and began to play. He pulled the accordion out and pushed it in. He put his fingers upon some of the keys, and then upon others. Of course he made a great noise; but there was very little music.

Very soon he stopped and looked quite ruefully at the accordion as he handed it back to his uncle, saying, "Uncle, I can't get the angel out!"

"Oh, Eddy; the music doesn't come until after many failures and much practice. I think that you will be a musician some day; but the angel of success does not come at our untutored bidding.

You will also learn that which so many of us have learned with disappointed hearts—that time, trial, and patience are needed to make successful Christian workers, even as these are needed to make successful musicians.

According to General Morin, the eminent expert, the proper temperature in well ventilated places is as follows: Nurseries, asylums and schools, 69 degrees; workshops, barracks and prisons, 59; hospitals, 61 to 64; theatres and lecture rooms, 66 to 69. In dwellings in this country it has been the custom to keep the temperature at 65 to 70 degrees.

The original of the hairy family fraud so prevalent in circuses resides near Mandalay, in Burmah. The mother, now 62 years old, is the daughter of a slave from Laos. She married a Burmese, and among their children were two, the heads and faces of which were covered (just as hers is and that of her father was) with long silky hair, after the manner of a Scotch terrier.

Corn Sowing

Is a process conducted by the agency of tight boots all the year round. Corn reaping is best conducted through the agency of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, the only safe and sure-pop corn cure. Putnam's Extractor is now widely imitated. Beware of all poisonous and sore producing substitutes.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Insects on House Plants.

The green fly is the most destructive of all if left to itself. It sucks the juice so as to destroy the plant in a short time. The insects of this kind (aphis) increase with such rapidity that in five generations one aphis may be the progenitor of 6,000,000, and there can be ten generations in a year. A weak solution of tobacco, applied with a syringe or sprinkled with a brush, affords an effective way to kill this pest. To determine whether the solution is too strong, a leaf should be placed in the solution for a short time. If the leaf is browned or burned, or turns so when taken out, the solution is too strong and water must be added. The plants must be cleaned off with clean water after the tobacco has been applied. The operation should be repeated until the pests are destroyed.

The thrip is an exceedingly active little insect, one-tenth of an inch in length. It lives on the leaves, in the buds, and even in the tiny crevices of the bark. Its color varies from a whitish yellow to a dark brown. It attacks the extremities of young sheets and new leaves, which become yellow and withered, and will crumble to dust when rubbed together. To destroy this insect use the same remedy as for the green fly.

The red spider (acarus tellarius) is a very troublesome little creature, and, if allowed to go unchecked, will bring ruin upon everything, although no doubt made for some good purpose. Whenever the red spider makes his appearance the atmosphere is too dry. If it is in the living-room the atmosphere is too dry for the health of the occupants. The first indication of the spider is the turning yellow of some of the leaves, after which their webs will cover the leaves. Water is fatal to the red spider, and in a room with the atmosphere of proper humidity the insect will never flourish to do any injury. But when they take hold to do any mischief they may be destroyed by the use of strong soapsuds.

The cocus or scale insect is a common pest on some kinds of plants; orange, myrtle, camelia, oleander, and other hard-wood plants, will especially be infested by them. They appear upon the under side of the leaf. When removing them they adhere so closely that a stiff brush is required to get them off, and sometimes they have to be scraped off with the thumb-nail. Wash the plants well in soapsuds.

Cooking Receipts.

SWEET MILK GEMS.—Beat one egg well, add a pint of new milk, a little salt and graham flour until it will drop off the spoon nicely. Have ready your gem pans, well greased and heated. Bake in a quick oven and send to table hot.

SCOTCH SWEET BREAD.—Half a pound of butter and a quarter of a pound of sugar mixed to a cream; add one pound of sifted flour, knead and roll it half an inch thick. Bake slowly. If the cake is preferred very sweet use six ounces of sugar.

WHEAT MUFFINS.—Mix one pint of milk, two eggs, three tablespoons yeast, a little salt, with flour enough to make a stiff batter; let it rise four or five hours and bake in muffin rings in a hot oven about ten minutes.

RICE CAKES are a dainty. Half a cup of cold boiled rice, the same of corn meal, one egg, a bit of butter, salt and sugar; milk to make a rather thin batter. Grease the pan well, as these are apt to stick.

SEED JUMBLES.—A quarter of a pound of lard, six ounces of sugar, two eggs, a quarter of a pint of milk, half an ounce of seeds, either caraway or pounded coriander, and nearly a pound of flour.

MUSH WAFFLES.—One quart of flour, one pint of corn meal mush, two eggs, one tablespoonful butter. Salt to the taste; milk to make a thin batter; mix and cook like rice waffles.

INDIAN DROP CAKES.—One cup of sour milk, one egg, one small teaspoonful of saleratus and salt. Make a stiff batter, using two-thirds Indian meal and one third flour. Fry like rye pan cakes.

CITY CREAM CAKES.—A pint of cream and a pint of milk, four eggs, salt, soda and cream of tartar as usual; flour to make a nice batter. These are a luxury.

RISEN GRIDDLE CAKES receive the addition of yeast, and should be mixed over night. In the morning the butter or lard should be dissolved and stirred in.

ST. LOUIS BUTTER TAFFY.—One cup of sugar, one-half cup of water, one teaspoonful of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of vinegar, butter the size of an egg.

SPONGE CAKE.—Whites of four eggs, one-half teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half cup of sugar, same of flour, one teaspoonful of lemon.

Vegetable Lace

How many Colonists of even old standing are aware that there is a lace-producing tree in New Zealand? A tree, which, when the outer bark is stripped off, presents to view a fibrous network resembling lace. This in its turn can be peeled away, and by women of an ingenious turn of mind, utilized for ornamental purposes. A favorite use to which it has been put is that of bonnets; in the exhibition there is a specimen of one, made, I believe, in Nelson. Like many more exhibits, unfortunately, there is no name visible. In Nelson the tree is very common, and as a consequence little value is attached to its natural lace, though at one time "bark bonnets" were quite the fashion in that pretty district. It is to be regretted that it was not deemed worth while to show more of the lace-bark as it was stripped from the parent tree; as it is, the exhibit is an interesting one.

"Mamma," said a little girl, "what is that man doing over there on Mr. Thompson's porch? He has been sitting on the steps for two hours and hasn't moved." "That, my child, is a house painter. He is painting Mr. Thompson's house by the day."

Boggs (at the boarding-house table)—"Another cup of tea, if you please, Mrs. Faming." Mrs. F. (severely)—"Mr. Boggs, the tea is exhausted." Boggs—"I should think it would be. It has been growing gradually weaker ever since I made its acquaintance."

THE DECLINE OF THE POETIC AGE.

BY W. C. HARRISON.

And the angels, all pallid and wan,
Uprising, unveiling, affirm
That the play is the tragedy of man,
And the hero the conqueror worm.

In this truly wonderful and progressive age, that has accomplished so much and solved so many mysteries, the seemingly simple question, "What is poetry?" remains unexplained. That which we consider unexplained is a something, countless leagues beyond stereotyped definitions. We have all heard of poetry in real life; of poetry in nature. We see it in sunshine, feel it at dusky evening, and hear it in the morning storm. It blossoms in the tender flowers, it sighs o'er desert wastes, and, though we feel its magic, we fail utterly to identify its real essence. We listen to the innocent prattle of children, the laughing voice of the brook, the sweet thrill of nightingales, the quiet murmur of leafy groves, and the deep diapason of the storm-tossed ocean; and we know that man has seized and blended them into harmonious and eloquent melodies, but the soul of song is and remains unfathomed, for 'tis fathomless indeed in this boasted age of practicability that we do not even attempt to understand that which we feel belongs to the age of poetry. Reader, write the name of all the poets of whom you can think, strike your pencil through the names of those upon and against whom seemed to rest the dark frown of Providence. Examine the list and see how few names remain uncanceled. What does this prove? That genius finds a potent spur in woe, if not oftimes its very origin. It has been truthfully said that "half our great men and women have been developed through some startling circumstance that roused their best energies, but which was looked upon at the time as a calamity." Thus poesy must be composed of soul—must spring from the heart—or it falls short of moving us; from heart strings often that have been attuned to misery, struck by passion, vibrated by ambition, or it finds no answering tremor in our own. There is a long train of misfortunes and unhappy eccentricities of characters met with in reading the lives of poets. Public opinion is to day, and has ever been, quick to censure and slow to appreciate. What an example in these immortal lines:

"Seven cities proudly claim'd the Homer dead Through which the living Homer begged his bread."

"Distance lends enchantment." So we, to-day, look far away to the towering forms of poesy. We call this Homer, that Virgil, others Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, and so on down the dazzling coterie, sparkling, and radiant in the sunlight of universal applause. Familiar names are these in the geography of literature, but we do not remember, as we should, that these giant representatives of genius were brought forth from obscurity, uplifted by turbulence, made enduring by disaster, and that a robe of poverty and a crown of thorns gave way for the halo of glory. The earliest part of this century witnessed the noontide of the poetic age. The heavens were ablaze with meteors which shot upward toward the zenith of poesy, suddenly to fall beyond the horizon of their times, there to revolve in the darkness and gloom for a time till another age should fix them in a constellation, both fadeless in luster and deathless in sublimity. After death, genius is appreciated and receives its reward. Once there was a plow-boy who sang as he walked the furrows of his father's field. The mountain flower and the talking brook found in him the poet; he led a life of misery, struggled in poverty, and at last died of a broken heart—when, lo! he was suddenly exalted to a place in lyric poetry, beyond which no one can ever pass. This was Scotland's bard, Burns, by far the greatest and grandest poet that ever sprang from the bosom of the people. Again, on a bright summer morning the blue waters of the Mediterranean chanted a quiet requiem as they bore to their shores the stark and motionless body of an outcast, and the sunny Italian skies looked sadly down from above while the sea beneath sang hoarsely to rest her laureate. At the feet of Mont Blanc, upon a rocky tablet of her side, you may yet find his name carved by his own hand, "P. B. Shelley, atheist;" no God, no hope, no future, and yet he was a child of nature; a lover of the simplest flower, a worshipper of the tiniest bird, and touched to tears by the symphony of music. There is another deformed, dissolute, misanthropic one—Byron. Hark, there comes a voice:

"Have I not suffered things to be forgiven?
Have I not had my brain seared, my heart riven?
Hopes sapped, name blighted, life's life lied away?"

Better die young than live on lingering in pain. Why should we remember the obscurity of Halleck, the unmarked grave of Drake, the suicide of Raelf, or why should we remember that on a wild and boisterous night, at such a time and such a place, the demon intemperance should add another to the long list of victims, whose rare genius is heard and felt in "The Raven's" voice "never more, never more"—the grandest star in our literary heaven—the immortal Edgar Allan Poe. But the sun has gone down. We are living in "the decline of poetic age." Public opinion is always right by education; seldom, if ever, by instinct. The man of genius may be misapprehended; truths he presented may not be recognized, but futurity will hold both him and them in tender and sacred keeping. To-day contemporaries may offer insult and reproach to his ashes: to-morrow posterity will stand guard by his tomb and scatter flowers upon his casket in token of grateful remembrance. Time will unveil what the madness of the hour fails to discover. The noble few will lose nothing when progress overtakes them.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Everything is adulterated nowadays. A man bought a cork leg and afterwards ascertained that it was made of paper.

Husbands of actresses always have other men to manage the latter, it being unnatural for husbands to manage their own wives.

John L. Sullivan is getting conceited because he read somewhere that Hamlet said: "There's a special providence in the fall of a sparrer."

Little things fret and worry us. A three year old boy may keep a man in perfect misery, whereas the presence of his eighteen year old sister would be considered a boon.

HEALTH.

Hurry.

Some men are in incessant action, early and late and all through the day. They have no time for family or friends. As for holidays, the less for them the better. They have inherited a nervous temperament, and are doing just the wrong thing with it—allowing it to hurry them to an untimely end. They wear themselves out. Their brain is ever in a state of morbid activity almost like that of an insane man.

To all such we say: Early learn to use restraint, or, in spite of all later volitions, your momentum will steadily increase, and sooner or later there will be a break-down. The more nervous the temperament, the greater the need of husbanding the nervous energy by intelligent self control, by appropriate diversions and by frequent seasons of absolute rest. The machinery may be of iron, but it needs to come to a stand-still at times.

Many persons, not of a nervous temperament, specially hurry at their meals. They have vigorous appetites, and they eat voraciously. Now, swine can do this safely, for they have vigorous digestion, and have nothing to do but to digest what they eat. It is otherwise with human beings. That kind monitor "enough" is seldom heard in season by those who eat in a hurry. Rapid eating is generally excessive eating, with, in due time, dyspepsia, "bilious attacks," liver complaints and gout. Besides, not only health, but the good of all concerned, demands that the meal time should be one of restful leisure, pleasant interchange of thought, and social cheer.

Many persons hurry to catch the departing ferry-boat or cars. They barely get aboard by hard running—or perhaps just fail. Such acts may start a heart-trouble, or increase one already started, or precipitate it to a fatal termination. The London Lancet, giving an account of two recent deaths from hurry and exertion, one a young man of twenty, the other a girl of sixteen, adds, "How often has hurry to catch a train, or some other sudden exertion, throwing extra work on a dilated, fatty, or otherwise diseased heart, resulted in fatal syncope!" Remember, people often have heart-troubles without knowing it.

Eating in the Evening.

One of the popular errors of this country is that which regards eating heartily in the evening as detrimental to health. Almost any one can find a score of persons among his acquaintances who have dinner at 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon because they are unwilling, later in the day, to trust their stomachs with anything more solid than tea and toast. If they go abroad they look upon the eating, on board the steamer, of Welsh rarebit and the like, at 10 and 11 o'clock in the evening, with much the same horror that they would regard an excessive use of liquor. But when once brought fairly into contact with foreign habits, say English dinners at 8 and German suppers at 10 p. m, they usually fall back on the supposition that the usage of several generations has fitted the digestive organs of foreigners to bear this excessive strain. One very worthy American lady dismissed a native doctor in Paris as confessedly incompetent because he recommended for some dyspeptic trouble that she should eat a hearty meal some two hours before going to bed. Fortunately his successor took the same stand, and though she considered the method of treatment as wholly wrong she was persuaded into following it, and, what is more, was cured in spite of herself. If our physicians would make this matter of diet more of a study it would fully repay them. It cannot be that we are differently organized from our brethren across the water, and hence what long experience has shown to be healthful for them cannot prove otherwise for us. The strain which our Canadian habits of eating puts upon the physical system is, that it crowds the two really life-giving meals of the day, breakfast and dinner, too close together and then leaves the body to fast for sixteen hours out of the twenty-four.

Chilblains.

The treatment of chilblains is both general and local. The health must be carefully attended to. Tonics may be freely administered—cod-liver oil, iron, and quinine are very beneficial—combined with a liberal diet. The parts which are the seat of chilblains must be kept thoroughly warm, and the child should also be encouraged to take as much exercise as possible. The stockings must be woolen and the boots or gloves warm and roomy, so as not to compress the hands or feet. The parts may be further stimulated by rubbing, and it is often advisable to use some mild, stimulating liniment—such as soap liniment or ammonia liniment. Spirits of any kind, such as brandy or gin, may be employed for rubbing the parts. When the chilblains become broken the parts must be kept at rest, and it may be necessary to apply poultices or warm water dressing for a time, until the discharge has ceased. The best dressing for them after this period is a mild stimulating ointment spread upon a soft rag. Resin ointment or ointment of the oxide of zinc are both very useful.

Adapted to the Listener.

It is sometimes necessary to translate plain language into the terms most familiar to one's hearer. The story is an old one of the clever lawyer who, for the benefit of a sailor among the jury, at once turned his description of a collison between two vehicles into nautical language. The juror was convinced, and the case won. An exchange gives the following:

An Irish witness was one day undergoing examination in court, regarding some personal injuries sustained by him. "And were you stunned when you were knocked down, asked a lawyer.

"Was I what, yer Honor?"

"Stunned."

"Sure, an' I don't know what ye mane, yer Honor."

"Were you rendered insensible?"

"An' what is insinsible?"

The lawyer was shrugging his shoulders in despair at the stupidity of the witness, when a juryman rose, and asked to be allowed to interrogate him.

"Did they kill ye, now, Pat?"

"Sure, an' they did intoirely, yer Honor," promptly returned Pat.

Admission 25 cents; Masqueraders free.

WE are somewhat puzzled to know the Flesherton Advance political whereabouts. One week the editor is of opinion that every paper—little or big—should belong to some one of the two great political parties, and another week he says, he don't belong to either. We notice, however, that he gets a share of Government advertising patronage, which we (unfortunately) have no claim on.

OUR LITTLE ONES, as usual, is promptly to hand for February, and is well filled with seasonable illustrations for the younger children. A specialy this month is some really excellent children's valentines. This magazine stands in the foremost rank in point of excellence of illustrations and for pure, instructive and amusing reading. $1.50 a year: Russell Publishing Co., Boston, Mass.

SOMEBODY in Washington has taken the job of investigating Hazen, the weather bureau and signal service sharp at Washington. Among his expenditures it has been found that a large sum of money has been paid out for whisky. Well, a man can't be expected to get up such weather as Hazen has furnished this country on a milk diet, or cold water. Whiskey no doubt accounts for our suffering, as to weather.

WE have received from the publishers a copy of the School Supplement, an excellent monthly magazine established about two years ago. It is a Canadian enterprise, by Canadians, is printed on paper of Canadian manufacture, by Canadian printers, and is largely supported by Canadian teachers, and illustrated by Canadian artists and engravers. It is brim full of interesting and valuable matter. Published in Toronto by the Supplement Co. at $2.00 per year.

UNITED WORKMEN.—Twenty-one new lodges were opened in Ontario during 1885. The Grand Lodge of Ontario meets in St. Catharines on the 16th inst. Thirteen new Legions of Select Knights were instituted in Ontario during 1885. In Ontario there are now 256 lodges and 10,000 Workmen; New York has 20,800 members, and Missouri 16,000. The Overseer states there is likely to be a new ritual submitted for consideration at the next Supreme Lodge session. A movement is on foot to transfer the Grand Recorder's office to Hamilton.

PAR EXCELLENCE.—We are pleased to notice that Mr. W. H. Hearst, who is studying law with Masson & Masson of Owen Sound and who attends their office in Markdale a portion of the time, has recently passed his second Intermediate Examination at Osgoode Hall, heading the list of about forty students from all parts of Ontario. He, with four others, obtained sufficient number of marks to entitle them to write for the Scholarship Examination, where he (Mr. Hearst) succeeded in carrying off the 1st Scholarship of $100. This is a success our friend may well be proud of.

THE Bairnsfather family, the noted Scotch vocalists, will give one of their popular concerts in Haskett's Hall on Wednesday evening the 17th. Admission, 25 cents.

FOR SALE.—Two cows in calf, 2 heifers two years old, 1 steer two years old, buggy, cutter, wagon, fanning mill, milk can and a quantity of hay. For particulars apply to Mrs. Might, on the premises 3 miles west of Markdale. 283-5

THE present council board of Glenelg are determined to put economy in force with a vengeance. We have paid in its treasury hundreds of dollars in taxes in the past, and have done their printing satisfactory and at very moderate rates, yet they have decided to ask outside printers to compete. This is shabby to say the least.

South Grey Division Grange officers for 1886:—Master, Jas. Skeen, Overseer; Jas. Pennock, Secretary; Chas. Moffat, Treasurer; Jas. Edge, Lecturer; Wm. Irvine, Chaplain; S. Dickson, Steward; H. S. Snell, Asst. Steward; R. Bye, Gatekeeper; W. Hastie, Ceres; Mrs. Moffatt, Pomona; Mrs. Ledingham, Flora; Mrs. Doupe, L. A. Steward, Mrs. Skene, Auditors; Messrs. G. Ledingham and G. Lamb, Executive Committee; Messrs. James Edge and Chas. Moffatt. The above array of names will give some idea of the personnel of the institution.

KING KENNEDY, the king of vantriloquists, and a most graceful performer in conjuring and legerdemain, gave one of his unique entertainments in the town hall on Tuesday night to a good house, The variety of the entertainment kept the audience constantly interested and highly amused. He has no peer as a ventriloquist, and his performance keeps the audience constantly convulsed with laughter. His slight-of-hand tricks are numerous, interesting and gracefully performed. He plays in good houses and he well deserves them.—Chatsworth News.] The above will give an entertainment in Haskett's Hall, Markdale next Monday evening, the 15th.

Father Hubbards.

The other day, when old Maj. Solman announced his readiness to proceed in the direction of the church, his wife appeared, wearing a Mother Hubbard dress. The old man intently regarded her for a few moments and asked:

"Mary, what sort of a coat do you call that?"

"It's a Mother Hubbard, Jeems."

"Are you goin' to wear it to church?"

"Why, certainly, Jeems. The Mother Hubbard is all the fashion now."

"Well, I'm glad to know it." the old man replied. "Just wait until I get ready and we'll go."

The old man went out into the kitchen, took a couple of meal sacks, cut the bottoms out, sewed the tops together, and put them on in imitation of pantaloons. When he returned his wife uttered a loud cry of astonishment and exclaimed:

"Great goodness, Jeems, what's that?"

"Father Hubbard," the old man replied.

"You're not a goin' to wear them sacks, are you?"

"I've got to be fashionable to keep up with you. I've got as much right to wear these meal bags as you have to go in that bran sack."

"I'll take it off"

"All right; off goes the Father Hubbard," and turning away, he added to himself: "Only one way to beat a woman, and that is by agreein' with her. If it hadn't been for the daddy Hubbard I'd a been in a mighty bad fix."

Stradford. MRS. A. E. L. EASSON.

A BAD BREAKDOWN.

It is a common thing now-a-days to hear on complain of feeling all broken down with a faint, weary, restless languor, with strength and appetite nearly gone, and no well defined cause. This is general debility, which Burdock Blood Bitters promptly relieves, and most invariably cures.

"WHAT SAY YOU TO A PIECE OF ROAST BEEF AND MUSTARD?"

Well, there is much to be said. The question being asked of the banquster at the average boarding house, calls up reminiscences of close contiguity to the horns, and beefstake three outs south thereof. He, of course, will pass unless it occurs to him that he needs a hinge for his trunk. Should there be any suffering, the effects of an indulgence is such sinuous fare, use McGregor's Speedy Cure, a sure and effectual remedy for Dyspepsia, Constipation and all affections of the stomach and liver. Sold by Hill Bro's. Trial bottles free. 5

Floods have done seriour and extensive damage in Belleville recently.

McGREGOR & PARKE.

Of Hamilton, Ont., are the manufacturers of the greatest healing and purifying compound known for Sores, Burns, Cuts, Scalds, Salt Rheum, Frost Bites, etc. It is called McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Be sure and get the genuine McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate sold by Hill Bro's. at 25c. a box. 5

Montreal has an abduction scandal.

HAMILTON HAPPENINGS.

There is now being manufactured here an article for instantly removing pain of any acute external nature, and it is certainly the most perfect cure for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache and the like that has ever been tried. It is called Fluid Lightning from the rapid manner in which it acts, and is manufactured by McGregor & Parke. Sold in Markdale by Hill Bro's. 5

The Baptists propose building a church in Flesherton shortly.

HEADACHE BILIOUSNESS.

"Whenever I feel out of sorts, bilious, my liver not working right, or racked with a headache, I take Chase's Liver Cure. There is more real benefit from one dose of your Liver Cure than in many bottles of some medicines."—Jno. McNasser, Bond Head. Feb.

The Canadian Pacific has concluded arrangements for a steamship line between Vancouver and San Francisco.

SEARCHING FOR PROOF.

There is no trouble in ascertaining from any druggist the true virtues of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for all painful and inflammatory troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, frost bites, burns, bruises, sprains, contracted cords, stiff joints, aches, pains and soreness.

Municipal and School Trustee election is to take place on the same day in Toronto in future.

NO BLUNDERBUS.

There is no blundering in the dark—in the action of Burdock Blood Bitters upon the system. It is no scattering shot-gun prescription, no cure-all; but it acts directly upon the four cardinal points of health: the stomach, the liver, the bowels, and the blood, and works its cures in a natural manner through nature's channels.

Parry Sound is making vigorous efforts for railway connection with the C. P. R. via the Northern Pacific junction railway.

A SEASONABLE ITEM.

During the breaking up of winter, when the air is chilly and the weather damp, such complaints as rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, sore throat, croup, and other painful effects of sudden cold, are prevalent. It is then that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is found truly valuable as a household remedy.

Windsor.

DEATH OF THE OLDEST MAN IN CANADA.

Windsor, Jan. 28.—On Tuesday night Freeman Coleman died here at the advanced age of 121 years. He was born in Buckingham County, Va., on August 4, 1764, twelve years before the Declaration of Independence was made. His Christian name was given him because he was born and always remained a freeman. He was of mingled Indian, Spanish, and negro descent.

Until last Saturday Mr. Coleman was about the house, and in full possession of all his faculties, busying himself with various little pieces of work, and went to bed that night feeling as well as usual. Sunday he was too weak to rise, and he gradually sank until the hour of his death, eight o'clock on Tuesday night. He was able to count a numerous progeny, his children, grandchildren, great grandchildren, and great-great grandchildren, numbering in all 138. His oldest living child is Mrs. Mary Dunlap 76 years of age, who resides in Ohio.

YOUNG FOLKS

Wild Winds.

Oh ! oh ! how the wild winds blow !
Blow high,
Blow low,
And whirlwinds go
So chase the little leaves that fly,
Fly l rw and high,
To hollow and to steep hillside ;
They shiver in the dreary weather,
And creep in little heaps together,
And nestle close and try to hide ;
Oh ! oh ! how the wild winds blow !
Blow low,
Blow h'gh,
And whirlwinds try
To find a crevice, to find a crack —
They whirl to the front, they whirl to the back
But Tommy and Will and Baby, together,
Are snug and safe from the winter weather.
All the winds that blow
Cannot touch a toe,
Cann t twist or twirl,
One silky curl ;
Though they rattle th door in a noisy pack,
The blazing fires will d ive them pack.

Jack's Raccoon

We have a raccoon ! We have had him two weeks. He is half Bob's, and half mine

Mr. Brownhill caught him and tamed him, and then gave him to us.

Papa says he is quite a superior man, and I think so too. (Mamma says I must explain that I mean Mr. Brownhill.)

The racoon is a perfect beauty ; gray, with black rings on his tail, and his tail is a great bushy tail ; and some black stripes on his body, and a sharp pointed, black nose, and such bright eyes ! They are black, too, and they twinkle all the time. They twinkle so that Alice (she is one of my sisters) says —

"Twinkle, twinkle, little coon !
How your voice is out of tune.
Every time I hear you speak,
It is just a horrid squeak."

He does squeak, but I don't think it's horrid, any more than the noise her kitten makes.

Well, he belongs to Bob and me together, as I told you ; so one week he lives at our house, and the next week he lives at Bob's, and we are going to teach him a new trick every week.

It is Bob's week now, and I miss him very much, though of course I see him every day.

He knows some tricks already.

You give him some snow, and he sits up and makes it into snowballs, patting it with his fonny little black hands (of course they are paws, but they really look like hands), till he makes it quite round and hard, and then he rolls it about, or else he throws it away, and then looks at you to give him some more.

He doesn't like to have his feet wet, so when they get wet, he pats them against the wall until they are dry.

He did that in mamma's room one day, and left the marks of his feet all over the pretty pink paper ; and mamma whipped him. But I don't suppose he knew that the paper was pink, or pretty either.

I love him very much, and he sits on my shoulder, for he is a young one, and not very big yet.

You ought to see Tom, our great yellow cat, when Coon pulls his tail ! He humps himself up and growls, and gets very angry. You see, he knows it isn't a cat, and he knows it isn't a dog, but he doesn't know what it is.

Bob has just been here, after I had written that ; and oh ! what do you think Coon has been doing at his house ?

Well, you see, he likes to go to sleep on the window sill in the kitchen, where the sun shines in. Bob left him there, sound asleep, all curled up in a ball, with his tail all over his nose ; that is the way he sleeps. and he looks so funny, you can't think !

By-and by Bob's mother came into the kitchen, and she saw that the door of the pie-cupboard, where she keeps the pies, was open. So she went to shut it ; and she looked in, and there was Coon, sitting on the top shelf, with a pie in his hands !

When he saw her, he dropped the pie, and it broke all to pieces on the floor, and he jumped right over her head, and ran off as fast as he could run.

And Mrs. Taylor screamed, and Bob came in to see what was the matter, and Coon ran right between his legs and tripped him up, and he fell down on top of the pie.

And then Mrs Taylor looked at the other pies, and he had patted every one of them all round the edge, and there were the marks of his feet all over them

There were twelve pies ; some of them were squash, and some were custard, and some were cranberry.

She was very angry, and Bob shut up Coon in the wood-closet and came over to tell me about it, and I don't think I ever laughed so much in all my life Murdered by a Madman.

A Victoria, B. C., despatch says : A horrible tragedy is reported to have occurred on the road between New Westminster and Port Moody. A man named Walker has squatted on some land and the other day he took L. Robson, his partner Smith, and another man named Jones to the place, wishing to dispose of his right. They arrived at the ranch late in the afternoon, and after dark Walker picked up a double-barrelled shot gun and said he was going to shoot a crow. One of the men remarked that it was rather late to go shooting, when Walker said he might as well tell them his intention, that he was going to cook their geese for them. He then shot Robson through the breast, killing him instantly. Jones attempted to take the gun away from the murderer, but he received the contents of the second barrel in the leg, shattering his knee. Walker then made for Smith with a knife, but the latter succeeded in getting out of the cabin and escaped. Walker then lashed Jones to the body of Robson and fled. The wounded and dead men were found by constables, who arrived a few hours later. The dead body of Walker was soon afterwards found. He is supposed to have killed himself.

THE MURDERED MAN.

D. L. Robson, murdered by a squatter in British Columbia, is a Kingstonian, and a step-brother of Mrs. Black, wife of the Montreal City Treasurer. He was in Montreal last winter, and only a week before the murder he wrote a letter to a nephew here, saying that as soon as he purchased the claim of a squatter he would start for Kingston again. He was wealthy, and was probably murdered for his money.

THE LOGIC OF EVENTS.

How a Mistake in Filling a Prescription Led to a Marriage.

"Well, well," said Mrs. Catson, putting aside a newspaper and turning to her husband, "a pair of earrings caused the Burmese war, I never heard of anything so strange."

"Oh," said Mr. Catson, "I have heard of stranger things."

"Nonsense."

"Well, I have, and I'll give you an example. One night in Boston a young man, meeting an acquaintance, said : 'Come, let's have a drink.' I never was in Boston, but that remark brought about our marriage."

"Why, George," exclaimed Mrs. Catson "you are foolish. Neither of us were ever in Boston. You must be losing your mind."

"Tell you what I'll do ; I promised to get you a new cloak, didn't I ?"

"Yes."

"Well, now I'll bet you the cloak that I can prove my assertion."

"All right."

"If I succeed, you don't get the cloak."

"I understand."

"Well, one night in Boston about ten years ago, a young man, meeting a friend, asked him to come out and have a drink. The friend, a drug clerk, did so. He took several drinks and got drunk. That settled it."

"Settled what ?"

"The fact of our marriage."

"How can you be so foolish ?"

"Never mind, I'll explain. The drug clerk got drunk and went to the store. Shortly afterward a servant girl entered and handed him a prescription. In putting it up he used morphine instead of quinine. The girl went away, and delivered the medicine to Mrs. Potter who took it and died."

"Oh, what's the use of prolonging this foolishness ?"

"Hold on. The death of that woman drew you and me closer together than we ever were before."

"We were not acquainted with each other ten years ago."

"That is very true, but wait. Mr. Potter, the lady's husband, was almost crazed by grief. He could stay in New York no longer, so he came down to Kentucky and, after awhile, went into business. Don't see any light yet, do you ?"

"Oh, hush."

"Wait a minute. He had not been in business long until I met him. He took a fancy to me and gave me employment. After I had been with him several years, he sent me to Arkansaw. I had been in this State but a short time until I met you. Summary : If the friend had not asked the drug clerk to drink on one certain occasion he would not have got drunk. If he hadn't been drunk he would not have made a mistake in filling the prescription, and had he not made a mistake, Mrs. Potter would not have been killed, and had she not died, Potter would not have left New York, and had he not left that city I should not have met him, and had I not gone into business with him—"

"Oh, for goodness sake, hush. You are enough to drive anybody crazy."

She arose and left the room. Her husband mused : "I'll make her another bet. I'll bet she doesn't get that cloak. I have always thought that the logic of events failed to meet with proper appreciation in this country."

Do Animals Think ?

A great deal has been written to show that animals think and reason, just as man does, though in a lower degree. Perhaps some of our readers may notice things in animals which show that they have a great deal of intelligence, even if they do not reason. Mr. Paul Brocca, the French author, devoted much attention to this subject. It has been said of animals, writes Mr Brocca, that their actions are always mechanical and without method. This may be true of domestic pets, who are influenced almost entirely by the human beings around them, but does not the beaver change his plans, acting now as builder, now as miner, according to circumstances ? Besides this, every one knows that the bee frequently substitutes pentagonal, or five-sided, for hexagonal, or six-sided cells, and that this alteration in the work is made only when necessary. It has also been said that animals do not reason. What then is done by the foxes, which in Thrace, are driven on to the ice to test its strength ? These animals step carefully and lightly, with their heads inclined, and turn back suddenly, directly they discover by the sound of the ice cracking that it is not safe to proceed farther. A dog, which, in following a scent, arrives at a cross-road is seen to stop, consider for a moment, then plunge along one of the roads, sniffing cautiously, turn back and try another road in the same manner, and finally dart unhesitatingly down the third. It is evident that his logic tells him that as his prey has not taken one of the first two roads examined, it must necessarily have taken the third road, so he does not waste time in further investigation. That this is not mere instinct is shown by the fact that a dog sometimes makes a mistake in such a case, and when the fact becomes evident he slinks out of sight of the hunters, looking a picture of shame and humiliation.

Foresight is a quality the possession of which no one will deny to ants and bees, and the former certainly have a sense of compassion. This is displayed in the tender care bestowed on the wounded during the terrible battles fought between different tribes of ants. The suffering and helpless ones are not left to periah, but are carried off of the battlefield by a regular "ambulance corps." No one doubts the existence of memory in animals, and as to ambition, is it necessary to recount the pitched battles which take place in bee-hives between the different candidates for royalty ? How can one pretend that man only has the gift of language ! He must be blind indeed who does not see that all animals have some means of communication with each other. To give any one example : there is no possible doubt that ants make themselves understood by their fellows by means of the touch of their delicate, sensitive antennæ or feelers. Before a war a council is held, and messengers hurry about. Scouts or spies are sent out, and the attack is hastened or postponed, according to their reports. All this could not be done without a very complete method of communication, for the giving and receiving of orders, etc. Moreover, if animals had no language, how could they teach their young ? That they do teach them is evident from the fact of young foxes in countries where the animals are hunted, being infinitely more wary than full-grown ones in other lands ! How else are we to account for this than by saying that the parent foxes tell the children of danger, and to avoid it ?

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

It was within three minutes of the hour for opening the meeting when Brother Gardner received a message to the effect that his wife was in a fit. He left for home in a manner neither too dignified nor too hasty, and the meeting was called to order by Sir Isaac Walpole, who said : While de President hez our sympathy in dis dark hour, as a matter of course, yet de bizness of dis kentry mus' not suffer bekase one old black woman dun goes an' has a fit. Let us proceed to bizness, an' it may be well fur me to menshun de fack dat de pussun who puts a licorice drop on de hot stove doorin' our purceedins may find hisself weary of de burdens of dis cold world.

CAN'T INDORSE HIM.

A communication from the Mayor of Buffalo made inquiry if a person calling himself Prof. C. A. Johnson, philanthropist, professional astronomer, lecturer, literary and educational writer, editor, publisher and philosopher, was a member of the Lime Kiln Club. The Professor lately delivered a lecture in Buffalo, in which he sent forth the following utterances :

I am acknowledged to be the greatest scientific man of the age.

Wind is always in motion. It has a place where it is located when it is not at work.

I don't care a snap of my finger for other scientist's opinions. I am an authority in myself.

The wind is made of a material always in existence, and not as some people think, created for the moment.

There are twelve invisible suns, which have shone in great brilliancy in the past and in ten years they will shine again.

The hiding place of the wind is in the interior of the ocean, 300,000 feet from the surface. If you want to ask questions about it you can ; I have settled it.

There is more animal life in existence than a good many of us have been able to understand ; the "nitroggen" and "hydroggen" gases extend higher than scientists have had time to look into.

I have found within a thimbleful of salt water more living insects than there have been human names created since the beginning of the world. If other men have not looked into this as I have, it's not my fault.

Scientific men tell me that wind is made of atoms of air force coming in contact with currents. If scientific men knew half as much about wind as I do, they would not make this mistake. When I saw their confusion I came to their rescue.

Wind is composed of volcanic gases and atmospheric matter located in the interior of space which is set in motion by astronomic force caused by the rotation of the sun, which coming in contact with counter-currents puts the wind in motion in places where it is hid.

I may be a modest man and I may not, but I don't believe there is a man in the City of Buffalo that knows as much about science as I do. If there had been, this subject would have been explained long ago. But it has been left for me to settle forever the question where the wind comes from.

The Secretary was instructed to reply to the effect that the Professor was neither a member of the club, nor did that body indorse his opinions.

RETURNED A BROKEN MAN.

Trustee Pullback then made a report on his trip to Washington, N. C., as a delegate from the club to attend an emancipation jubilee. He reached there all right after a journey lasting thirteen days, and was warmly welcomed by Archie Moore and J. P. Joner, of the Committee on Arrangements. During the first two hours of his stay some one stole his watch, and later on his satchel and pocketbook were missing. His complaints were treated with supreme indifference, and on the day of the jubilee he was set upon and pounded until he could hardly walk. He had his credentials all straight, and no one disputed them, but he thinks there was a conspiracy to do him up because the Lime-Kiln Club had refused to grant a charter to the "Koon Killin' Klub" of Washington so as to act as a branch. Trustee reached home after enduring hardships which would have killed a United States Senator, and has been in bed nearly ever since.

HEROIC MEASURES.

When his verbal report had been submitted there was a murmur of indignation throughout the hall, and Waydown Beboe offered the following resolution :

"Resolved, Dat until de Gubner of North Carolina forwards us an apology in writin', accompanied by a check of at least $75 to recompense Brother Pullback fur his sufferins, all intercourse between dis club an' de said State of North Carolina must be considered at eand."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

AN IMPOSTOR

A communication from St. Louis made inquiry if a person named Gen. Syntax Cobalt was a member of the Lime-Kiln Club. He was in jail in that city for soliciting donations to colored orphan asylums and salting the cash down in his vest pocket. He claimed to be a member of the club in good standing, but had no documents.

The Secretary was instructed to telegraph the St. Louis police to proceed against the man in the most vigorous manner, as he has on several occasions falsely claimed to be a member and thereby imposed on the people at large.

A Cure For Drunkenness.

The Cure of Drunkenness is a task with which the regular practitioner has been unable to cope. Nine-tenths of mankind look upon drunkenness as a social vice, which a man may overcome by force of will. Drunkenness is a bad habit we all admit, in the moderate drinker. In the confirmed drunkard it becomes disease of the nervous system. The medical treatment of this disease consists in the employment of remedies that act directly upon those portions of the nervous system which, when diseased, cause lunacy, dementia, and the drinking habit. Remedies must be employed that will cure the appetite for strong drink, steady the trembling hand, revive the lagging spirit, balance the mind, etc. The nervous system of the dram drinker being all unstrung or shattered, must be given a nutriment that will take the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevent the physical and moral prostration that often follows a sudden breaking off from the use of alcoholic drinks. Lubon's medicine may be given in tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Those of our readers who are interested in this subject, should send their address for Lubon's Treatise, in book form, on drunkenness, opium, morphine and kindred habits, which will be mailed free to any address, when stamp is inclosed for postage. Address, M. V. Lubon, 47 Wellington street east, Toronto, Ont. Mention this paper.

Choice Recipes.

APPLE CUSTARD.—Lay a crust in your ; slice apples thin and half fill your ; pour over them a custard made of eggs and one quart of milk, sweetened seasoned to your taste.

MOCK BOLOGNA SAUSAGE.—One part of two parts pork, one part beef suet, a garlic, sage, black pepper, a small portion of cayenne pepper. Season to taste. tightly in cloth bags and hang them in dry place.

FIG PUDDING.—Delicious: One pound figs, one pound of beef suet, one pound of bread crumbs, one pound brown sugar, six eggs. Chop the figs fine, along with the bread crumbs; boil two hours in a mold well buttered; eat with butter sauce. Any other fruit may be used in place of figs.

TEA ROLLS.—Make them up at 12 o'clock the day. One quart of flour, one-half pint of new milk, and one gill of yeast—one teaspoonful of sugar in the yeast is an improvement. When light, work in a tablespoonful of butter and the yelks of two eggs, then set it again to rise for half an hour before baking. Roll them out and make into any shape you prefer.

OYSTER SOUP.—Put on in a brass kettle one quart of oysters; let them cook until they are nearly done without boiling hard (which makes them tough); stir in a piece of butter about as large as a walnut, rub it thoroughly into one and a half tablespoons of flour, add one quart of rich milk. When it boils up once the soup is done. Season with pepper and salt. Pour it into the tureen on a quantity of small pieces of bread. This will be enough for six or seven persons.

SPLENDID OMELET—From four to eight very fresh eggs; break them singly and carefully. When they are sufficiently whisked, pour them through a sieve and resume the beating until they are very light; add to them half a teaspoonful of salt, season with pepper. Dissolve in a small frying-pan two ounces of butter, pour in the eggs, and as soon as the omelet is well risen and firm throughout slide it into a hot dish, fold it together like a turnover, and serve at once.

POTATO SALAD.—Slice thinly eight or ten good sized Irish potatoes (boiled and cold); chop finely one good-sized apple, one and a-half small onions, rinse and chop the leaves of a large handful of green parsley. Spread a layer of the potato in a chopping tray, sprinkle liberally with salt, then half the parsley, apple, and onions, then the rest of the potato, then more salt and the other half of the parsley, apple, and onion; pour half a teacup of sweet oil or melted butter over the whole, with a small cup of vinegar. Mix the whole carefully so as not to break the potatoes.

A subscriber asks a recipe for common biscuit. Will some lady reader kindly furnish her rule?

Household Hints.

Sweet oil mixed with melted beeswax and applied with a soft flannel cloth to wooden furniture will give the wood a high polish. It is particularly effective on mahogany and is what was used in southern families before the war, when polished mahogany tables and chairs were the pride of every housekeeper. The mixture should be well rubbed into the wood, and then polished with a dry piece of chamois.

There is quite an art in pressing the seams of a dress made at home to give it a good finish. The bodice and sleeves seams ought not to be ironed on a flat surface, but over a roller covered with flannel; this gives them the true tailor's set. An ordinary rolling pin, such as is used for pastry, will do. The white felt or flannel covering it must be caught tightly together and overcast, but the edges must not overlap, as they would cause a ridge. All the seams of a bodice are ironed over this, and the difference over those ironed on a flat surface must be seen to be believed.

The secret of good puff paste, or even plain, is to have the butter waxy. Wash it in ice water and flatten it into wafers; put it into a cold window. It should be almost brittle If you keep to this rule about the butter, and always work it in with a knife, flouring your hands when you have to touch the paste, you will have light pastry. A tablespoon of salt and one of sugar go to a quart of flour for light paste. Add the water judiciously, as too much water makes pastry hard.

BURDETTE IN CANADA.

He Describeth the Dominion With Her Winter Clothes On.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

You have never seen Canada unless you have seen her with her winter clothes on. She is charming in the time of the roses, but so is the desert at that time. But when the Dominion puts on a toboggan suit and muffles herself in furs and astrachan, and stands up in a snow drift that reaches from the great lakes to the North Pole and back again, she is just too dazzling to look at, save through smoked glasses. The glasses are smoked with peat, or something of that sort, which is said to add a peculiarly delicate flavor to the bottom of the glass. To get the full benefit of the smoky aroma, one must look through the glass with one's nose.

You cannot imagine how animated and brilliant is Toronto when she puts on her snowshoes and gets herself up on runners, and fills all the air with the chimes of the sleighbells. There is an endless variety in design and pattern and color of sleigh and robe and bell and plume, and the streets look like Christmas so long as the snow lasts. Even the street cars feel the infection (because a wise ordinance compels them to) and mount themselves on bobs, and with plebeian independance jingles the loudest bells and take the best half of the street, right out of the middle as usual, and turn out for nobody and run into everything and in every way conduct themselves like the well-ordered, broad-shouldered, sing hey the jolly street cars that they are.

WHO ARE THESE IN BLANKET SUITS?

It is pleasant to tarry among people whose girls wear satin slippers when they dance and arctics when they wade through the snow. Our fair Canadian cousins have no dread of comfort. The snow has no terrors for them; hy dress for the storm as sensibly as for the reception. They dress prettily. And if there is a prettier figure on the North American Continent than a daughter of Canada, apparelled for the ice or the toboggan slide, herself a part of the snow drifted landscape, a picture of health and comfort that fairly softens the piercing winds into a sense of warmth, I have not seen it. She dresses in perfect harmony with the winter and landscape, she has a complexion clear as the ice of Ontario, and her warm blood shines through it rich as the flashes of the aurora, graceful and free in every movement —when you look at her you forget there is such a thing as a roller rink or an American banker in Canada.

Everybody dresses for the winter here when the winter comes, and yet it is a climate no more severe than that of New York State. I was the only man in Ontario with a stiff felt hat and a cloth overcoat, and I felt all the time I was in the province as though I was a lost Arctic explorer, and had eaten my fur overcoat, cap, mittens and boots, and was waiting for a rescuing party to find me. Before I had time to die of starvation however, J. Ross Robertson, with the Toronto Press Club found me, and carefully nursed and fed me back to life. They would have fed me more had I been a larger man with greater stowage capacity, for their hospitality is as boundless as their land, which, you know, is bounded not on the north by anything, and reaches away out into the great unknown beyond.

FACILIS DESCENSUS.

The toboggan is a sled with a single runner, which spreads clear across the bottom of the sled. The top of the toboggan is just like the bottom. It is somewhat thicker than a sheet of writing paper and about as long as an after-dinner speech. Its seating capacity is limited only by the number of people who can get on it. The urbane and gentlemanly conductor sits aft and uses one of his lithe and willowy legs for a steering apparatus by which he guides the toboggan some way or other. It is easy to slide down hill on a toboggan. In fact, after you start down you can't do anything else. True, you could fall off. That is easily done. The flying machine is not high, so you havn't evry far to fall. Still, if you have to fall from a toboggan half way down the slide, or else fall down stairs with a kitchen stove, you take the stove and the stairs everytime. It isn't so exciting and its so soon. The prince and I walked up the stairway for the purpose of sliding down the banister on a toboggan. The president of the club took his place aft; somebody said "let her go." Then we stopped, and the president said "How did we like it?" I left my breath at the top of the slide and we had to go up and get it. There it was, a great gasp 3½ inches long, sticking in the air like an icicle, just where I had gasped it when we started. I took it down, stuck it into my left lung and began to breathe again with great freedom. The toboggan is to any other way of getting down hill what flying is to going to sleep. If I was in a hurry and it was down hill all the way I would rather have a toboggan than a pair of wings any day.

P. S—There is usually an angel on the toboggan with you, which has a tendency to confirm the impression that you are going down with wings.

N.B —A young Canadian of broad experience assures me that Toronto angels really and truly have wings, insomuch that often he has to drive with one hand, using his other arm to hold the angel from flying away.

Addenda—I have known the same thing to happen in this United States.

CURLING.

We went to the Granite rink and watched the curlers. Curling is a game that will probably never become a general popular sport. The maddening excitement attendant upon this thrilling pastime, which seems to be its great fascination, debars any except the strongest heads and steadiest nerves from venturing into the seething maelstrom of its reckless gaiety. It is called curling because it makes your hair curl to watch it. A man takes a boulder of polished granite with a handle to it, and pushes it away from him. Then it slides along the ice. Two men with brooms walk along in front of it and sweep a clean place for it to slide in. Another man says, "Ay mon." He also remarks at intervals, "Soup her oop." A stranger once in a reckless hour joined a company of desperate curlers. In an unguarded moment he said "man" instead of "mon." The frenzied curlers at once tied a "stane" about his neck and chucked him through a hole in the ice.

But then, nonsense aside, everybody knows who knows anything at all, that a man must be to the manner born to appreciate and enjoy curling. A stranger intermeddleth not with the joy of the curler. The barbarian can never be taught to understand it and so his life must ever remain incomplete. And even an alien can see that it is more of a game than chess. I hold it to be solemn, self-evident, heaven-born truth, that a man who will play chess for amusement would saw a cord of wood for a joke.

A GREAT LEVELLER.

The snowshoe is to the Canadian lightsomeness, and to all the rest of the world a stumbling block. A man who has tried snow shoes for the first time is disqualified from writing about them for six months afterward. He might say something he would not only regret, but which he could not prove, and for which his Church would subject him to severest discipline. The best way for a beginner to wear snowshoes is to imitate the Indian who sells them. He carries them on his shoulder. I am now carrying mine in the baggage car. I will continue to carry them there until we reach the Custom-house. Then I don't know where the inspector will carry them. I don't want to pay duty on a pair of vile conspirators that have held me up to ridicule, thrown me down in the snow, torn my clothes and ruffled my temper. But I would like to get them home, I tried to slip them inside my trousers legs, but if you ever saw a snowshoe you will readily understand how, with the present style of pantaloons, that scheme would be a colossal failure.

MERRY RIPPLES.

When you see your neighbor in his back yard engaged in splitting wood you may at any moment send a cold chill down his spine by sharply shouting at him, "Look out for that clothes line!"

Troubles never come singly, sure enough. Immediately following the death of Wm. H. Vanderbilt alleged portraits of his sons appeared in scores of daily newspapers. Some persons seem to take a fiendish delight in multiplying grief.

A San Francisco family recently engaged a young girl from the East who advertised that she had been "four years in her last place." The family subsequently learned that she would have remained longer than four years in her last place if the Governor had not pardoned her when he did.

It's mighty seldom dat yer ken tell er pusson 'zactly how yer wants er thing done, an' nine times outen ten it is better for er pusson to do it hisself, fur eben ef it ain' done so well, he is better pleased wid de job. When yer itches 'twixt de shoulders it's er mighty hard matter ter tell er pusson whar to scratch.

"You didn't stay long at Miss Longcoffin's last night?" "No; Miss Esmeralda was not in good humor. She had the toothache. What are you laughing about?" "She hasn't got a real tooth in her head. She complained of toothache just to make you believe her teeth are not false. I know her dentist, and saw him making a full upper and lower set for her more than ten years ago."

"There!" said Mrs. Gummidge, putting aside her paper. "Good for Lillie Devereux Blake." "What has she done, my dear?" "She says that Shakespeare was a brute, and that the play 'The Taming of the Shrew' does woman gross injustice." "Well, I think myself that it would have been truer to nature if he hadn't a-tamed her."

Fesseden, who recently purchased an alarm clock, says the thing is a confounded humbug. "I set the alarm," he explained, "before going to bed, after taking the precaution to stop the clock, so that its ticking shouldn't keep me awake. And would you believe it, I overslept next morning a whole hour later than usual!"

"Want your sidewalk cleaned off?" he asked of a citizen. "Just got a man." "Have any badges on?" "I believe he has five or six." "Then let him keep the job. I'm a tramp and hard up, but them roller-skating champions has got to earn a living somehow, and I'm not the man to stand in their way. They are entitled to public sympathy and assistance."

It was a New York capitalist who flung $1,000 at one of his sons a year ago and said: "There it is, and it is the last dollar you'll get from me. You don't know enough to pound salt. Speculation! Why you haven't sense enough to buy and ship eggs. The other day the old man went down to Florida to see about a 3,000 acre tract of land he had purchased at $3. an acre for an orange grove. He went to the headquarters of "The Florida Orange Grove Estate Agency," and he found that his son was President, Secretary, Treasurer and sole owner. Half an hour later he discovered that his 3,000 acres raised alligators instead of oranges, and that the boy had cleared about $8,000 in the single transaction.

A Toronto drummer succeeded last Fall in taking three or four Ontario customers away from a Montreal house, but when he went his rounds a few days ago he was coldly received and no one would give him an order. "I feel," he finally said, "that I have a right to demand an explanation. How have I forfeited your confidence?" "Oh, you see, I have nothing against you or your house," replied the party addressed, "but the fact is, the other drummer is engaged to one of my daughters, and I feel it my duty to help him all I can" The Toronto man received the same explanation from all the others, and being a married man he abandoned the field.

A news item states that a number of tramps took possession of a palatial residence, during the absence of the tenants, made up comfortable fires, slept in the luxurious beds, ate all the canned edibles in the house, and succeeded in nearly ruining the costly carpets and furniture. And then it adds with an air of surprise: "They even went so far as to drink all the wines and liquor that had been left in the closets." That certainly was an unexpected piece of vandalism." When tramps eat the pies and canned fruit lying around loose, demolish the costly furniture, build fires to impart a glow of warmth to the deserted rooms and kick the stuffing out of an $800 piano, they merely follow the bent of their nomadic natures; but when they drink all the wines and liquors left in the closets, our faith in tramp human nature is badly shattered.

PUTTING THINGS AWAY.

THE MAN.

Man puts things out of the way whenever the necessity of so doing presents itself to him. For example, he finds that his room is in a disorderly state. Too many pairs of boots make themselves painfully obvious; there are more discarded collars on the mantel than propriety would dictate; and the mixture of cigar ashes, clothes brushes, and gloves on his table has reached a stage of confusion which displeases him, He resolves to put things in order and put out of the way whatever is plainly adapted to the process. Accordingly he crowds the superfluous boots under the sofa, thrusts smaller articles of personal apparel into the drawers, empties the cigar ashes and bits of waste paper behind his desk, and thus quickly sets his room in order. Now the result of this process is eminently satisfactory. Not only has he put things out of the way, but he is in a position to find them again as soon as he wants them. The sofa stands faithfully on guard over the boots, and he can at any time poke them out with a cane. The discarded collars, the gloves, the pipes and the various small articles thrown into the drawers, remain there, and the ashes and waste paper could be exhumed from behind the desk, were any possible demand for them to arise.

THE WOMAN.

Of course this masculine process of putting things out of the way excites the derision of woman. She claims it is the worst form and last expression of disorder. To put things away, as the art is practised by women, is equivalent to concealing them more or less completely.

The desire to put things away amounts in most women to a passion. Curiously enough it is always the things of other people—her husband or her children—that she puts away. Her own she wisely keeps where they are handy; and she resents the suggestion, no matter where they may be, they can ever be regarded as objects out of place. All other things, on the other hand, are, in her opinion, always out of place provided they are visible. Her chief object in life is to put them away where no one can see them, and her greatest happiness is attained when she has put them away so securely that she herself cannot remember where they are. Books and papers of a kind which a man is apt to need at any moment are always put away by women of eager enthusiasm. Winter clothing is put away in spring with such success that the owner is convinced that it has been stolen. In short there is nothing that woman will not gladly and effectually put away if it belongs exclusively to a man.

Advice to Farmers.

The fellow who gets off the following thinks himself mighty smart, don't he?

Never give greasy dish-water to pigs; it is too rich for their blood. Feed it to the hired man.

To keep a plow-horse from balking—leave him in the stable and don't try to work him.

The best way to raise potatoes is with a table fork. Some use a case knife; but as its sharp edge is liable to convert a common-sized mouth into an alligator-like abysmal grub-trap, that method should be avoided.

A farm barn should have all the modern improvements. Place a nice roof over it, and put a good fence around it. Then put a big insurance for double its value on it, and some dark and windy night shove a lighted torch under it.

Always postpone threshing until a propitious time. If you've got a grudge against a 200-pound neighbor, wait till some day when he is sick or has his back turned to you. Then jump onto him with a club and thresh the life out of him, if you want to.

Be sure to harvest and sell your eggs before they become over ripe. There is nothing so painful to the average buyer as to open a boiled article of hen fruit at breakfast and find that at some pre-historic period in the halcyon past, it had seen better days. Consumers prefer to meet the egg in the heyday of its existence, and ere it has outlived its usefulness.

Butter must never be trusted to walk alone to the city. It should be muzzled, chained and led by a strong rope, so that it cannot break away and destroy anything. There is an incident on record where a strong, vigorous consignment of extract de cow, en route to market, without a keeper, maliciously stopped on a railroad crossing and threw a train off the track. It cost the farmer owner his whole homestead to pay the damages obtained in court by the railway company.

In conclusion, when coming to the city with your family to visit the "the-ay-ter," instead of lubricating your wagon axles with rancid lard, and putting oil of bergamot on your heads of hair, reverse the order. (Though the odors of the former pale gaslights and suffocate an actor or two still the patrons of the drama in the audience near you will hilariously appreciate the change.

Flea and Mosquito.

Fleas abound in southern Europe, and mosquitoes flourish in America. A Spanish or Italian lady would no more blush to be seen with a flea on her person than would an American girl to be bitten by a mosquito. But the American thinks that the presence of fleas indicates uncleanliness, and this fact lies at the bottom of the amusing anecdote told by the Argonaut of San Francisco:

Some days ago a young lady was walking with a gentleman rather older than herself. Suddenly he saw upon her satin neck a black object. It moved—it was an insect—genus pulex.

Taking the advantage to which men with gray hair are so prone,—a younger man would have been more timid,—he at once removed the insect with his finger and thumb. The young lady turned at the touch inquiringly.

"Pardon me," said her companion, "but you had a flea on your neck."

The young lady showed mock displeasure.

"Should I not have removed it?" asked he anxiously.

"Ye-es," she replied, hesitatingly, "but you might have called it a mosquito."

SNOW IN THE STREETS.

How it is Removed in London at a Very Moderate Expense.

The question, what is the best way of disposing of snow in the city streets? is much discussed, says the New York World. One man suggests that the city should appoint officials to stand along the docks and buy all the snow that may be offered at a certain price per cartload, pay for it on the spot, and see it dumped into the river. The wise inventor of this method thinks that since almost all the carts and wagons are idle during the prevalence of snow there would be a universal turnout of the unemployed class, and the whole island would be cleared of snow in two days.

In London the snow is emptied in pits excavated for the purpose, with perforated iron bottoms, under which there is a coil of pipes heated by steam. In these pits the snow is rapidly melted, and the water runs away into the sewers. In this manner the snow from the business parts of the city is rapidly removed at a very moderate expense.

In Milan the removal of the snow is let out by contract at so much per inch. As soon as the snow ceases falling the city engineer, in the presence of certain officials and the chief contractors, measures the depth of snow on stone slabs which are completely sheltered from the winds. This measurement furnishes the basis for computing the price which the city is to pay for each ward and district. There are portions of the city which present peculiar difficulties, and for cleansing these the contractors get a larger allowance.

On a winter's day in Milan, after a fall of snow, there will be as many sometimes as three thousand men in the streets sweeping and shoveling.

The remarkable circumstance is the small sum of money which it costs Milan to get entirely rid of its snow. In the winter of 1874-5 the total fall of snow amounted to a little over three feet six inches. The expense of its removal was about $42 000. The winter before last the fall was only five and a quarter inches, which was removed for $5,200 The city, we should add, furnishes all the implements employed except vehicles and horses. Generally speaking, it costs to remove the snow from the streets of Milan about $1,000 an inch.

One thing is certain: The snow should be removed from our cities within forty-eight hours after it has fallen It is the worst possible economy to let it remain to thaw and freeze and freeze and thaw from November to April.

Advice to Young Women.

A lady of intelligence and observation has remarked:

"I wish I could impress upon the minds of the girls that the chief end of woman is not to marry young"

If girls could only be brought to believe that their chances for a happy marriage were better after 25 than before, there would be much less misery in the world than there now is. To be sure, they might not have so many opportunities to marry as before, but as they do not need to marry but one at a time, it is necessary that that one should be satisfactory. As a girl grows older, if she thinks at all, she certainly becomes more capable of judging what would make her happy than when younger. How many girls of 20 would think of marrying the man they would gladly have married at 16?

At 30, a woman who is somewhat independent, and not anxious, over-anxious, to marry, is much harder to please and more careful in her choice than one at 20. There is good reason for this. Her mind has improved with her years, and she now looks beyond mere appearances in judging men. She is apt to ask if this man who is so very polite in company is really kind-hearted. Do his polite actions spring from a happy, genial nature, or is his attractive demeanor put on for the occasion and laid off at home as he lays off his coat?

A very young girl takes it for granted that men are always as she sees them in society—polite, friendly, and on their good behavior. If she marries early the man who happens to please her fancy, she learns to her sorrow that in nine cases out of ten, a man in society and a man at home are widely different beings. Five years, at that period of life, produce a great change in opinions and feelings.

We frequently come to detest at 25 what we admired at 16. We advance from the taffy-candy and peanut age to the era of gumdrops and marron glaces, and even in later years lose our yearnings.

Magnified Incidents.

The dwellers in lonely regions are forced to seize on the most trivial events and wring excitement from them, if they would find relief from the stagnations of their daily life. A traveller among the San Francisco mountains tells, in Outing, his own experience in finding a trivial circumstance dignified into matter for discussion. He says:

Once at Ash Forks, a collection of a dozen shanties, the heatless ruffian who served a mockery of a dinner brought me a glass of milk. It had turned a little sour and no wonder; for in that desert place the sun beats down with a tropical heat.

Quite conscious of possible unpleasant consequences, I objected to my milk. The bearded waiter arms akimbo, stared defiantly, then slouched to the door, where sat the bulky landlord, and made known my complaint.

No less than four idlers followed that landlord to my table. The unfortunate glass of milk was passed in silence down the line. I felt the situation to be serious.

"Hanged if it ain't sour!" spoke at last the portly host, and every loafer echoed, "Hanged if it ain't!"

"Hanged if we don't make that rauchman drink the milk!" was the further verdict, supplemented by the chorus, "Hanged if we don't!"

"An' if he kicks, we'll hang him!"

"Shoot us if we won't!"

That deranged milk was the event of the day for six men It furnished them with material for thought and speech.

A theatrical manager thanks his stars when they don't want all the receipts.

Why is a bald-headed man like a hound? —because he makes a little hare go a great way.

MARKDALE FEBRUARY 11 1886

WEDDING BELLS.

On Wednesday last one of the most imposing and demonstrative weddings in the history of Markdale took place; the contracting parties being Mr. Geo. M. Haskett, hardware merchant, and Miss Minnie Rorke, niece of Mr. W J. McFarland, general merchant of this town. The marriage took place in the Methodist Church, Rev. Wesley Casson officiating. Messrs. W. L. Young, Silas H. Hill and Willie McFarland were groomsmen while the bride was supported by Misses Laura Lorke, Maud Richardson and Amelia McFarland. Over two hundred were in attendance, among those from a distance, were Joseph Rorke, Esq., of Clarksburg, and sister; Dr. Armstrong, chief Surgeon of the C. P. R. Hospital at Mackay's Harbor, and lady; Rev. S. G. Rorke of Cobourgh; Mrs. Southgate, Toronto, besides numerous relations and others of this locality. The ceremony took place a few minutes after one o'clock after which about forty couple adjourned to the residence of Mrs. Rutledge, grandmother of the bride, where a sumptuous dinner was served. The company then accompanied the happy couple to the Station where they took the 3:52 train South and will visit Toronto, Niagara Falls, London and other points,

The presents were handsome, costly and immensly numerous.

The bride and groom were among our most esteemed and respected citizens, and carry with them the best wishes of the whole community, we are also pleased to have them settle down as permanent residents.

May the richest blessings of a kind providence be theirs, is our worst wish.

TWENTY-FOUR O'CLOCK.

The C. P. R. has decided to adopt the twenty-four o'clock system at once on the lines west of Port Arthur, and if found to be of as great convenience as expected, would afterwards be extended to other portions of the road. One great benefit to be derived from this system of railroading is the doing away with the a. m. and p. m. now necessary, and which causes serious difficulties and dangers by being omitted or misunderstood. The new system will count the same as at present from 2 o'clock midnight to 12 noon, and for the afternoon it will count right on to twenty-four instead of commencing again at one. Should the change become general, it will necessitate a universal transformation in the face of all time pieces.

CANADIAN POSTAGE RATES.

Mr. Jenkins, of the Durham Chronicle, takes strong exceptions to the idea of our favoring the return of postage on newspapers, in the event of a reduction from three to two cents on letters. We are not at all surprised at it, as he is opposed to almost anything reasonable, if it fails to personally benefit himself.

Any one has a perfect right to his opinion, and to express it as well. but it is the hight of bad taste to be insulting in so doing. It is however one of Mr. Jenkin's peculiarities.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

School Inspectors.

To the Editor of the Standard.

I notice from your correspondent—a teacher of sixteen years standing—anent the School Inspectors, that my name is mentioned approvingly.

As to the matter, I may say, that I am not sorry such an important subject is being discussed—but I fear many of your readers do not understand our position—for we are quite numerous.

Partizans of those gentlemen, charge us with motives of spleen and malice and say we use our privilege in the County Council to enforce them; such a charge is, however, untrue, we have nothing to do with them on that line. Their morals, their fidelity, or their gentlemanliness, we do not impeach, neither have we a desire to do so. It is the advanced requirements of the educational system colliding with those gentlemen's attainments and so apparent is the defect, that Teachers and Scholars alike, perceive and condemn—Educationally; they are mere fossils of a receding age.

I take the ground, that, honorable men, seeing their own utter unfitness, should quietly retire, with the laurels (if any) they have earned, because as surely as our educational system advances, so surely must those men become less and less qualified and appreciated.

It is to be regretted that Councillors of judgement and professedly honorable, should so prostitute their position, by sustaining, in any way or manner, such anomolies in the Inspectorates.

Arguments, not a few are urged as sufficient reasons for their actions—such as the efficiency of their Inspectorates, as judged by the number of students passing intermediate examinations, and that nobody complains. Such nonsensical averments rather tend to mirth and redicule than otherwise—to the teachers belong those honors—the children advance and succeed in spite of the Inspectors; and here the abominable inconsistency comes in, that a body of men, representative ones like the County Council should, some of them, conspire to perpetuate this system of reversal to the well understood requirements of the school system, and continue men who are not and never will be qualified to inspect our schools as the law anticipates.

What would be thought of an architect being employed, whose mechanical qualifications were inferior to the lowest class workman? What would be thought of a foreman of a printing establishment, who himself scarcely had passed the "Devil's" post? And such is the relationship and comparison existing between the Inspector and the Teachers, as is amply proved by the letter of your correspondent referred to, and which might be multiplied a hundred fold.

It is sorrowfully amusing to see one of them, so attentive to the sessions of the Council, with his oft defeated friend. Recently, there always seems to be business calling them to Owen Sound, especially when the councillors are there; but business or no business, this gigantic fraud upon the intelligence of the County must be wiped out. We, as councillors, must not and will not legislate for the interests of one man or two only, but for the interests of the County at large.

The Minister of Education said last week in Owen Sound, "That water cannot rise above its level, as is the teacher so will be the scholar." So it may be said of the Inspector, as is the Inspector, so will be the scholars; and the manly words of Rev. Mr. Sommerville will bear repeating: "Woe is me if I permit any thing to come between me and the discharge of my duty."

DR. CHRISTOE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—A good deal has been said of late about our School Law in general, and about our School Inspectors in particular. Like many more of my class, I am very anxious that economy be the watchword in all our public institutions: and very many think that retrenchment is absolutely necessary in many departments of public expenditure. In your issue of the 28th ult. there is an article from a school teacher signed "F. W." which plainly teaches us that these Inspectors are of no use whatever. This is what many farmers have thought for a long time, and if the "Township Fathers in Council assembled in Owen Sound" had set about having our Common School Law so reformed that Inspectors and a lot of other high-paid functionaries would be dispensed with, they would really show something of that "Wisdom" for which they so frequently get credit. It is noting to us whether an Inspector pronounces the name of one of the chief of Homer's Grecian heroes (Achilles) correctly or not; what we want is a reformed School Law which will give our children all the education we want for a great deal less money than it costs us now. I would like to see some able man take up this matter in our interests. In my young days school was kept every second Saturday, and the Summer holidays was only two weeks; now, it is six or seven. I would like if some of your "Reform" correspondents would tell us if these and many other changes in the Teachers interest were enacted by petition from the public, or how.

Yours,

A FARMER.

Fleshertom.

From our own correspondent.

Miss Calvert of Toronto is enjoying a week's visit at the Rev. Mr. Ayers this week.

Mrs. Ayers returned home from Oshawa on Saturday last very much improved in health.

Dr. & Mrs. Armstrong are the guests of J. W. Armstrong this week.

Thursday evening last was the occasion of a very pleasant gathering of the members of Flesherton Division Sons of Temperance. A large gathering assembled in the Temperance Hall, where the kind ladies provided plenty of cakes and coffee, to welcome home Bro. Petch (who is Worthy Patriarch of the Division) who arrived with his bride on the 8:55 train. Mr. C. Sproule formally received the party with a brief and appropriate address. The Brass Band was present to assist in the welcome, and upon the arrival at the Hall of the happy couple struck up some lively airs, and during the evening discoursed some choice music. After tea had been served and all had thoroughly enjoyed themselves in pleasant amusements and conversation, Dr. Christoe was voted to the chair, when a short programme of vocal and instrumental music, speeches, etc were gone through with.

A Cottage Social, held at the Methodist parsonage on Monday evening last was a very pleasant affair. The house was filled to its utmost capacity. All went home well satisfied with the evening's entertainment.

Monday last being Fair day, there was a big stir in town. A good number of cattle changed hands, but prices low. There was a big lot of grain on the market. Good prices are being paid. M. Richardson & Co. held an auction sale of general dry-goods which seemed to be well patronized.

Quebec.

The agitation in the Province of Quebec er the Riel matter seems to have settled wn, but we are assured that its subsidence nearly temporary, only the calm before storm. Time will tell. One thing is tain; if the French Canadian members, profess to believe that Riel was unjustly with, have determined to wreck their engeance on the Government who refused obstruct the course of justice in that atter, by defeating them when Parliament ets, the gravest issue ever placed before people of this country must immediately e. And it will be a plain issue. Poli- ians may endeavor to becloud it, may ish to surround it with a mist of verbiage dense that its true significance shall not apparent to the people, but they will fail the Government should be defeated by vote of the French Bleus, combined with of the legitimate opposition from tario and the other provinces, there can but one meaning drawn from their fall. y will have fallen because they dared, in ect of authority and law, to run counter French Canadian ideas on the subject of the late rebellion because they declined to stand between a criminal of a particular nationality and the just death. There can be nothing plainer than this. If it be said that the Government will not necessarily be tried solely on the question of the rebellion and the execution of Riel, but that their policy prior to these events will form an important count in the indictment, we reply that their arraignment comes too late. Up to a certain day in March last it was open to the most consistent patriotism to have found fault with the North-West policy of the Government, and to have condemned them if they deserved condemnation, but its voice must have been silenced in a moment by the rifle shots of Duck Lake and the tramp of our citizen soldiers. Principally by the action of the French Canadians themselves the smaller question has been so merged in the larger that it is impossible to separate them. Depose the Government now by the votes of French recalcitrants on any question relating to the North-West and you depose it because Riel was executed.

In such a contingency the questions will immediately present themselves, and must be answered:—Are the French to rule this country? Is there to be a law which the English speaking race are bound to obey, but which may be overridden by the people of any other nationality when it suits their purpose? We believe the people will answer with no uncertain voice, and will be prepared to sustain their opinion, if necessary, to the death. This is the extreme view. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that French Canadians are so blind to their own interests as to drive their fellow countrymen to the necessity of a choice between evils of such magnitude—race domination, or resistance. We trust, therefore, to see the Government sustained. Whatever be their sins they are entitled to gratitude for the manner in which the insurrection was stamped out, and while there may be room for difference of opinion as to the expediency of hanging Riel, there can be no honest difference as to the justice of his punishment.—[Trip Hammer.

Murder at Owen Sound.

A HARMLESS JOKE AT A MAN'S APPETITE LEADS TO A FATAL QUARREL.

Owen Sound, Feb. 8.—To night about 10 o'clock one of the most horrible crimes ever known in the vicinity of Owen Sound was committed. A colored man named Smoots, about 23 years of age, lost his life at the hands of another negro named Philip Roy, in the house of a colored man named Johnson. It appears Roy and Smoots came to Johnson's house to night, both under the influence of liquor, Johnson being absent, not having returned from work. When he entered the house Roy was eating at the table and Smoots making jokes at the quantity of food he ate. This led to a quarrel, when Roy attacked Smoots, who knocked Roy down. The lattter got up, and after wiping the blood off his face started for the door with an oath. Smoots hearing this started after him, following him out, when Roy turned on him with some sharp instrument gave him a terrible cut in the neck below the ear. Smoots was taken in the house and a doctor sent for but before one could arrive he had expired. The police were notified and two constables despatched to the scene, who succeeded in arresting Roy. Dr. McCullough examined the body and found a great gash about two inches long right below the left ear. On examination he declared the carotid artery had been severed. An inquest will be held to-morrow.

THE FARM.

Forcing Rhubarb and Asparagus.

A method which we have frequently practiced is to dig up, in the fall, or at any time during winter when the ground is not frozen, a number of clumps with as many roots attached as possible, and place them close together in a cold frame, sprinkle fine soil between and over them, water copiously with lukewarm water, level again with soil, cover all with a few inches of dry leaves and put on the sashes. The subsequent care is the same as required for ordinary cold-frames, giving air on mild days, and secure covering in cold weather. Water is rarely needed, as the leaves prevent rapid evaporation When cold-frames are not available, the roots may be taken into a warm cellar, under a window if possible, and covered with soil and leaves, or straw. Plants in a cellar need more water than in a frame, and the water given should be lukewarm.

Another, and very easy way to forward Rhubarb, is to turn a one-headed barrel over a strong plant, and bank fresh horse-manure all round and over it. The bottom of the barrel should have several holes bored through it to facilitate the escape of superabundant heat and gases, else the stalks are apt to grow up sickly and decay.

Timely Suggestions.

Keep no unprofitable cows over winter. The present is the time to cull the herd, if it has not been done already. Ten chances to one you are keeping one or more cows that do not pay for the feed they eat. You can easily ascertain which cows are profitable for cream by setting a little milk from each cow in a tumbler, or better in a cream gauge. There will be a difference in the thickness of the cream, and that very marked, unless your cows are all of the same breed, and even then the difference in the cream may be noticeable.

A good condition powder may be cheaply prepared on the farm. A mixture of one pound penugreek, one pound of gentian, one pound salt, one pound sulphate of soda, an ounce of sulphur, pound of phosphate of soda, half a pound of chloride of iron, and half a pound of black antimony, given in tablespoonful doses twice a day, will greatly assist the appetite and promote the condition of the animals.

A farmer's scrap-book should be kept on every well-regulated farm. There are thousands of recipes for the curing of sick animals which may be of great value if referred to at the proper time. Useful hints regarding special crops may be forgotten unless preserved in this manner, convenient for reference. Plans for farm buildings or their interior management may be preserved until wanted. Gates, fences, ditches, and the numerous other things which make up the business of the farm, require frequent repairs or entire construction, and the hints and helps which may be afforded if the scrap-book has been well kept are of immense value.

The necessity of keeping horses away from quagmires in the public roads is shown by the manner in which one of my horses is affected since it became stalled in one not long ago. Since the occurrence, whenever the horse touches a soft place in the road it trembles all over with fear, every muscle in its body seeming to shake, and it has to be led away from the spot, refusing to be driven.

Crumbly Butter.

Winter-made butter carries its own certificate of quality. It is usually white and tallowy, and crumbles into small fragments. It is always deficient in the olly part of the fat. Fat consists of three acids—stearic, margaric, and oleic, combined with glycerine. Stearic acid, or stoerine, is hard, white, and friable; oleic acid, or oleine, is yellow, soft, and oily, and dilutes the whiter and harder stearine and margarine. In the winter the oleine of the butter is in much less proportion, being used up in making fat to keep the animal warm. And unless food that is rich in oil is provided for the cows, the butter made in the winter will always be hard and crumbly, and white in color. This fact applies also to some cows, which consume the oleine of the food, and consequently make white, hard butter at all times; but much more so in winter than in summer, while other's make rich, yellow, and olly butter. The rich butter of the Jersey cows is associated with a lean carcass, while some other cows are always fat and sleek, but their butter is white and of poor flavor.

Much however, may be done in the way of feeding to secure an excellent quality of butter, even in winter. Some of those who have made winter dairying a special business are much troubled by the poor quality of the butter, and farmers generally, who make butter this season, complain almost universally of the same difficulty. While some part of it lies in the cows, beyond doubt, yet the greater part of the difficulty is in the feeding, and dairymen must provide an abundance of food that is rich in olly matter, to supply both the want of the cow for herself to sustain the vital warmth and to leave an abundant surplus for the butter. A caution may be given against depending on the so-called oilmeals for this purpose. By the new processes in use in the mills every particle of oil in cottonseed and linseed is taken out, by means of benzine, or naphtha, as it is sometimes called, which dissolves the oil and leaves the meal entirely free of it. Formerly those meals contained from 10 to 18 per cent. of oil, and they were then most valuable food for fattening and the butter dairy. Now they are of no use for making fat, excepting so far as their protein elements may be converted into it by a roundabout transformation; but it is known that fat, given in the food, is formed into an emulsion by the process of mastication and digestion, and is assimilated directly and taken into the blood by the way of the lacteal vessels and the portal vein. If we want to get rich milk we must feed food rich in oil; and the best food of this kind we can use is hay or fodder, so that it is thoroughly masticated and made to yield up its oil to the action of the saliva.

The Onondaga Indians worship a white dog. Their deity must be a holy terrier.

It don mek no diffunce how big or liar er pusson is, he hates er pusson dat won't tell de truth.

Iceland in Summer.

Holiday makers who are at a loss where to go to insure a cool spot, may, perhaps, be tempted to try Iceland. It is not necessarily cool there, notwithstanding the refreshing sound of the name, but it is a good deal less likely to be hot than Swiss or even Scotch valleys, and there is a good deal more to see that would be fresh to the visitor. Nor is the island by any means difficult to get at.

The Danish Royal Mail steamers make a monthly voyage from Copenhagen to Reykjavik, and five of them run all round the island, as well as calling on each voyage at Leith. There is also an English line during the summer from Leith to Reykjavik.

Iceland is by no means the diminutive country which people who do not look at large maps are in danger of supposing it to be, when they read that the population does not exceed that of a third-rate English town. It is possible to travel from east to west in a direct line for a greater distance than from London to Carlisle, so that the island is really of very respectable dimensions.

Nor are the people, remote as is their dwelling-place from the centres of sweetness and light, by any means an uncultured race. They have had a Parliament of their own—the Althing—for now nearly a thousand years, and they are a great deal better instructed than European populations generally

The ordinary cockney tourist would hardly find himself at home among them; but an intelligent observer, interested in the study of nature and in the ways of isolated communities, might really do much worse during the summer months than brace himself up for the winter by a week or two in Iceland.

Fishing and farming are the Icelander's principal pursuits, and fishing is more important, perhaps, than farming. There are practically no manufacturers in the country, and trade is so little developed that up to last year the island did not even possess a bank, though the Althing was seriously occupying itself with the establishment of such an institution. Some interesting information on the Icelandic fisheries is contained in the last report presented to the Foreign Office by Mr. Consul Paterson.

The Iceland fisherman's best customers are not his comparatively near neighbors—he has no neighbors at all but the Greenlanders, within six hundred miles—but the Spaniards. A good deal of the fish caught goes to Copenhagen, but more to Spain, and Spain gets the pick of the catches.

Wheat growing is no part of the Iceland farmer's industry. For that the climate is not warm enough. He breeds flocks and herds, and during his short summer is much concerned for the result of his hay harvest. These, last year, were not satisfactory in the southern parts of the island, owing to the occurrence of wet weather late in the summer. A further reduction of live stock was the consequence of the scarcity of odder. In the north, however, the hay crop was good, and the farming interest there is fairly prosperous.

"Canna Thole."

If a Hindoo has a daughter who remains "an unappropriated blessing" at the age of ten years, he considers himself disgraced. From the day of her birth he is anxious to secure her a husband As a portionless girl is not attractive to men, the father saves a little every year, so that his daughter's dowry may increase her value in the matrimonial market.

The young lady is not consulted. The bridegroom may be old and repulsive, but she accepts him as the husband to whom her father has sold her. Even if he is young and comely, her interest in him is far less than that with which she surveys the jewels that adorn her person. The wedding ceremonies and feasts which celebrate her sale and delivery to a master, are far more attractive to her childish nature than is her husband.

When she is transferred, as if she were a heartless and soulless animal, to her lord's house, she begins a dull, dreary life, relieved only by the cares of the kitchen, the nursery, and the idols, and broken by the scoldings of her mother-in-law.

Scholars tell us that not a few of the customs of modern civilization originated in India. Perhaps they would assert that the cultured European marries off his daughter to-day as the uncultured Hindoo has done for hundreds of years. Certainly, the following anecdote, if it is illustrative of a general practice, endorses his assertion.

A Scotch farmer's wife was one day explaining to a neighbor how well she had married her daughter, who had a new house filled with new furniture, and many acres, on which cows, sheep, pigs and poultry fed, to say nothing of a gig, in which to drive to market, "jist like a leddy."

The neighbor expressed her delight at such a grand marriage. "Oh, there's nae doubt it's a grand marriage," answered the mother, "an' it wasna jist for ae thing."

"An' what might the ae thing be?" asked the now curious neighbor.

"Weel, ye see," answered the mother, as if the "ae thing" was of little consequence, "the puir silly cratur canna thole [endure] her man

His Reward.

Moral lessons are not easy to inculcate and the distressed teacher finds herself between Scylla and Charybdis. A school teacher in California received for a Christmas gift a pair of flower vases, which she kept upon her table. One of the pupils in the school, an over-grown, half-witted youth, was sadly given to telling falsehoods.

As the schoolmistress entered her room one day, she was met by this youth, who was weeping copiously, and holding in his hand the fragments of one of the vases, shattered to atoms. Overwhelmed by the accident, he had shown (for him) remarkable moral courage in "owning up;" and the teacher, delighted at his truthfulness, though deploring the loss of her present, called him a "good boy," and as a reward of honesty, gave him a picture-book.

But the pride she had experienced over his moral improvement was somewhat abated when, the next morning, she met him with the other vase, totally demolished.

"O miesus, I've busted your otha liddle jug! Gimme 'notha picture-book!"

His dull mind had conceived the idea that the reward was for breaking the vase, instead of being given to him for telling the truth, in spite of fear.

Mr. Parnell is a bachelor and lives the simplest sort of life—in lodgings, as a rule, taking his dinner at a hotel. His habits are so quiet that he and his sister Anna were guests at the same hotel for weeks without knowing that they were under one roof.

Mr. Gladstone is, as is well known, fond of using postal cards for his communications. Although the law is that nothing must be written on the address side of the card save the name and address, he invariably puts either his name or his initials there. Thus the recipient is subjected to one penny extra postage.

Great is the Commander of the Faithful Recently he took a notion to have an artificial lake made in the Yildiz Kiosk park, that he might take his favorite sultana sailing in a steam launch. So he had the huge basin prepared and the whole water supply of Constantinople turned in, and all the city had to go dry for a day until the ake was full.

"Diamond Joe" Reynolds is one of the millionaire curiosities of Chicago. He invariably wears a plain grey suit without an overcoat, a hat several seasons behind, prunella gaiters that have been out of style for years, and always has in his shirt front a first water diamond as large as a filbert and as bright as a dewdrop. He owns more grain elevators than any man in the country and ships more grain than any two men on the Chicago Board of Trade.

George Tipton was a farmer in Madison county, Kentucky, about twenty years ago. He became financially involved and went to the West Indies. He secured control of a small island of the Bahama group which proved to be rich in phosphates, from which he amassed great wealth. He ruled autocratically, and no women or intoxicating liquors were permitted upon the island. The ruler of this Eveless and prohibited Eden is now on a visit to his native State, and is expected to take back with him a Blue Grass widow and a full supply of Kentucky bourbon.

It is pretty clear now that General Prendergast made no arrangement for maintaining order at Mandalay after the surrender of Thebaw, that a sanguinary riot occurred, that the mob had possession of the town all night, that statements to this effect were calmly disbelieved by the British commander three miles off, and that the Times correspondent was sent back to Rangoon simply because he had telegraphed home a description of this discreditable bungling. Yet it may be taken for granted that Gen. Prendergast will not be repremanded, and that correspondent will be frowned upon by the whole of officialdom, both in India and Pall Mall

At the informal opening of Parliament when the Queen was not present in the House of Lords amongst the members of the House of Commons who assembled on the floor of the throne was Sir William Harcourt, who took the liberty of resting his arm upon the railing in front of the royal seat. For this offence—for it is an offence, it seems, when the throne is uncovered—he was promptly reproved by an official, who with equal promptitude was reported by the right hon. gentleman to the yeoman usher. Sad to say, the ex-home secretary was ruled to have been out of order; for when the throne is denuded of its brown holland covering, the Queen is supposed to be present in spirit, if not in person, and that being the case the royal railings must not be leant upon—not even by such a descendant of royalty as Sir William Harcourt.

According to the Jewish Chronicle, Baron Alphonse de Rothschild is not the first Hebrew who has been admitted into the French Academy of Fine Arts. The late Achille Fould, the celebrated finance minister to Napoleon III., was elected a free member of the Academy in 1854. The illustrious composer, Halevy, also had a seat in the body as a titular member. The election of Baron Rothschild raises the number of Jewish members of the Institute of France to eight, his colleagues being MM. Breal, Joseph Derenbourg, Henri Weil, and Oppert of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres; Adolph Franck, whose election dates back to 1844, of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences; Loewy and Maurice Levy of the Academy of Sciences. The most famous section of the Institute, viz., the Academy Francaise, is the only one which has not yet given a fauteuil to a Jew.

The Latest Tramp Dodge.

Right in the midst of the late January blizzard, a forlorn-looking tramp was blown to the front door of a cottage, and when the woman came out at his knock, he handed her a little note-book, with the request: "Please write my name in this 'ere leedle book."

"Certainly I will. What name, please?"

"My name is Jim Barto, but I want yer to write it so that people will take me for Sam Scadger. I don't want my real name to become known in this town."

"Does anybody in this town know you?"

"No, ma'am."

"Then what difference does it make what name you call yourself?"

"Well, you see, ma'am, I hev a dear old mother livin' in this County, and, as I'm dyin' of starvation, I want ter hide my real name, so that when your neighbors find a dead man on the street, with nothin' in his stomach but a whist of oat straw, my poor old mother will never know it was her poor, wayward son."

That Christian lady stuffed his worthless hide so full of well-cooked grub that it is not likely he'll take to eating oat straw for several days.

FOREIGN ECHOES.

Champagne is now the fashionable wine in England.

New Zealand, with a population of about 600,000, has a debt of nearly £31,000,000, or over $250 to each inhabitant.

King Milan of Servia wears a coat of mail made of silk, compressed down and rawhide, which covers his trunk, legs and arms.

African travellers agree that elephant steaks are very tough. It takes half an hour to eat a square inch of elephant meat.

Paper rails are made in Russia. They are longer than ordinary rails, and said to have a greater adhesiveness in contact with locomotive wheels.

A Japanese inventor has discovered a means of making paper from seaweed. It is thick in texture, and, from its transparency, can be substituted for glass in windows, and, when colored, makes an excellent imitation of stained glass.

At a race in South Australia a few weeks ago, the falling of a leading horse brought nearly the whole field tumbling over him. Two jockeys were killed outright, half a dozen others seriously (some fatally) injured, and several horses killed or maimed.

The London Times lately contained an advertisement for a smart looking second footman, who must have unexceptionable character and be active, an early riser, and speak French and English. The inducements held out to this paragon are $80 a year.

A woman in Bohemia was lately sentenced to imprisonment for ten days for forgery because she changed her physician's prescription calling for 1 20 gramme of morphine so that it read 6 20 grammes. It is said that no similar case has ever appeared on the court records of the United States or England.

Although a banker, and one of the best business men in the world, the late Lord Mayor of London, Sir R. N. Fowler, writes so atrocious a hand that a sentence which he intended to be read as follows, "I regard the conduct of the Government in this matter as absolutely inhuman," was, owing to the inability of a printer to decipher what was meant, transformed in type into "I rarely can compass a tale. My grandmother is the best narrator of amusing incidents."

Lady Granville Gordon, whose new departure as a hat and bonnet maker in London has excited attention, is the daughter of Mr. Roe, the Dublin distiller, who has fallen on evil days. Hence the bonnet shop, as Lord Gordon has not, nor ever had, any money. His grandfather, the Marquis of Huntley, was sold out by the Sheriff, and his brother, the present Marquis, had writs out against him for obtaining money under false pretenses, but his brother-in-law came to his aid at the eleventh hour, and the proceedings were withdrawn.

The "Claimant" has just delivered a lecture in Dublin. He drew an immense audience, who hailed him as he came on with cries of "Hallo, Roger!" and "Wagga-Wagga!" All the other performers with him were hissed off. Sir Roger was in evening dress, and is described as tall of stature, portly in build, of dark complexion, and as solemn as a professional undertaker in appearance. His powers of oratory are not good, his voice is bad, and his twenty minutes' address was of the plainest character.

The railway cars of Russia, says a writer in Mechanics, are among the most commodious in the world. They resemble ours rather than the compartment cars in use elsewhere on the continent of Europe, but in Russia the aisle is shifted to one side, so that the seats on the left will accomodate three passengers side by side and those on the right but one. This is especially convenient when the car is not crowded in night travel. The end doors of the car, instead of opening upon the platform, lead into a small, enclosed vestibule, whence doors open out at right and left.

At the Royal Academy exhibition in London, which gives a fair idea of the architectural taste of the time, it will be found that the plain early English style so popular with architects for many years past in the designs for churches, is giving way to later styles, especially the flamboyant decorated. A curious example of this new departure is shown in the subjects chosen for study by the art students in the Architectural Museum, Westminster. A few years since scarcely any subjects were selected for drawing or modelling but the beautiful foliages of the thirteenth century, whereas now perpendicular details are preferred almost to the exclusion of all others.

A scientific journal gives an account of a pianoforte made in Paris in which paper was made to take the place of wood, the whole case being made from paper so compressed that it was enabled to receive a hard surface, which took a perfect polish. The color was cream white. The tone of the instrument is reported to be not loud, but very sweet. The short, broken character of the sound emitted by ordinary pianofortes is replaced by a soft, full, quasi-continuous sound, resembling somewhat that of the organ. It has been suggested that the evenness of texture of the compressed paper may have some influence in effecting this modification of sound.

It is surprising how many British statesmen of note have once at least completely changed their political views. Lord Castlereagh began as a burning Nationalist, and drank, in 1790, at a dinner to the Northern Whig Club, "to the Revolution!" It will not surprise any one if, too, in another decade, his great nephew, Lord Randolph Churchill, should veer round. Again, the late Lord Derby mainly carried, as Whig and reformer, the measure reducing the preposterous number of Irish Protestant prelates. His own son's change of views and that of the late Sir R. Peel are notorious, as is the fact that Lord Beaconsfield was not always an ardent Tory, or Mr. Gladstone an advanced Liberal. Lord Russell never wavered. England cannot point to a more consistent career.

During a rehearsal of the "Jota Aragonese" as arranged by Glinka at St Petersburg, recently, Dr. Hans von Bulow stopped the clarionet player in the middle of a phrase, and said: "You have made a mistake; play F natural instead of F sharp." The player remarked that the passage had been so played ever since the piece was written. "Never mind that," said Von Bulow; "I don't need a counterpoint." The incident caused great excitement in musical circles. The professors of the Conservatoire, who were against their chief composer being taught by Von Bulow, and the Grand Duke Constantine, honorary President of the Musical Society, sent his aid-de-camp to the conductor that not a note of Glinka must be changed. Von Bulow did not, however, let the matter rest there. On raising his baton to direct the piece at a public concert, he called out to the first violin player "You will play F sharp, by order."

QUEBEC'S AWFUL DANGER.

The Gate of the St. Lawrence Must Be Closed.

The Detroit Tribune the other day contained an article headed, "Sound the Alarm.—Why did the Canadian Premier make a sudden trip to England?"

A prominent Irishman, who was in Quebec last Autumn, asked the same question:

"Why were two companies of artillery summoned to Quebec unexpectedly without apparent cause a short time ago? Why did Sir John Macdonald hasten to England also without apparent cause?" He continued as follows: "The Canadian papers have been trying to explain these things, seemingly unsuccessfully, for they couldn't see right, for they were blinded with partisan glasses. The reason is plain. I tried to ascribe John A.'s sudden departure to fear that some of the French, who resent his course in the North-West rebellion, might kill him. The Conservative press denied this imputation of course. But the public remained and still remains in the deepest ignorance of the object of the trip. While in Quebec I outlined a plan for

but I saw no good opportunity then of acting on it. When the Canadian Government became engaged with the disaffected Indian breeds and the Indians, I communicated my plans to a few personal friends in Montreal in whom I could trust. The immediate result was a series of meetings, some at my office, some at the residence of my friend. These meetings grew larger and larger, and at last, we were obliged to rent a hall on Michigan avenue. Over 100 persons were let into the secret, mostly young men of means, all educated and daring, and who could be relied upon in any emergency. At last it was all arranged. Several of us were to proceed to Quebec in private, on a certain day and at a certain hour were to visit the citidel, all armed with the Smith & Wesson self-acting revolver. The smallest of us were to be women, and so as smooth faces, wigs, skirts, and bonnets could make us. When all had entered the trance, I was to throw handfuls of pepper among the soldiers and so collect them at one point. At that moment my companions were to draw their revolvers and DRIVE THE MILITARY OUT.

This appeared to all of us as easy as rolling off a log. We had no doubt that after gaining possession and arming ourselves properly we could retain possession until aid should arrive. Riel was hanged and Lepine sentenced to be hanged. All Quebec would be furious. The allegiance of the French Canadians, merely nominal, after all, would be knocked into a cocked hat. We argued that our time had approached, since we could expect material aid from the Lower Canadians, and we began our final preparations. Good men in all the New England States were communicated with. They promised that on two hours' notice they could muster common large numbers of men. The old Fenian organization, though practically broken up, could give efficient aid with men and arms. It was finally arranged that the hour of attack should be at midnight 2000 men would be on their way by rail and by water, to Quebec. They would arrive within a few hours after the attack and reach us under cover of our guns. With their aid we could withstand any force against us. This much gained we would establish a direct line of communication with the United States and, making Quebec the base of our operations, overrun the Dominion. Undoubtedly we could enlist the Fenians on our side by giving them a free country would be certain. We felt that what would be well could we for that success would kindle the wildest enthusiasm in every Irish heart, and thousands of hands would be extended to us. Five days before we were ready to put our plans in operation one of the men who had already despatched to Quebec informed me in cypher that two companies of artillery had been ordered to Quebec; that the citadel guards had been strengthened and kept closely to duty, and that but two persons were allowed to collect within the walls at one time. I notified my co-conspirators immediately. Why should these instructions be taken at that moment? We resolved ourselves. The fever of excitement in the province of Quebec had passed away, and there were no symptoms of a French Canadian outbreak. We were unable to solve the puzzle, but made up our mind that our plans had gone wrong. On the following day we learned from Buffalo that a man in that city, who had promised his aid and had been informed of our plans, had been summoned to Sir John A. Macdonald's residence in Montreal. I immediately notified my friends that the plot had occurred, and our excursion was called off. Since then the Buffalo man has returned to Canada.

"Sir John's sudden trip to England at that time was, I have reason to believe, to confer with the heme authorities in the scheme which we had prepared."

Hudson Bay Railway.

Mr Hugh Sutherland is in Winnipeg conferring with the contractors for the proposed Hudson Bay road. On being interviewed he said:—"I hope to be able to announce very shortly that all arrangements are complete for the building of the road, and I believe that in less than two years a train will run from Winnipeg to Hudson Bay. I do not wish it, however, to be understood that all difficulties have been overcome, although I do say that the prospect looks most promising. It is proposed to raise $15,000,000, for that the syndicate will take." He also said that the Hudson Bay Company's officer with the party was of the opinion that navigation would open from April or May till November.

, whose heart had palpitated pain- sight of the savage beasts, drew her more freely when they were gone, hour seemed to crowd fast upon the another, for as they presently pene- ed into a second and narrower passage a loud rushing noise greeted their ears, like a flapping of ghostly wings, so that Pat began to patter a Pater Noster, making sure that the Afrits, or Giant Devils, were upon them, while Nellie uttered a little scream, and even Frank became utterly disconcerted.

Had he noticed the sly and exultant expression of the scorpion eater he might have been better prepared for what was to come and how to avoid its consequences, for, lo, the uncanny noises rapidly increased in volume, the semi-darkness became all at once full of fluttering wings, hideous little horned heads, and shrill squeaks, and then all in an instant the torch was extinguished and the three fugitives felt themselves beat about their faces by quickly flapping, skinny leather substances, whilst an intolerable stench assailed their nostrils, so that it is little wonder that in the sudden darkness, terror and confusion Frank's hand for an instant relaxed the tightness of its grip on the santon's beard or that he, taking advantage of the opportunity, with a wrench and a bound released himself altogether therefrom, and laughing shrilly and exultantly, rushed away with the certainty that he would not again be caught.

In another minute they could hear him shouting in the distance:

"Yallah! Yallah! By the ninety-nine names of Allah and the hundred and fourteen chapters of the El Koran. By the fig and the olive and the soul of Khaled the blessed, you shall all die in the bowels of the mountains without ever seeing the daylight or the moonshine now. Yea, you shall so die and my lynx and jackal shall pick your bones, whilst your souls shall fizzle and fry forever and forever in the fiery pit of Borhut. You have cast dirt upon my beard and set my turban awry, you dogs, for is it not written that "he who lendeth succor to the oppressor or the unbeliever shall ere long strike his knees in vain?" Wherefore, by every hair of the dogs that begot thee, Abou Seif the santon will take bitter vengeance for the indignities that ye have cast upon him."

And having thus spat out his venom, as it were, they could hear his rapidly receding footsteps, mingled with fresh peals of chuckling laughter.

"I wish I'd spitted the old baste on me spear, which sure an' I'd have done if it hadn't been for the winged devils, an' the darkness, an' the not thinking ov it until too late, at all at all," grunted Pat Monaghan.

"Just pass the spear over to me, Pat, to feel the way well in advance with, for I judge 'tis safer now to go on than to turn back, for that old rascal has gone to bring the Bedouins after us, and knowing all the ins and outs of this place we'd have no chance of overtaking him, even on horseback," said Frank Donelly.

"Lord presarve us from him and the likes of him," muttered Pat, as he passed the lance over Nellie's head, whom, as he took it, Frank comforted with the words:

"I feel sure that this passage will eventually lead to freedom, my darling, and the creatures that put out the lights and startled us so much were but bats. I saw them distinctly. Now that the accustomed darkness that they delight in has returned again they trouble us no longer, you see, so let us get on once more."

He waited for no reply, but urged on his horse as he spoke, feeling the way with the long lance so that the animal should not knock its head against anything or plunge headlong down into some hole or pit.

It was, in fact, that kind of darkness that writers say "may be felt," or "may be cut with a knife," and so on, so that it was anything but pleasant traveling when it was impossible to know what possible dangers might not be in the way.

More than once Nellie Trezarr felt convinced that she heard the pattering feet of the jackal and of the still more fearful lynx coming after them, whilst Pat Monaghan's fears were still chiefly of the supernatural, so that every instant he expected that Djin or giant devil would spring upon him and bear him away, where or for what purpose he did not even dare to conjecture.

But imagination was soon destined to give way to reality, for when they had proceeded in this slow and cautious manner for about ten minutes, the path appearing to trend gradually downward the while, they heard the unmistakable sound of other hoofs in their rear and coming on at a much faster pace than their own.

Then, far behind them, there suddenly flashed a glow of ruddy light, and looking round they beheld the hideous scorpion eater coming down the subterranean at a speed that was wonderful for his years, holding aloft a torch in either hand and closely followed by a dozen or so of mounted Bedouins, whose bright lance points twinkled like stars above their scarlet shawl turbans.

"Lost, lost! We shall be sat upon and slain in this horrible subterranean," gasped Nellie, dropping her reins and clasping her hands together in an agony of terror.

"Bedad, but any how I'll kill some of them first, just for company, retorted Pat Monaghan cheerily, who looked upon the Bedouins (even with the scorpion eater thrown in) as a great improvement on Djins and giant devils.

Frank Donelly, however, had better words of consolation than Pat's, for he suddenly exclaimed:

"If there's a red light behind there's a white one ahead, Nellie, darling, and unless I'm greatly mistaken we will be out in the moonlight again before those fellows can come up with us."

CHAPTER XXX.

A COMBAT OF TWO TO TWELVE—AGAIN ON THE DESERT.

Frank Donelly's words proved prophetic ones, for every minute now the light became brighter in their front, enabling them to push forward every whit as rapidly as they were pursued, so that presently they squeezed their horses one by one through a narrow fissure that was hardly large enough to admit of their passage; indeed, Pat went so far as to declare that it was very like a "rich man struggling to get through the eye of a needle," he should think.

"An sure, yer Honor," he quickly added, "I don't see why we should let the spalpeens as are afther us come any further at all at all, for sure we might defend this narrow opening agin long odds from now till the crack of doom, if need be, like those old Greeks and Romans used to do we read of in the poethry and the story books."

"Another fine idea of yours, Pat; and by St. Patrick, your namesake, we'll put it in practice. Is your revolver charged in every chamber?"

"Aye, I've reloaded it since I settled the camels and the drumbledollies."

"Good; mine is in the same condition. We will dismount, sling our bridle over our arms, and take up our positions one on each side of the opening, sheltered by the rocks, and, by George we'll give those rascals pepper as they come up. Nellie, ride on a little way, my dear. We will overtake you presently."

"Oh, Frank! don't rush into any needless danger," pleaded the fair girl.

"No, darling; that we will leave our enemies to do. They come on unasked, and so they must take the consequences. Do as I ask you, Nellie."

She made no further opposition or observation, but rode on a little way and then drew rein.

Frank Donelly motioned to her, however, to move a trifle more to the right, fearing that she was somewhat in the Bedouin line of fire.

When she had obeyed his mute sign he gave all his attention to the latter gentry.

They were by this time near enough to require it, pounding along through the subterranean at the heels of the onward rushing santon under the full impression, no doubt, that instead of awaiting them just outside, the fugitives were hurrying down the mountain as fast as ever they could urge their horses.

They were soon undeceived on this point, however, for at the same instant "crack! crack! crack! crack! crack! crack!" went Captain Donelly's and Pat Monaghan's revolvers, the rapid reports going rumbling and roaring into the innermost recesses of the vast subterraneans and awakening a score and more of echoes, which were quickly succeeded by those of the shrieks, howls, groans and execrations of the wounded and the dying as they fell clattering from their high demi-pique saddles to the resounding floor of the passage, whilst those who survived spurred forward over their writhing bodies with shriller cries still, intent on taking vengeance on the slaughterers of their brethren before they could reload.

But Captain Donelly and Pat Monaghan had six charges yet remaining in their revolvers, and now, stepping suddenly forward into view, they discharged them full in the faces and breasts of their swarthy foes, when so near that their tossing and straining horses' heads were almost within arm's length of their muzzles.

Each bullet found its billet on this occasion, and down went the shrieking Bedouins, one over the other, and amongst them the santon, with a hole in his throat, out through which the blood gushed like a fountain.

As he went crashing down his weight burst open the basket at his back, and the great flesh-colored serpents, gliding forth, sprang upon the fallen men, and the plunging, rearing horses, hissing fiercely and burying their poison fangs in their prey.

As for the Bedouins who still remained mounted and apparently uninjured, and in number they were but three, they who led their horses round and galloped back into the darkness of the tomb, whilst giving utterance to loud cries of horror and dismay.

Ere they had disappeared altogether from view Captain Donelly and Pat were in their saddles and riding calmly forward to rejoin Nellie.

"Thanks to Pat's suggestion, we have got wholly rid of the rascals, for the three who still survive will let us depart in peace, I imagine," said Frank, and then he added, as a puzzled expression came over his fine countenance: "I wish that we knew how to recross the mountain, for we are now on the side of the great desert, which stretches for hundreds of leagues toward the very centre of Africa."

"No, Frank, it cannot be," replied Nellie, "for I feel certain that that is Cairo which I see over away yonder. And there, there are the Pyramids, too, and I feel equally sure that I can just make out a train steaming in that direction, the direction of the North Star, which must be Alexandriaward, I take it."

"By all that's glorious, you are right, Nellie. Why, we must have come out on the same side of the mountain as that at which we entered. We have described the half of a half, or more likely of an oval, within the subterranean. I dared not have hoped for such good fortune. It saves no end of time."

"Be the saints, yer honor, an' it's a good down that we are into the bargain. It's just meself that knows this blessed plum tree, be the bit branch that I tore off in plucking some of the fruit, an' there it lies in the middle of the track to witness to the truth ov me words," observed Pat.

All was as clear now as the sun at noonday, and all that they seemingly had to do was to re-cross the desert till they struck the railway at the little village of Et-Tarranch, where there was a station at which they would be able to take train for Alexandria, for the train, which they could still perceive, or to be more correct, the steam from her engine, was proof that the line between the capital and the great seaport had not yet been ripped up.

"After all, we may be aboard a British ship before dawn, darling," said Donelly, "for I dare say they'll be running trains from Cairo as often as circumstances will allow during the night, so cheer up."

Nellie was quite willing to do so, for 'tis much pleasanter to encourage hope than despair in the heart. As for Pat, he didn't require any encouragement at all, as it was not his nature to look at the dark side of anything.

So they made they made their way down the steep mountain side with ease and circumspection, and directly that they had reached the desert plain steered straight across it as nearly as possible in the direction of Et Tarranch.

If Captain Donelly really thought that all their dangers were over he calculated sadly without his host, for at least eighteen miles of desert lay between them and the railway station, towards which they were steering, and from all directions troops, regular and irregular, were concentrating towards the capital to swell the forces of the War Minister.

The fugitives proceeded slowly at first, for their horses wanted breathing space, but the once more fresh bracing air of the desert was not long in at all events partially restoring their strength and spirits when they progressed more rapidly, and then it was that Captain Donelly very shortly discovered that the desert in this direction was for the once not the desert at all.

For across it small bands of Bedouins seemed to be perpetually streaming, doubtless on their way to make up the sixty thousand irregular cavalry that Arabi Pasha had boasted he could have enrolled underneath his banner in less than a week, for well he knew that these mounted robbers would swarm like vultures to a feast, for quite as respectable as Turkish Bashi-Bazouks the Bedouin delights in slaughter and plunder quite as much as, according to Dr. Watts, dogs delight to bark and bite.

"Oh, if the moon were not quite so bright," thought the young officer to himself, for the grand luminary of night shed as clear and white a radiance over the sandy plain as a number of electric lights would diffuse over a boulevard or a street, and there were no shadows to take advantage of.

When Frank Donnelly had read of this desert ruse years previously he had never imagined that the time would come when he would be glad to avail himself of it himself.

It was quite effectual, however, for within the next hour they would certainly have been sighted and pursued had they been rash enough to have continued on their way; whilst owing to their precaution large parties of Bedouins passed quite near by without perceiving them.

Then, at last, the danger of discovery seemed to grow less and less, and their part of the desert to be getting empty again, so that they thought of once more remounting and continuing their journey, when, on suddenly looking round, Pat Monaghan beheld yet another party of Bedouins coming towards them, but following a course which betokened that they would pass much nearer by than any of the preceding bodies of the savage horsemen had done.

"Bedad, an' it's as straight as a bade line that the varmints are coming and if we would save our lives we'd better be up and away, yer honor."

"By Jove, I believe you're right, Pat. Up and away be it, then," rejoined his master, and the next instant he was undoing his horses leadings.

When they had seen to their own steeds and turned to perform the same office by Nellie's, lo, the deft and spirited girl had not only released the animal and got him on his legs, but had also mounted him and was quite ready for flight.

Before long, indeed, Donelly felt that they were like three poor fawns trying to cross a chessboard, with the rival knights, bishops, rooks and queen all bent on rendering the attempt a matter of sheer impossibility.

As yet they were evidently unseen, but as he could hardly hope that they would continue so for long he was presently fain to yield to the inevitable and adopt a ruse.

He called a halt, told Nellie that there was nothing much to be alarmed at, but that nevertheless it was better to be cautious, and then held a brief consulation with Pat Monaghan, the result of which was that all three dismounted, forced their horses to lie down, gagged them so that they could neither neigh nor whinny, tied their legs so that for them to rise was an equal impossibility, and then in the course of a very few minutes raised a circular barrier of sand high enough to conceal both their steeds and themselves as they crouched down.

Her prompt action had saved a couple of minutes at the least, and that brief space of time might be of the utmost value under the circumstances.

Frank gave her a word or two of ardent praise and flung himself into his own saddle even whilst speaking them, nor was Pat slow in imitating his example, and just as they were perceived and the Moslem war cry of "Allah ackbar! Allah, Allah! hu!" rent the air in their rear, accompanied by a great brandishing of scimitars and lances, the three fugitives were off at full speed again, Pat muttering something to the effect that "the devil might take the hindmost," yet for all that himself keeping in the rear, as he considered himself in duty bound to do, and answering the Bedouin defiance by twirling his own lance round and round above his head as though it were a shillelah, whilst he howled out a genuine Irish hullabaloo.

"Keep your breath to cool your porridge, Pat," exclaimed his master, somewhat annoyed. "This is no child's play, I would have you remember, so just postpone all vapering until we are tearing along at the tail of the iron horse instead of on the backs of our own, my good fellow."

The weak sinews become strong by their conflict with difficulties. Hope is born in the long night of watching and tears.—[Dr. Chapin.

A new thought may be false; if it is it will pass away. When the new truth has come to life it bursts the old husks.—[E. Heber Newton.

The best advertisement of a workshop is first class work. The strongest attraction to Christianity is a well-made Christian character.—[T. L. Cuyler.

The golden harvest lies in the future, not the past. The true Eden is to come. Out of seemingly chaotic elements God is evolving His Kingdom of righteousness and joy and peace.—[Lyman Abbott.

Even in this world martyrs shall have their judgment day, and their names which went down in the dust like a gallant banner trodden in the mire shall rise again all glorious in the sight of nations.—[Mrs. H. B. Stowe.

Christ speaks as the high priest of the Divine nature, speaking as one who has come out from God and has nothing to borrow from the world. The incense of the upper world is brought as perfume on His garments.—[Horace Bushnell.

It is the habitual thought that frames itself into our life. It affects us even more than our intimate social relations do. Our confidential friends have not as much to do in shaping our lives as the thoughts have which we harbor.—[J. W. Teal.

Filial affection is the corner-stone of good morals and the most essential element of order and discipline in the State. Even in the republics of antiquity the rulers were styled fathers. The very name "father" is itself a law of justice and imposes the highest obligations.—[Bishop Ryan.

They must needs move slowly who would move surely and successfully up the hill of knowledge. Haste does only harm; things must have their natural course, and they who cannot wait should cease all expectation and hope, and betake themselves to some other pursuit.

THE WORLD OVER

A farmer in New Hampshire has been fined for cruelty in not providing shelter for his cattle during the late cold weather. He was the richest man in the neighborhood.

Nearly 80,000 acres of lands under water along the Connecticut shore have been sold by the State to oyster growers, and last year's taxes on this area (one-fifth of which is in use) yielded $8,000.

A milkman slipped and fell in New London the other day in such a way that he went head foremost into a can from which he had removed the cover, and, as it was a tight fit, a tinsmith's services were required to extricate him.

Few monarchs can boast of progeny so illustrious as King Christian IX. of Denmark. Five out of his six children are married and have families. The eldest sons of each of these families are the prospective monarchs of Denmark, Greece, the British empire, Russia, and Hanover.

Autograph hunters are said to deluge Mr. Harris of the Atlanta Constitution with requests for his signature. A friend of his says he always drops such letters in the waste basket, but that when he goes to dinner the elevator boy amuses himself by filling out the blank cards and placing them in the return envelopes addressed "Joel Chandler Harris, Atlanta, Ga."

Two men called up the telegraph operator at East Weymouth, Mass., recently, and got him to go to the depot at midnight in order to send a telegram. As he entered the station the men drew revolvers and demanded the money in the safe, knowing it temporarily contained a large amount. Quick as a flash the operator whipped out a pistol and "got the drop upon the would be robbers, who fled in terror.

The purified fat of sheep's wool, which has been introduced into the drug market under the name of lanolin, is said to possess remarkable susceptibility to absorption by the skin. When one thousand parts of it are mixed with one part of a soluble metallic substance and applied to the scalp, a metallic taste is noticed in the mouth within a few minutes. It is thought the substance will be of great value for ointments.

According to the British Medical Journal the most flagrant dietetic errors on the part of poor people arise from ignorance of the nutritive value of foods. When they cannot buy meats, whose importance they recognize, they do not put proper articles in the place of it. They do not correctly estimate the high value of milk and eggs; and when obliged to use a largely vegetable diet they make no distinction between unnutritious vegetables and those which, like peas and beans, are rich in nitrogen and well calculated to supply the place of animal food.

Nearly three years have elapsed since Gambetta's remains were consigned to the grave at Nice, but nothing has yet been done to give even a decent appearance to his last resting place. An old friend of the departed statesman, who visited the cemetery on the anniversary of his death in order to strew flowers on his tomb, gives a melancholy account of the state of neglect into which it has been allowed to fall. He says it is only a temporary scaffolding, a pyramid of wood covered with wreaths and offerings. The barrier which surrounds it is half rotten. The great tribune, apparently, is forgotten already.

A member of the Geological Survey says that Salt Lake will be of great value in the near future, not only on account of the common salt it will produce, but also for the sodium sulphate it contains. The latter is separated in a flocculent precipitate by the cold weather of wid winter, and annually thrown up on the shore in enormous quantities. There are many other lakes in the far West whence an inexhaustible supply of commercial alkalies may be obtained at small cost. Mono Lake, Cal., alone being estimated to hold over 78,000,000 tons of sodium carbonate.

The peasant Indians of Central America hold some curious superstitions, of which the following are examples: When a child is ill the mother takes a drake, singes its tail feathers, and, muttering certain words, passes it over the patient. A woman feeds a parrot with a few pieces of tortilla and gives the child the crumbs which fall from the beak, as they will make it talk! Colic is due to the evil eye; in order to get rid of the disturbing influence the woman breaks four duck's eggs into a basin, and, having mixed them with rue, places the whole under the child's bed; if the compound be curdled in the morning the spirit has departed.

"Do Nots" for the Driver.

Lord Hampden, who presided at a recent dinner of the London Cab-Drivers' Benevolent Association, commended to the members the following lines relating to the proper care of the horse, which, he said, he had hung up in his own stables:

Up hill—whip me not.
Down hill—hurry me not.
On level road—spare me not.
Loose in stable—forget me not.
Of hay and corn—rob me not.
Of clean water—stint me not.
With sponge and brush—neglect me not.
Of soft, dry bed—deprive me not.
Tired or hot—leave me not.
Sick or cold—chill me not.
With bit and reins—oh, jerk me not.
When you are angry—strike me not.

King Kennedy's entertainment was very poorly attended in this place; it was, however, the best exhibition of its class we have seen in this place. King Kenedy is the best Ventriloquist we ever heard. The show was respectable, entertaining and very amusing.

Mrs. E. Purvis, whose husband died recently, wishes to sell her house and lot. This is one of the most comfortable houses in the village, with two acres of ground, in excellent tilth, and with a great variety of fine fruits just coming into bearing. See adv. for particulars, or apply on the premises.

Archy and Wes. Lyons of Sunderland, Mrs. Chellew of Collingwood, Mrs. Trelford of Allenford, Miss Vic. Lyons of Toronto, and Jenny and Millie Lyons of Tara, were home last week on the occasion of their brother's severe illness. We are glad to say that Will. is on the mend, and good hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

Tea-Meeting.—The annual tea-meeting at Blair's church, 6th line Glenelg, came off on Friday evening last, and was quite successful notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. Mr. Thos. Edwards filled the chair in his usual genial and affable manner. The speeches and program throughout was well rendered and everything passed off in a satisfactory and enjoyable manner.

Leicester Sheep.—W. & J. Anderson, of Orange Valley, Artemesia, have just brought home four fine thoroughbred Leicester Ewes from a breeder in Bruce Co. The profits from sheep have been small during the past few years, but the prospects are brightening, and besides, it pays to keep good stock any time in preference to scrubs. We trust our enterprising neighbors will have success in their commendable stock improvements.

One reason why the quality of our butter is so poor is that milk and cream are seldom kept at the proper temperature during the hot summer season. This can only be done with the use of ice, and there are comparatively but few farms in the county where ice is stored for the purpose. Yet it is not a costly article; it can generally be had for the hauling, and an ice-house good enough for the purpose may be built by any handy man at the cost of the material and his own labour. This is a good month for laying up a stock of ice.—[Rural Canadian.

Parents Attention.—Mr. James will give a free Model Lesson in Singing to all children who attend next Saturday 20th inst. Class will meet in Prin. Porter's room, Public School at 2 o'clock sharp—The lesson will continue till 3 o'clock—and hence will not interfere with skating. The Public invited. Parents, Pub. School Teachers and Mus. Teachers are most cordually invited to attend. Fee for term (13 lessons) 50c. per pupil.

A Strange Contribution.—A lady, who attended the afternoon service at the Presbyterian church, Primrose, on Sunday last went quietly home, forgetting that she had left one of her children in the church. It appears that a minister in connection with the Presbyterian body, was around a few days ago in that vicinity, soliciting contributions in aid of Knox College. It was suggested by one person that probably the lady left the child as a contribution to that industry.—[Shelburne Free Press.

We are constantly adding new material to our plant, and are prepared to execute fine work as well as the City offices, and trust our business men will give us a chance before sending their orders outside. We could procure from Toronto or elsewhere our clothing, groceries, &c., and encourage others to do likewise and have just as much right to do so as our business men have to send for their letter heads, &c., but any one with an ounce of spunk about them would not do such a thing. Support home always, and especially when you can do as well.

Fluid Lightning is simply a marvellous Rheumatic Remedy. I was for two months a cripple, unable to get out of the house from Sciatica. One bottle gave me instant relief, and placed me on my feet again. I have driven fourteen miles to-day (something I could not possibly have done were it not for Fluid Lightning) for the express purpose of procuring another bottle. So says Wm. Dixon, Gamamoque. Only 25 cents per bottle at Hill Bro's. 6

New England.—The Providence and New England appointments of the Euphrasia Methodist Mission united and held their annual tea-meeting on Wednesday evening, the 10th inst. The evening was fine, the roads good, and the church was literally packed. The provisions were in abundance and of the best quality. The Rev. Thos. Grandy was called to preside. The addresses of the Revs. J. T. McClane (Presbyterian), J. E. Howell, M. A., and T. L. Wilkinson, instructed and delighted the large audience. The singing, by the choir, under the leadership of Mr. Fred Burch, added much to the interest and enjoyment of the evening. Proceeds $34.00

I had for years been a miserable sufferer from Dyspepsia, and tried all known remedies and the best medical skill of my acquaintance, but still grew worse, until unable to eat any thing without great suffering, or do any kind of work. I began to think there was no hope for me, and that I must surely die; when, like a drowning man catching at a straw, I determined to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial, I at once began to Improve so rapidly that in two months I was as well as I had ever been in my life.—Wm. Evers Leamington. Sold by Hill Bro's. Free trial bottles. 6

A paper was read at the Renfrew Farmers' Institute by Mr. John Parks on kitchen gardening, which touched on some points worthy of every farmer's consideration. The variety which a garden may give to a bill of fare is calculated to suit all tastes, and variety in food is not only pleasant but healthy. Farmers, above all men, Mr. Parks observed, have the privilege of enjoying the luxuries of the table; but they ignore them more than any other class of people, and their food is confined to a narrow list of eatables of which it is no wonder the palate grows weary. A well-planted and well-tilled garden should be considered as indispensable on every farm.—[Rural Canadian.

Years of experience and successful trial have proved McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate the most complete and satisfactory compound for healing Old Sores, Festerings, Ulcers, Cuts, Wounds, Burns, Frost Bites or Felons, and for keeping out the cold and to cleanse or prevent proud flesh, sloughing or decay. Insist on having McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate, sold at 25c. by Hill Bro's. 6

Prof. Brown, of the Agricultural College, has been lecturing the farmers this winter on the subject of permanent pastures. Unfortunately, this is a matter to which little attention has hitherto been called in this country, yet its importance is obvious to all who reflect on the nature of grasses, and the economy they serve in the grazing of farm stock. It is simply not possible to get good pasture on land that is broken up every three or four years, and the man who depends on the aftermath of a meadow to furnish food for his cows or sleep does not know the risk he runs of providing them that escape from absolute starvation. An aftermath may be good enough pasture, but everything depends on the kind of soil and the state of the weather. A permanent pasture, however, is reliable in almost every season, for if the soil is suitable, if it is seeded with a good variety of grasses, if the droppings of animals are spread as they should be, and if a dressing of fertilizers is applied now and then, a rich supply of nutritious herbage may be depended on with reasonable certainty. Prof. Brown says that for a farm of ordinary size a field of five acres is large enough for permanent pasture, and, if proper care is taken with it, we are disposed to agree with him. Certainly there is nothing better for feeding purposes, unless it is the soiling system, and for the dairy we have a strong preference for some exercise and an unlimited supply of fresh air for cows.—[Rural Canadian for February.

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment at McConnel's hotel, Rocklyn, on Feb. 1st, 1886.

Members all present; minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

By-law No. 361, establishing a local board of health, was carried through the different stages and passed.

By-law No. 362, appointing Dr. McBride, of Heathcote, a medical health officer, was carried through the different stages and passed.

The Clerk was ordered to get posters printed and posted up, asking for tenders for the erection of a Township Hall, and to advertise the same in the Meaford Mirror, Thornbury Standard and Markdale Standard.

The communication of Noble Clark relative to the widening of side-road 27 & 28, was laid over until the next regular meeting of council, the Clerk to notify all parties concerned to appear at said meeting of council.

The Reeve and Clerk were appointed to draft a by-law for the prevension of breaking the peace by gambling and other disorderly conduct in this municipality.

The Town Hall to be built on the agricultural ground, $50.00 to be paid for site of hall.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit to J. Rutherford, printer, Owen Sound, $8.66, being amount of his account up to date.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz: Wm. McCutcheon, $5.60, work on 3 & 4 side-line; R. Dunlop, Clerk, $8.60 registering births, marriages and deaths for the year 1885; David Yeomans, $12.00, payment for plan and specifications of Township Hall; Samuel Walker, $8.50, work on 3 & 4 side-line, con. 9; John Ross, $2.00, removing stone from 7th line.

Council adjourned until Saturday, the 13th Feb. inst., then to meet at Dodson's Hotel, Rocklyn, and receive tenders for the erection of a Township Hall.

Robert Dunlop.

JOYFUL NEWS.

It is certainly glad tidings to the poor invalid to be informed of a remedy that will give prompt and sure relief in case of painful suffering. Such a remedy is Hagyard's Yellow Oil, adapted for internal and external use in all ordinary aches, pains, lameness and soreness. It cures rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, croup and all inflammatory pains.

HEALTH.

The Hygienic Treatment of Pulmonary Consumption.

Dr. B. W. Richardson has revived, in his "Asclepaid," certain rules for the hygienic treatment of consumption, which he enunciated as far back as 1856. At that time they found very little favor, being regarded as the ideas of a dreamer—that the fatal disease could be prevented generally, and treated specially by hygienic measures. To-day, under a revival of the old animalcular speculations as to the origin of some diseases from living forms,—the entity doctrine in a new dress,—the conception of the hygienic treatment of pulmonary consumption has been accepted in name as well as practice, as if it were new in word and deed, the height of practical learning and skill. So ideas change, and the disfavored of one generation is the favored of another. But it matters not how or by whom it is borne, so long as the torchlight of truth makes its way.

1. A supply of pure air for respiration is the first indication in the treatment of the consumptive patient.

2. Active exercise is an essential element in the treatment of consumptives.

3. A uniform climate is an important element in the treatment of consumptives.

4. The dress of the consumptive patient should be adapted to equalize the temperature of the body, and so loose that it interferes in no way with the animal functions.

5. The hours of rest of the consumptive patient should be regulated mainly by the absence of the sun.

6. The occupation of the consumptive patient should be suspended if it is indoor or sedentary, but a certain amount of outdoor exercise may be advantageous.

7. Excessive mental exertion should be avoided by the consumptive.

8 Cleanliness of body is a special point in the treatment of consumptives.

9 Abstinence from all habits of gross sensual indulgence is an essential part, both in the prevention and the cure of consumptives.

10 The diet of consumptive patients should be ample, and should contain a larger proportion of the respiratory constituents of food than is required in health.

Whenever distinct evidences of phthisis have set in in an individual of either sex, the marriage of such a person is wrong; while the marriage of two persons, both victims of the disease, is opposed to reason and humanity.

Causes of Erysipelas

The causes which are usually said to produce erysipelas are both numerous and diverse. Certain individuals, and even certain families, appear to be more liable to suffer from the disease than others. What is the cause of this special susceptibility it is impossible even to conjecture. Erysipelas is common in newly-born children, but from the first to the twentieth year it is by no means common; after this period to the fortieth year it is frequent as an acute disease; but in more advanced age it occurs chiefly as a chronic and less important malady. Gouty people have been found to suffer from it more frequently than others. Errors in diet, and especially eating certain indigestible substances, such as shell-fish and improperly smoked, salted, or preserved meats, are said to act as exciting causes. Violent mental emotions are also accused of being occasionally the cause, and it is said to have been brought on by anger and fear. Sometimes no cause can be assigned for its onset, but its occurrence is promoted by all circumstances that tend to debilitate the body—by intemperance, by previous disease, by low spirits and anxiety, by insufficient nourishment, and by foul air. Formerly, when less attention was paid to cleanliness and ventilation, it was much more common in hospitals and infirmaries than at present. Injuries to the skin, such as abrasions, scratches, wounds, burns, or blisters, wherever they are situated, may be the starting point of the inflammation. Sometimes even the presence of gout in a particular joint, or the irritation caused by diseased teeth in either the upper or lower jaw, may determine the seat of onset. It is probable that the most common cause of an attack of erysipelas is its communication from one person to another. In erysipelas the constitutional symptoms may precede the local, or redness of the skin may make its appearance before the fever commences. The former course is the more common.

Exercise Necessary for Aged Persons.

M. Bouchardat, Professor of Hygiene at the Paris Faculty of Medicine, protested in strong to terms at a recent lecture against the advice given by some hygienists who recommend almost complete rest to the aged, in the following terms: "I protest against the oft-repeated adage that old age is the age of rest. This sentence has led to a very great error in hygiene. The regular general exercise of all the organs of nutrition and of locomotion is necessary to persons of all ages. The gratest attention on this point is all the more necessary that the tendency to rest brings on a gradual diminution of the strength. If the old man does not resist, his strength will visibly and progressively diminish, and the few days he may have to live may be transformed into just so many hours. In proof that regular daily exercise is beneficial to the aged one has only to observe the results in some of the handsomest old men, who take little or no rest. Moderate exercise, particularly walking, should be the leading precept of the hygiene of the aged, without which longevity is well nigh impossible." Professor Bouchardat also recommends that old people should maintain their intellectual faculties, or otherwise they will get into a state of incurable torpor. This is best accomplished by having some steady intellectual pursuit, and by taking an active interest in the events and progress of the day. In our boyhood we remember a very old man, who told us he kept in as perfect health as an old man can be by chopping wood for an hour or two every day. This he regarded as sufficient exercise for him. Another old man we know finds his health very greatly benefited by sawing wood with the ordinary buck saw.—Herald of Health.

AN ARCTIC ADVENTURE.

BY FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

We had been toiling up a frozen river for three or four days, trying to reach its head and determine if we could get through the mountains said to be there by the Esquimau musk-ox hunters, for on finding a pass through them that would be available for dogs and heavily laden sledges depended whether we could make a "bee line" to the Arctic Ocean from Hudson's Bay next spring, or whether we would have to make a great detour to avoid them.

By "we" I mean besides myself my Esquimau dog driver Tooloosh and his wife and baby boy, for the Esquimaux always take their families with them on a journey, the women being as necessary to sew and repair the foot-gear, worn out each day, and cook the meals morning and night, as the men are to build the snow-houses and kill the reindeer which the women cook.

It was in the depth of an arctic winter, the early days in January, in fact, and the spirit thermometer was curling up in the bulb trying to keep warm, dragging in its toes under the scale till they marked 50 and 60 degrees below zero. Nearly all the reindeer had migrated farther south, so cold was it, the birds had long since flown, and all we saw was an occasional gaunt arctic wolf flitting over the barren hills covered with snow, or a polar hare go running to his snow-house over a pile of rocks.

When Tooloosh dug the ice-well to get fresh water as we camped, I noted that the ice was six and seven feet thick, for I had to allow that much more on the length of my fish line when I dropped it through the ice-well to fish for the salmon that there abound Of such thick ice of course no one could fear; for it appears that it needs but an inch and a half to support a man, four inches to support horsemen, five inches to support a field cannon, ten inches to support a multitude as thick as they can stand, and eighteen inches to support a railroad train; six and seven feet, therefore, should support a mountain. The river we were ascending seemed to be a series of long lakes, two or three miles long, joined by shallow connecting streams seldom over a hundred yards in length, and only a few yards width, and through the ice the large stones often protruded indicating their depth. I noticed in walking over the ice of these parts of the river that they gave forth a reverberating sound, as if they were hollow, but I paid little attention to that, thinking they were safe enough. It was in the middle of the afternoon when we were crossing one of these places, Tooloosh and the sledge being a short way ahead of me, when I heard a shivering crash in that direction, as if the whole glass front of a store had been battered in at one blow. The sledge had broken one runner through the thin ice on the rocky portage. I rushed toward the place, but before I was half-way, as if a glass trap door had given away underneath, with a jangling of broken ice, one leg went through it, but my foot struck on a stone underneath, and from here I scrambled back, and Tooloosh motioned me to the shore, which I sought by the most direct route. The dogs were taken off the sledge and a long, strong walrus line extended from the protruding runner to the shore, where the dogs were again hitched, and by carefully unloading part we soon had it out. It was not until after we were safe on the next lake that I learned from Tooloosh how narrow an escape we had had.

When the first severe cold snap of the winter comes, and the lakes and rivers are frozen over, many small springs and water-sources are obliterated, and the rivers and streams fall considerably as a consequence. Over the wide parts of the rivers the ice falls with the water, but in these shallow parts the protruding stones, acting like pillars, hold it up, and there is a thick stratum of air between thin ice and roaring river beneath, thick enough to prevent the latter from again freezing. Thus, while we may have six and seven feet of ice on the river lakes there may not be one third as many inches on these rocky parts, and buoyed up in a most trap-like manner to engulf one in a place where nine cases out of ten the unfortunate would not escape. I can see that black rushing torrent sweeping through the great bewilders yet that was revealed as I pulled my leg out of the hole in the shell ice, my own foot striking a stone in a most miraculous manner. Tooloosh blamed himself for being so careless at a place where the Esquimaux are always so exceeding careful, for of the accidents known few have escaped. Ice a couple of inches thick may bear a man if resting on the water, but if buoyed above a roaring rapid like a watch crystal, it is a most dangerous trap.

SCIENCE NOTES.

There is exported from Africa every year 1 875,000 pounds of ivory, requiring the destruction of 65,000 elephants.

In Santa Clara county, California, there is a rat allied to the ground-nest making species, which climbs small trees and makes a compact nest of twigs among the branches, something after the manner of the gray squirrel.

The English Mechanic says the v-shaped chain rope is likely to become the driving rope of the future. It can be made to fit any shape of groove and works well over pulleys, while it can be put on or shortened in a few minutes and possesses four times the advantage of the round rope.

M. Bocion, of the Cantonal Industrial shoool of Lousanne, Switzerland, reports the discovery in Lake Leman of a bright green moss growing in the bottom of the lake on the calcarious rocks, two hundred feet below the surface. No other moss has been found at so great a depth under water, and how chlorophyl could have been so richly developed so far from the light is a problem.

There is in Australia, it is said, a plant which in its growth so much resembles a sheep that in the days of the early settlement the pioneers were often surprised by the apparation of flocks of sheep on the distant hills. The plant is of the order compositae and belongs to the genus Raoulia. It grows in a dense kidney-shaped mass about eight feet across and three feet high. The leafy branches are densely packed together and the whole mass of a snow-white color. The flowers are microscopic and hence there is never any variation in the appearance of the vegetable sheep at any season.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB

The following visitors from out of town were present at the current session and had seats on the President's platform. Snowball Johnson, the Hon. Poke White, Judge Bifbane, Colonel High, Prof. Sundown Green and Elder Jackson. All but the Elder chewed gum during the entire session, and each one seemed to thoroughly enjoy the situation.

REPORTS—AGRICULTURAL.

The Committee on Agriculture reported on the following inquiry from the office of the Attorney-General of Ohio: "Can we raise a vegetable to take the place of the pumpkin?" The committee had spent six weeks in making a patient investigation, and had come to the firm conclusion that there was no use trying to displace the pumpkin in the hearts of the American people. It landed here almost as soon as the Mayflower. It had seen a band of a few hundred people grow to a nation of 55,000,000. It had been attacked by bigotry, abused by fanatics and reviled by the aristocracy, but it had lived through everything and won and maintained a warm corner in the hearts of the American people. Inventive genius had sought a substitute for the pumpkin, but each and every attempt had proved a miserable failure. The pumpkin had cheerfully hitched along and made room for the squash, the turnip, the carrot and the parsnip, but it would give up no more ground. The committee recommended that the club encourage the growth of pumpkins by colored people throughout the United States and Canada by offering a cash prize.

The report was accepted and adopted, and the Secretary was authorized to offer $5 in cash to the colored man in this country raising the most pumpkins on half an acre of ground.

NOT A MEMBER.

The Secretary of the Hoop-Pole Branch Lodge, at Halifax, forwarded the following clipping from a Nova Scotia newspaper, and asked if the person named was a member of the Lime-Kiln Club:

"A living curiosity in the person of a colored man, has been giving private exhibitions for a consideration. He is an especial object of interest to the medical profession. He claims to have—and apparently has—two movable hearts, which he can move at will from his chest to his abdomen, and also a double set of ribs that he can slide down over his abdomen. He is a man of remarkable strength, as he can with ease bend a three quarter inch bar of iron over his left arm by two blows with his right. He has evidently been an interesting subject to professional men elsewhere, including those at the leading hospitals of the United States."

Brother Gardner replied that the man, whose name is Rhodes, made application about a year ago, but was rejected by the committee on the grounds that a living curiosity could not be expected to take any great interest in national affairs. While the club were discussing agriculture he would be working his two sets of ribs, and while foreign affairs were the special order of the evening his two hearts would be thumping for an engagement in a dime museum.

NO OCCASION FOR IT.

A communication from Academy Corners, Pa., announced the fact that Col. Q J. Murray of that place, had started on a lecturing tour to the West, and that he desired to become a member of the Lime-Kiln Club. He was impatient of delay, and asked that the rules be suspended in his case. In case of his being made a member right off he would take in Detroit on his circuit and deliver his lecture on "The Structure of the Mule" before the club for $13

"I doan' see no 'cashun fur any hurry in his case," answered the President. "I doan' eben see any need fur his startin' out on a tour. If he comes dis way we shall treat him wid courtesy, but we shan't ingage him to lectur' on de mule. I reckon de moas' of us know as much about de mule as we keer to. If he has changed any in de las' twenty y'ars, or am gwine to change any in der nex' twenty, we'll run our chances and save dat $13.

CAN'T DO IT.

A communication from Highstrung Nye, of Fulton, N. Y., announced that he was seeking the postmastership of Fulton, and wanted all the members of the Lime Kiln Club to sign his petition. He forwarded his photograph with his letter, and the picture shows him to be a stumpy man with a bald head and a sore eye.

Waydown Bebee moved that the club officially indorse the petition, but the President rapped him to order and said: "In de fust place, dis club doan meddle wid pollyticks. In de nex' place, spose we used our influcence to git dis pusson 'pointed, an' de werry fust thing he did was to steal all de stamps an' walk off? What would our feelings be, an' who of us could ever afterwards look de President of de United States in de face? You jist let dat Highstrung individual work his own way. If he doan' git in he will be no wus off; if he does git it he won't feel under no obligashuns to dis club."

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Whalebone Howker wanted to inquire how many petitions for the restoration of capital punisment in Michigan the club had indorsed. The Secretary hunted up the list which footed up to thirteen, and stated that two new ones had reached his desk that evening.

REMITTED.

The President then announced that he had remitted the fines of the following members:

Uncle William Cabiff, fined $8,000 for taking home one of the bear traps without permission.

Prof. Grecaroot Smith, fined $3,228 for encouraging a row between Elder Toots and Peaceful Jones.

Judge Cadaver, fined $2,600 for advising Samuel Shin not to pay his pew rent in a Baptist Church.

The individuals above named were all present, and the affair was a complete surprise to them. All were so overcome that they cried like children.

RESOLVED.

Sir Isaac Walpole then introduced a resolution to the effect that the Secretary correspond with the proper authorities in Washington and ascertain if there was a colored soldiers' home in this country; if so where was it? If not, why had this element of the war been overlooked and neglected for?

The resolution was adopted and the club then went into secret session on the forty-seventh degree and excluded all outsiders.

FOREIGN NOTES.

It is significant of the extent to which boycotting has been carried in Ireland that a midwife declined to attend the wife of a proscribed man.

Bull fighting for the expert must be very profitable. The chief espada of Madrid, Lartijo, is employed during the summer season for $60,000 and last winter in the provinces he made $10,000. He killed 345 bulls without a single accident to himself.

A high mass was celebrated on Christmas Eve in the chapel "Maria of the Black Lake," at the foot of the Matterhorn, fully 8,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is rarely that at this season of the year even the most intrepid chamois hunter ventures to ascend so high.

M. Gambetta deserved, at least, a gravestone; but France has not given him one, and his resting place is in a quite shameful state, unweeded, unfenced, and with the wooden covering rain-soaked and rooted. Why are the Parisian politicians and patriots so forgetful?

There is no diminution in musical product of Germany, 5,473 distinct pieces having been published in that country last years Among the new opera composers who have taken high rank is Robert Schwalm, who is said to have caught something of the spirit of Wagner.

"There is a good deal of religion in nature," solemnly remarked a young Aberdeen clergyman calling upon a lady of his congregation recently. "There is," was the quiet reply. "We should never forget that there is a sermon in every blade of grass." "Quite true. We should also remember that grass is out very short sometimes."

The Indian Medical Gazette describes the death from hydrophobia of a man who had never been bitten by a mad dog. His attending physician stated that the man, being a strict Brahmin, had never had anything to do with dogs, but the symptoms of his disease were identical with those of rabies. A similar case occurred in Paris some weeks ago.

The King of the Belgians has offered an annual prize of twenty-five thousand francs for the purpose of encouraging works of the mind, open to the competition of persons in all parts of the world. Although a comparatively small potentate this Belgian King seems to be doing much good in the way of advancing geographical and other science and the arts.

The Pope considers that England has not behaved well to him in the matter of establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican, and this being so, does not, there is reason to believe, now interfere with the friendly attitude assumed by the Roman Catholic prelates and clergy toward the Home Rulers—in short does not interfere at all either one way or the other.

Dr. Koch, the eminent microscopist, is described as a medium-sized, slender man, with an earnest, inquiring countenance and whitening, but not white, hair, which makes him appear older than his age, forty-one. He studied microscopy under Cohn, in Breslau, and earned his first professorship through his investigations into wound infection and splenic fever.

It has been much noted of late years to what a remarkable degree of prominence members of the Jewish race heretofore almost exclusively occupied in money getting and music, have attained in other lines of life in England so soon as these were opened to them. An instance in point is afforded in the new Professor of Poetry at Oxford, whose father was by birth a Hebrew, by name Cohen, but who changed his name to Palgreve.

A London correspondent of the San Francisco Argonaut writes that all other correspondents who speak of the Prince of Wales as "Tum-Tum," or "Tum," only shew their deplorable ignorance. "Now, as a matter of fact," he says, "the Prince is called "Tummy"—that is the pet name he goes by. The name is not a chance appellation, applied without either rhyme, reason, or meaning. It is a childish and playful reference to his Royal Highness's stomach, the rotundity of which is one of his most striking features."

The London Lancet thinks that the animosity with which men of opposite political views regard each other is out of all proportion to their individual interest in the questions on which they diff ; and that there are reasons for thinking that, "the mental disturbance set up by political excitement may be a specified disease." "Electric fever" and "politico mania" are at present current terms in the English medical press. Beer and brandy in England, and whiskey in this country, are the causes of a good deal of this "election fever," though there is much truth in the views of the Lancet.

When Fogg heard the landlady below-stairs pounding the beefsteak, he remarked that Mrs. Brown was tendering a burgoo to the boarders.

"Pat, what time is it?" "Oi don't know, Mike; but let's guess at it, and then the man as comes furthest off can go out to the kitchen and look."

Aunt—"Has any one been at those preserves?" (Dead silence.) "Have you touched them, Jemmy?" Jemmy—"Pa never 'lows me to talk at the table."

Boarder—Why is that spring chicken like a favorite brand of brandy? Landlady—I am sure I don't know, Mr. Tibbs. Boarder—Because it's old hen, I see.

That Boy.

Is the house turned topsy-turvy?
Does it ring from street to roof?
Will the racket still continue
Spite of all your mild reproof?
Are you often in a flutter?
Are you sometimes thrilled with joy?
Then I have my grave suspicions
That you have at home that boy.

Are the walls and tables hammered?
Are your nerves and ink spots?
Are your nerves and eyes so bright and roguish
Have two eyes so bright and roguish
Made you every care forget?
Have your garden beds a prowler
Who delights but to destroy;
These are well-known indications
That you have at home that boy.

Have you seen him playing circus—
With his head upon the mat
And his heels in mid-air twirling—
For his audience, the cat?
Do you ever stop to listen,
When his merry pranks annoy—
Listen to a voice that whispers,
You were once just like—that boy!

Have you heard of broken windows
And with nobody to blame?
Have you seen a trousered urchin
Quite unconscious of the same?
Do you love a teasing mixture
Of perplexity and joy?
You may have a dozen daughters,
But I know you've got—that boy

A bee's working tools comprise a set equal to that of the average mechanic. The feet of the common working bee are a combination of a basket, a brush and a pair of pinchers. The brush, the hairs of which are arranged in symmetrical rows, is said to be seen with the microscope to be a perfect brush of fairy delicacy and beauty. The basket or velvet robe to remove the pollen with which it becomes loaded while collecting the nectar. Another article is the tongue, which a spoon receives all the glandular secretion it carries to the hive.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE BLACK FLAG OF DEATH ALMOST RUN TO EARTH.

Frank Donelly spoke but the truth when he declared that they had no child's play before them, indeed, he might have expressed himself stronger still, but for fear of alarming his lovely girl companion needlessly.

So on they sped with the fleetness of the wind across the great brown waste, whilst the Bedouin horsemen again raised their terrible tachbir of "Allah Ackbar," and then handling their long rifles sent a shower of leaden rain after the fugitives, whom they knew well enough to be Europeans by their dress.

But, happily, the aim of a horseman when in motion is seldom true, and though the young officer trembled lest a chance ball should strike the darling of his heart, or harm one of their horses, he did not suffer the keen anxiety that he felt to show itself on his countenance, but instead kept an artificial smile, stereotyped thereon, and affected to make light of the danger.

Fortunately, there were neither camels nor dromedaries among their pursuers, and, fortunately, also, their horses had gone through as much fatigue as their own, so that the chances of the race seemed about equal.

But then what if they reached the railway station at Et Tarranch and no train was there! The European officials at such a place would certainly not be more than half a dozen in number at the very most, while their pursuers numbered at least three score, and would not scruple to shed their blood on the very platform or in the ticket office or waiting room.

Bah, this thought was more terrible than all that had preceded it, because it brought the extremes of barbarism and civilization into such close juxtaposition; but with an effort Frank Donelly banished the horrid nightmare from his mind, for now, if ever, sufficient for the hour was the evil thereof.

Ah, a lining of silver even to this leaden cloud, for on the fierce desert warriors, discharging a second volley after them the bullets, instead of humming and buzzing past their ears, pinged into the sand close behind, which was a sure proof that they were gaining ground on their pursuers, at all events for the present, and even that was something to be thankful for.

On, on swept the mingled fight and chase, and to Nellie it seemed as though the ridgy sands of the desert swept under her horse's hoof-thudding hoofs like waves of the sea. She felt terror no longer, but instead a kind of daze and stupor, as though the action of her brain had been stilled by a narcotic.

Their pursuers had by now divided themselves into two bodies, each trying its best to outflank and to head them, whilst at some little distance in their front rose a somewhat large village, such as are often met with in Egypt just on the confines of the desert, a village of one storied mud huts, thatched with straw, with a tumble down mosque and a bazar as the only conspicuous buildings.

Such an everyday affair was the hamlet which they were so rapidly approaching under the white moonlight, and which it seemed to be the object of their pursuers to drive them right through.

But why this attempt? Had it anything to do with the great black flag that they now for the first time perceived, drooping heavily around a staff which upreared itself from the onion shaped dome of the mosque?

Frank Donelly understood its grim significance in a single instant. The plague was there. That black flag was hung out as a warning to all people against entering the place, and their pursuers had divided in order to drive them right through the long single street whilst they themselves swept along on either side outside the town, and so comparatively secure from the infection.

Well they must have known that to seek shelter or hiding there not even the bravest would have dared, for the Egyptian plague of the present day is almost identical with that which almost desolated London in the fifteenth century, and is usually generated in the filth and crowding of the tens of thousands of pilgrims who annually resort to the Prophet's tomb at Mecca, and the germs of which they carry home to their native villages on their return.

To escape the death trap into which they were being driven was beyond the range of practibility, for to attempt to make a detour was to be overtaken and destroyed; and besides, that street lay right in their course, pointing as it did, straight as an arrow, toward Et Tarranch which with its railway station Frank Donelly guessed to be a little more than a league on the other side.

Well, as they had no choice at it they must go, and the Captain was fain to hope that at such an hour all the horrors that it contained would be hidden behind closed doors and drawn shutters, but it was not to be so.

The dead were in the streets, lying in every conceivable attitude in seething heaps of corruption.

The dead, too, were seated in open doorways, bound to the backs of chairs, with bowls squeezed in between their stiffened legs, thus silently begging for offerings to defray the expenses of their own interments.

But they who, doubtless, just at the outbreak of the pestilence which had claimed them as its first victims, had placed them there, were dead within doors, and all probable contributors to such funeral funds had either fled far away or had themselves fallen a prey to the awful epidemic, for though, as a rule, the doors were wide open, not a living thing was to be seen, save here and there a jackal, that after a single sniff at some festering body or other would utter a lugubrious howl and trot away with his appetite completely gone, and it takes more than a trifle to turn a hungry jackal's stomach.

And yet the pure fragrant desert air, that swept around this village of death would prevent the contagion from being carried farther, except by human transmission, that is to say, the winds themselves would not bare it as they would assuredly have done in other countries.

Frank Donelly both hoped and finally believed that their own flight therethrough would be far to rapid too make their contiguity perilous to others if Providence willed it that they should gain the train in safety.

He did not tell either Nellie or Pat the nature of the grim visitor which, through the medium perhaps of a single returned Pilgrim, had brought down destruction upon the entire village, but he spoke to the darling of his heart such words of comfort and encouragement as he could think of amongst such horrible surroundings, and perceiving that, notwithstanding these, she was almost sufficiently overcome to fall from her saddle in a swoon, he urgently besought her to close her eyes whilst he guided her horse.

Those words restored her, for she felt that the safety and lives of others depended on her courage, so she said "No, no, I am all right," and gazing straight ahead between her horse's pricked ears, with reins as taut as the rigging of a ship she kept as true to his course as ever such ship could be kept.

Her face was as white as marble, but it was equally as rigid and firm, until mosque, bazaar, and even the best houses of the straggling sheet were left behind, when she gasped:

"Thank God that is over. But how near are our pursuers?"

"No nearer than they were before, dear," exclaimed Captain Donelly, cheerfully, after he had just glanced around. "They have united again and are following us in a compact body but we have only three miles more running to do now."

"Is that the smoke of another train over there beyond the palm trees, Frank?"

"Yes, darling, and it is coming toward St. Tarraneh, I declare. It is yet many miles away on the Cairo side, and that we may arrive at the station just as soon, pray to God that we may, Nellie, dear, and that the cars may either have a goodly proportion of armed male passengers in them, or that the train may be able to steam away before the Bedouins come up."

"Amen, Frank, I will," and not another word was uttered between them.

On, still on.

Their horses were almost exhausted now, whilst the three score Bedouins who had commenced the chase, barely one score were now in it.

But these hung perseveringly on their track, and what if a single one of their horses gave in, for the rest could not abandon its rider, who ever he or she might be.

And now there came another trial. The desert vanished beneath their horses hoofs, and in its place the exhausted steeds had to reel rather than gallop over the soft brown heavy ground, where the stubble of last year's crops of d'hourra, maize and safra stuck up like so many bayonets.

By the mercy of heaven they still kept their feet, though their starting eyeballs were all bloodshot, whilst blood also mingled with the foam that they scattered in showers of seeming snowflakes over their moist, dark coats.

Now they sweep in turn through the tufts of sugar cane, under the low spreading branches of date trees, and past great tufts of palm shrubs, whilst half a mile in their front, gleaming like molten silver in the moonlight, they see the Nile, rushing by the feathery palm, and the flowering cawb tree, and nearer to them yet stands the little wooden railway station with its long extention platforms, both of which appear to be quite empty.

But ah! a shrill whistle and a vast leviathan spitting fire as he comes racing with a roar along the iron road. God! the station is still more than a quarter of a mile away. Which will arrive there first?

The train slackened speed; that is something, for they fear along, if possible, at a greater rate than ever since they can't shake the Bedouins off or distance them in any degree materially, and may they not be guiding them on to the slaughter of all who are in the train?

Ah, down goes a horse.

It is Nellie's.

She on her back on the ground to all appearances stunned.

But in an instant Frank Donelly is also on the ground, lifts her on his own horse, for her's will never gallop more, and mounting behind her the flight is resumed. Pat resolved that he will escape or die with his master.

Has that minute's loss of time sacrificed their lives?

The train is in the station, whilst they are still a couple of hundred yards therefrom, and the foremost of the Bedouins about twice as many in the rear.

But whilst Frank had been lifting up Nellie, his man had been fastening a cheap, cotton, gaudy Union Jack pocket handkerchief that he happily had about him, on to the head of his lance, and now he flourished it madly on high, at the same time shouting with the full force of his lungs.

The train had begun to move on, but happily both guard and engine driver at the same instant saw all and comprehended all.

Knowing that there were some revolver-armed Europeans and Americans within the long line of cars, they ventured on their own responsibility to stop the train.

CHAPTER XXXII.

STEAM AGAINST HORSEFLESH—ALEXANDRIA.

No sooner were the cars again at a standstill than the stationmaster and the two European porters dashed into them, declaring that they weren't going to remain there to be massacred, for by now the fugitives were spurring their horses on to the platform, and the wild Bedouins were in full view, coming crashing through the sugar cane with oath and yell, a rolling of eyes, a gnashing of teeth and a wild brandishing of lance and rifle.

"Allah Ackbar! Dour! Dour!" they shrieked, rather than shouted, fully believing that they were yet in time.

Brave as any of the dauntless three who in olden times held the bridge at Rome against Lars Porsena and his countless hosts, was the gallant English railroad guard or conductor, who stood alone on that empty platform, with the door of his van open behind him, and the whistle in his hand one blow on which would have sent his train whirling along the iron rails to certain safety and almost as brave was the grimy engine driver, who in such a terrible moment did not urge his great steam horse forward even without orders.

But, instead of yielding to craven fears, he just said quietly to his stoker, "Shovel in more coals, Bill. I think I'll have time to light my pipe," and light his pipe this remarkable cool chap did, while at that juncture the guard shouted out:

"Women and children crouch down in the cars. Men who have firearms stand to the window and use them if you see occasion."

Then he ran forward, laid hold of Nellie Trezzar, lugged her off the saddle in front of her lover, and whilst running with her towards his car and shouting "Quick!" he pitched or rather launched the still unconscious girl into his van, (for there was no time to lay her down tenderly.)

Then he blew his whistle shrilly as Captain Donelly and Pat Monaghan rushed in after her, and dropped it with a shriek as a Bedouin rifle rang out and a bullet passed through his arm at the elbow.

Another instant, however, and Pat and his master both had hold of him by the collar, and lugging him into the car between them, Frank closed and fastened the door as the train went puffing and panting on alongside the platform.

The Bedouins were mad with chargrin and rage.

They had missed their prey by not more than half a minute at the most, and the capture of their horses seemed to afford them very inconsiderable satisfaction.

With yells and howls they tore along the platform, some thrusting their long lances in at the windows and others firing their rifles into the carriages, but the greater number trying their utmost with those same rifles to shoot the men on the engine, who, however, squatted as much as possible beneath the stout iron work, and so effectually cheated bullets of their intended billets.

You would have thought that those swarthy warriors of the desert were devils instead of human beings, so truly demonic were their faces and their actions, but that they were mortal was evidenced by the manner in which some of them were knocked over by the few bullets that were now discharged at them from the train window, for the general disarming of Europeans at Cairo in the morning had prevented firearms from being very plentiful amongst the passengers, whilst Captain Donelly and Pat Monaghan made the discovery at the same moment that all their ammunition was gone, which would have been most awkward under other circumstances.

The train, however, had now taken up the running, and was clear away, rapidly increasing its speed from twelve to fifteen, from fifteen to twenty and from twenty to twenty-miles an hour, and with no further hurt than a slight splintering of wood and a wholesale shattering of glass bade its Bedouin assailants a snorting, rumbling, steam-blowing, fire-spilling and all together ecrriful good-night.

Out into the dim and silent night. What a change of scene!

The desert had been as completely left behind as the desert warriors, and the moon shone down on the silvery waters of the Nile, flowing between verdant banks, where an almost continuous fringe of sycamores, accacias and tall feathery palms nodded towards the rippling on murmuring waves.

Now and then a village of mud walls and straw roofs would appear on the right or the left of the line, with the dome and minarets of its mosque rising from the centre of a grove of date trees, or the tomb of some saint would flash whitely for an instant on one side or the other and disappear.

But neither Captain Donelly nor Pat Monaghan cared ought for the passing scenery, for the latter was fretting over the death of one horse and the loss of another, since a good soldier loves his horse as he loves his mistress, while the young officer's whole attention and anxiety was centered in Nellie, who seemed as though she never intended to come out of her swoon, and who looked deathly pale by the light of the little smoky parafine lamp that was hung up in the car.

As for the brave guard himself, Captain Donelly and his men had seen to his wound between them had skilfully got the bullet out of the arm, and thereafter bandaged up the limb in such a fashion that the effusion of the blood was wholly stopped, and the pain rendered at all events bearable.

Directly he could stand it they eagerly questioned him concerning the latest doings at Alexandria and at Cairo, for Captain Donelly doubted not that he had been in the former city during the preceding day, while he knew that he must have quitted the capital several hours later than themselves.

"Yes, the train had left the terminus at Cairo at three in the morning, but nothing of much moment had occurred during the night, except that more soldiers had come into the city, and order had been somewhat restored. Some of these troops had been dispatched by the war minister to protect the European refugees at the railway station from the mob, and to see that the rails were not ripped up or the trains wrecked in any way."

Then he added "that every train was searched by the soldiery, ere it started, for a young lady who had run away from her parents, rich banking people, called—well, he had forgot exactly what they were called, but that was no matter, and anyhow she must have been a brave girl to leave her parents at times like these."

As may be imagined, Frank Donelly lost no time in shifting the scene (or rather his inquiries) from Cairo to Alexandria at this juncture.

"Quiet? No I can't say that matters are over quiet there, if it comes to that," was the reply of the wounded guard. "The storm hasn't broke yet, but 'tis hourly expected to burst, and when it does it will be something more than a passing squall I reckon. Anyhow that seems to be the general opinion, for all who can get away from the place are getting away as fast as ever they can. But, Lord bless you, there are not ships enough to carry them."

"The deuce there are not. Think you then that I shall be detained there?"

"If you succeed in getting to sea in less than a week I shall be surprised. Why, whole crowds rushed off this morning in the hope that the earliest arrivals would be able to book places aboard the P. and O. mail steamer at Port Said, and more than nine-tenths of 'em had to return disappointed."

This was sorrowful news indeed, for up to that moment Frank Donelly had looked forward to being married to Nellie with the dawn, and their eating their breakfast together aboard some vessel or other bound to some port of Europe at the very least if not to England direct.

He looked the disappointment he felt to the very full, and his face might have borne the expression longer had not his lovely charge at last almost suddenly recovered her senses and exclaimed in wondering tones "Why, where are we?"

"In a train my darling, and also close to the end of our journey, thank God!"

"That indeed we are in," said the guard, "for there's Lake Mariut on our left and Lake Abukir on our right, and if you look out of the window straight ahead you will see the Pharwa lighthouse and the blue sea beyond it."

"There do you hear all that, Nellie?" said Frank encouragingly."

"Yes, dear, and I'm waiting for you to add that our troubles and dangers are nearly over."

"Assuredly, darling, assuredly; as much over as the night is over, for don't you see day's gray dawn in the East? The sun will be up in a few minutes."

"Oh what a fright I shall look going through the streets in broad daylight with my arms bare to my shoulders and this most comical head-dress on."

Frank laughed, for he knew that when a woman once begins to think of her personal appearance she is literally free both from pain and terror.

"There are plenty of close baths in which you can shrink from public observation until you are engulphed in a private room of a European hotel, from whence you can send out and in a very short while supply any deficiencies of your wardrobe. Why we are in the heart of civilization again."

"Barbarism veneered with civilization, you mean, Frank. Oh, give me in preference the frailest skiff in the most tempest-tossed sea. I have been through that this night which all my life through will cause me to shudder and turn pale whenever the word Egypt is mentioned in my hearing. But we shall be on the sea in an hour, shall we not Frank?"

He was saved from uttering a soothing falsehood by the train at this instant rumbling into the station, so he said instead, "Here we are at last!"

Too Frank.

The Rev. Mark Pattison, who died a few months ago, and who was a typical Englishman and scholar, was once appealed to by a volatile American girl, as to whether he thought she could write a book. "I had to disappoint her, poor thing!" he writes. "I told her she was the most ignorant woman I had ever met."

Another young woman who had written some clever essays was astonished by his unasked criticism to the effect that he "considered her conversation extremely feeble." While he was dying he comforted his weeping wife with the remark,—

"Oh yes, my dear! No doubt! no doubt! But you'll soon marry again. I've arranged that you shall be comfortable until you do."

The lady soon, by the way, fulfilled his prophecy.

The terrible frankness is the trait which most widely separates the Englishman from his American cousin. The American is more sensitive and quick in sympathy. He is, too, taught consideration for his neighbors from his cradle, and however candid he may be, learns to keep silent concerning unpleasant truths affecting himself or others. But if the English boy finds a hole in his poorer schoolmate's shoes, he will harry him incessantly with chaff about it.

A noted English author, while travelling through this country, appeared at a large dinner given in his honor in a flannel shirt and business suit. Glancing round the table, he muttered,—

"Ah, evening dress! The custom at home. Quite so! quite so. But I did not know that you dressed like gentlemen here."

Canon Kingsley while in this country stunned the chairman of a literary club, who was welcoming him to a reception in somewhat florid terms, by staring at him and curtly saying, "I consider your remark in very bad taste." Then, turning his back on him, he walked away.

Truth requires that we should keep our own hearts pure and upright, and our words honest; but it does not send us to drag the covering from off our neighbor's weakness or to jeer at the mole on his face.

"Sudden Calls."

A Washington correspondent tells of a death there recently which is sensational in its details. A young doctor, handsome, strong, and of great promise, was called to attend a lady in a carriage at his door. Receiving no answer to his greeting to the patient, he thought she had fainted. He stepped into her coupe and found her already a corpse. He drove by the side of the dead woman to her house and thence to the hospital, where he was expected to participate in a meeting of the managers. Apologizing for his lateness, he related his ghastly experience. Then remarking, "I feel faint," he fell, struck dead by paralysis.

First Patron—"Do you know where Barber Jenkins gets his conversational powers?" Second Patron—"From his wife, I believe."

Mrs. Muldoon—"Mrs. Mulcahey, have you heard the new rimidy for hydrophoby?" Mrs.—Mulcahey—"No, faith. Phat is it?" Mrs. Muldoon—"Plasteur of Paris, begorra!"

THE FARM.

Breaking Prairie Soil.

The great problem with the prairie settler is how to subdue the wild prairie sod and get it in proper condition for cultivation, for thereon depends his bread and butter. A new comer will receive plenty of advice how to do it, and in almost as many different ways as he has advisers. Going to Manitoba from all parts of the world, they nearly all think the way they farmed at home is also the proper way there; and if the season is propitious—as the one just past has been, most of them will succeed, in a measure, the results varying with the condition of the season and the character of the soil they have to deal with. Others going from one part of the territory to another, suppose that all prairie soil may be treated alike successfully, without considering that the territory is large, and embraces a great variety of soils. In the wheat fields of the Red River valley, where the sod is a deep black muck with a wet clayey subsoil, they cannot break successfuly over three inches deep; experiments have proved, that breaking four or five inches deep will delay the rotting of the sod two or three years, and as wheat is the staple crop and cannot be well grown, except the sod be well rotted, it makes quite a difference with the farmer. Where the soil is of a lighter nature, underlaid with a very dry, calcareous subsoil, the sod may be turned over four and five inches deep; a crop of corn taken off the first year, and by thoroughly scarifying the surface the second year, the farmer can secure a good crop of flax or oats, or even wheat.

The secret of success in breaking up sod to have it rot quickly and thoroughly is, to do it when the grass and roots are in an active stage of growth. An equally good rule, if any rule can be adopted, is to wait until the cattle can get good feeding on the new grass, and not break later than July first. Too early breaking is preferable to too late, as it gives an opportunity to get in a sod crop early, though, if the season is at all wet, that early broken will grow up grass almost as bad as it was before, especially in low places. The true breaking season, all things considered, is during the month of June. Some farms have a number of gravel knolls to contend with; these spots should be attended to so soon as the frost is out of the ground in the spring; then with a good team and plow, they can be entirely turned over; but if you wait until the ground settles and the soil becomes dry, it is the next thing to an impossibility to make an impression on them with any common team. The disc harrow, in its place and season, is a grand tool; but to use it on breaking in the spring without back-setting one or two inches deeper than the sod was broken, is a mistake that makes many a bushel difference in the crop in the fall. It simply chops the sod into strips and blocks, leaving it in such shape, that the wind and sun will dry out every particle of moisture it contains, which should go towards feeding the crop. An experiment, which I made one year on twenty acres put into corn, which was a total failure, so far as corn was concerned, was evidence enough for me. If the harrow is used in the fall on ground that has been well back-set, the ground has a chance to settle and become firm before spring planting.

The cultivation of prairie soil sets at naught all rules and maxims of the Eastern Provinces; to wait in corn planting until the oak leaf is as large as a squirrel's ear (provided we could find either) would not insure success; nor is it necessary to wait until the ground is warmed up. The soil is usually so dry in April, that a seed does not rot when planted so early, but is ready to germinate so soon as heat and moisture combine in proper degrees.

Fresh Meat in Winter.

To secure fresh meat is often very difficult in neighborhoods remote from a market. It is not often that farmers can get fresh meat in summer, as they desire, unless they are fortunate enough to be sheep growers, and can kill a sheep occasionally, to obtain a supply. But frost is a great preservative, and in our northern climate fresh beef, pork, or other meat, hung up where it will freeze solid, can be kept almost any length of time, during occasional warm spells in winter the meat may be packed in ice, and thus preserved. Farmers who have ice-houses, of course, possess a great advantage over those who have neglected to make and fill an appendage so useful.

Winter Quarters for Fowls.

A poultry fancier says that one of the essentials for inducing hens to lay in winter, is warm, comfortable quarters. With lumber and building paper used so as to furnish air spaces in the sides and roof, and with no chance for cold air to come in at the bottom, a chicken-house can be made so warm that when well stocked with fowls it will scarcely freeze inside in the coldest weather, as the heat generated and given off by the chickens will keep the temperature above freezing. But, in such case, unless provision is made for ventilation, the air will become impure, and the chickens will sicken and die.

The Ice Crop.

This crop, usually abundant at this season, is not the least important one to the farmer's family. Every farmer, and especially every one who has a dairy, should harvest and securely house a portion of the crop for use during the hot summer months. An ice house can be easily and cheaply made, and most farmers have plenty of time now to cut and haul ice to fill one. No ruralist, mindful of the comforts of home in summer, will be likely to neglect securing his share of the ice crop while it can be done to advantage.

Disappearance of the Euphrates.

The Euphrates river, once a mighty stream, seems likely to disappear altogether. For some years the river banks below Babylon have been giving way so that the stream spread out into a marsh, until steamers could not pass, and only a narrow channel remained for the native boats. Now the passage is being filled up, and the prospect is that the town on the banks will be ruined and the famous river itself will be swallowed up by the desert.

The Standard.

MARKDALE FEBRUARY 18 1886

NEW COUNTY.

Application has been made to the Legislature of Ontario for the formation of a new county, to comprise three townships from Grey, three from Wellington, two towns and two villages with Mt. Forest as County Town.

Last week the Dundalk Herald suggested something else, viz:—that Proton, Melancthon, Osprey, Artemesia, Glenelg and Egremont be set apart as a new County with Dundalk as the Hub.

Now we have something infinitely better than either. The first objection to leaving the county as it is, is the great distance from some of the outlying townships to the county town, and the want of railway communication; the second great objection is the unwieldy proportions which large county councils have assumed, and Grey county in particular.

Now the latter is likely to undergo a material change in the near future, as steps have already been taken towards having the representation to county councils reduced at least one half, so that this objection will doubtless be shortly removed; and as for bringing the outlying districts into easy access to the county town, all that is required is to change the head quarters to Markdale. It may be easily seen by reference to the county map that our town is geographically in the centre, and when the railway is extended from Durham to Meaford or Thornbury, we will have direct railway communication through the county from east to west and from north to south, thereby entirely removing the difficulty of reaching the capital. When the ratepayers of this county camly considers this scheme, we are pursuaded that all others will speedly drop into oblivion.

LITERARY AND DEBATING CLUB.

Would it not be a good idea to organize a Literary and Debating Society in this village. There has never been sufficient encouragement given this kind of exercise to bring out half the latent talent which lies dormant in the upper story of our citizens.

It is especially valuable to young men, to have sufficient practice on the platform, to enable them, when called on in later years, to give expression of their views in an intelligent manner, and will further encourage them to think, study and observe, and thereby store their minds with something useful. There is yet time before the winter is over to organize and have several debates.

There is scaresly a village in the district without its debating club, and some of them have assumed very extensive proportions: The Chatsworth one especially is becoming noted for good management and depth of debating power.

SERIOUS FIRE.

Last Thursday, E. Kennedy's Woollen Mills at Traverston was completely destroyed by fire. The factory was a large frame, and the family lived in the upper portion of the building. The fire originated in the roof and must have came from the smoke stack, as the mill was in full operation at the time, it being between eleven and twelve o'clock, noon. Every one was busy at his post, and nothing was seen of the fire until the attic floor had burned through, letting the fire drop through. Everything was of such a combustible nature that there was no time to save anything, all being consumed, even to the provisions and furniture of the family. There was an insurance of $1.000 on the building and machinery and a mortgage of the same amount, so that the family are left very destitute. Their actual loss will not be less than $4,500.

MOTHERS TAKE NOTICE—West's Cough Syrup contains no Opiates, Opium or any minerals, and can be given to the youngest and most delicate child with perfect safety. It is an infallible cure for Whooping Cough. A bottle should always be kept convenient as it is also a certain cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption in its early stages, Bronchitis, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Troubles. Price 25 cents 50 cents, and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Feb. 18

MASQUERADE CARNIVAL.

The Roller Rink last Thursday night, on the occasion of the Masquerade Carnival, was filled to overflowing and, notwithstanding the large crowd, the most perfect order was maintained throughout the evening and all present seemed to be in their most happy mood except the fat man, whose ups and downs in life were so frequent and the Rink floor so hard that the sad, far off look in his eye might be excused and even looked upon with compassion and sympathy.

The number of masquers was large and, while space forbids us to particularize, we must say in passing, that the costumes as a rule were good and many of them exceedingly rich and beautiful, and especially so were many of the lady costumes, some being really elaborate, but then it is difficult to excel the ladies of Markdale in anything.

Quite a number from Owen Sound were present and some very fine skaters, notably Misses Douglas and Tucker and Mr. Arnold.

The Judges were well chosen, being Dr. Sproule, M. P., Wm. Lucas and Thomas Hill, and their decisions were universally satisfactory.

The prizes were numerous and the competition sharp. The list of winners is as follows, viz:

Best costumed lady, Miss Dundas, special prize.

Best fancy costumed lady, Miss Clapp.

Best gentleman costume, John Richards.

Negro costume, Mr. Steyens, Owen Sound.

Best lady skater, Miss Douglas, Owen Sound.

Boy skater (under 15), Al. Sproule.

Girl skater (under 14) Minnie Lucas

Fat man, David J. Shanahan.

Clown, Willie McFarland.

Lady skater, Mrs. Hill, second.

Indian costume, Chas. Richards.

Fastest lady and gentleman skater, Miss Tucker, Owen Sound, and Rudd Mathews, Markdale.

Best boy skater (under 10), Master Knapp.

Fastest gentleman skater (20 laps), Alex. Nester. There was considerable interest manifested in this race; there was eleven entries, and the race was exciting; McFarland's grain buyer was so excited that, as he came tearing down the home stretch on the last lap, his stentorian voice was heard high above the din of the applauding multitude, crying 54 for your peas, what ye got on?

Although the Band were a little late in coming to time, yet when they did get down to business, they made up in the quality of their music for the delay. The boys are doing some excellent playing and nowhere does it sound to better advantage than in the Rink.

The Rink is becoming, and deservidly so, a popular place of amusement, and we are pleased to see it so well conducted and giving such good entertainments.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

"Farmer" draws an inference warranted by my statement of facts, that we can get along without "P. S. Inspectors." This has long been my opinion, and from what I know of the opinion and desire of "Farmer," he has voiced them pretty well—too much money for too little work—too many sinecures.

He says it is "nothing to us whether an Inspector," &c.

I did not attach importance to the mere mispronounciation of Achilles, but gave it and legends and couth as specimens of many other errors in the public reading of a page of the Fourth Book, and so proving that he was not able to examine an ordinary class of pupils much less second-class Teachers, in the very important subject of reading.

I think he errs slightly too when he wishes a Reform correspondent to tell how the change for the worse came about in the lengthening of the Summer holidays. Several objectionable features of the law exist for which both Tory and Grit are responsible; but it may be pertinent to add that the late Chief Superintendent, the late and present Minister and Deputy-Minister of Education and the Teachers' Provincial Association, have been the chief factors used in framing our School Laws and Regulations.

Let us put away Reform and Torry names when we enter the Educational arena, and as deeply interested taxpayers, try to have our wrongs righted whatever may have been their origin.

Recently the Grange (Division No. 2) made an effort to abolish the Inspectorates, but in approaching the Minister of Education they did not get much encouragement, being told, in effect, to go home, be good boys, and thankful for the educational blessings they enjoy.

Let the long-suffering taxpayers of Grey emphatically tell the Government that they want the Inspector fraud abolished, and I think they must obtain what they want.

The attitude of the County Council on this question shows need for its reformation—fewer and better men to do its business—men whose motto is "Woe is me if I permit any thing to come between me and the discharge of my duty."

F. W., an ex-Teacher.

Scotched, not Killed.

There are rumors of further trouble in the North-West with the approach of spring. Letters from Battleford and other points agree in the statement that the Indians are acting in a suspicious manner, and that there is something wrong among them. There is said to be about 75,000 Indians in the North West, of whom some 20,000 are capable of bearing arms in the field. United action on the part of such a number against the power of the Dominion would be a serious matter, and is rendered more so by the possible contingency that the enemies of the Dominion are not all within sound of the Saskatchewan. It is to be hoped the Government are on the alert, and that any indications of rebellion will call forth prompt and decisive action. The Indian, it is said by one authority, sees that he is doomed, and is resolved to make a last effort to prolong his existence. Another asserts that the red man's misery has become insupportable, His country is lost to him—he is almost naked—he is poor, wretched, cold and hungry. Death would be to him a welcome change, and it may come sooner and more honorably on the war path than amid the throes of starvation. This last would be indeed a pitiable condition if it existed. There can be no darker incentive to recklessness than a feeling of dispair. We hope the poor Indian, bad as his condition may be, is not yet reduced to utter hopelessness. And we trust the Government will use every means possible to allay the natural resentment of the man, savage though he be, who sees his inheritance passing irrevocably into the hands of an alien race, his people fading from the earth to make room for the stranger, his hunting grounds obliterated, himself an intruder and dispised in the land which once was all his own. We are bound to take care of him; bound by every dictate of honesty and humanity, and there can be no doubt that He who created the red man as well as the white will require an account at our hands. If we invade his country, take possession of his heritage, wrong him, teach him evil such as he never knew, dishonor him, despise him, and leave him to die in his wretchedness and dispair, the Great Spirit who watches the fall of the sparrow will not allow him to perish unavenged. Let us not fight him then until every other alternative has been tried. It is cheaper to provide food for him, and perhaps under a better system there is yet hope of his reclamation and civilization. It may be that all this is visionary and impracticable, and that the law of force is the only law he has any respect for. But we would fain hope that his good traits might be cultivated, his vices repressed, his conscience aroused, his religious tendencies rightly directed until he has at last attained to some measure of growth in the direction of Christian life.—[Trip Hammer.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The Revs. G. Rorke, of Coburg, occupied the pulpit in the Methodist Church here on Sunday morning last, and the Rev. Wesley Casson, of Markdale, in the evening.

The Flesherton Brass Band is now making rapid progress in music, under the skilful leadership of E. Vanzant, Esq., several new instruments have been added to the Band, making, in all, sixteen instruments. After a few months practice the boys will not be afraid to compete with any band in the county of Grey.

Dr. Armstrong, eldest son of J. W. Armstrong, Esq., of this village, has been with his wife spending a few holidays with his parents here previous to his leaving for an extended tour through England, Ireland, and Scotland. The Dr. left here on Monday afternoon and expects to sail about the 20th.

The people of this locality are looking forward to having an intellectual treat, on Sabbath next and Monday evening following, when we are to be favored with the presence of and a sermon from Rev. Dr. Sutherland on Sunday morning, and Missionary address on the Monday evening following.

The ordination and induction of the Rev. Thos. Watson to the charge of the Baptist congregation here, was held in the Town Hall on Tuesday afternoon last. Rev. Mr. McEwan of Owen Sound, addressed the people, and Rev. Mr. Dunlop delivered the charge to the minister. Rev. Mr. Grant of London, delivered a very soul-stirring address. In the evening a tea-meeting was held in the same place; there was a fair turn out. Space does not permit us to report the proceedings in full. The evening's entertainment was one of pleasure and profit. M. Richardson, Esq., was voted the chair, and filled his position there in more than his usual happy manner. The first speaker was Rev. Mr. Grant of London, who choose for the foundation of his sermon an old Testament story from the Book of Judges. Mr. Grant is a logical, forcible and happy platform man, and with simple truthes, held his audience spell-bound for nearly an hour, and everybody sorry when he sat down. We can safely say Mr. Grant will be favored with a full house if he again visits the church in Flesherton. The second speaker was Mr. Thorn of Meaford, who was brief and to the point, addressing himself to christian workers. Rev. Mr. Barker of Cape Rich, next followed, with a short address on punctuality. Then came Rev. Mr. McEwan of Owen Sound, in his usual kindly and forcible manner, delighted and edified all who heard him. Next followed, Rev. Mr. Vanvickle of Morley, an easy and pleasant speaker, and delivered some well chosen remarks. Rev. Mr. Ayers, who had been absent from home, entered the Hall near the close of the entertainment. Before closing he was called upon, and for a short time, in a few well chosen remarks, made each one feel that after all the best of the wine was not given all at the beginning of the feast. The Methodist church choir and also the Flesherton Glee Club, rendered some choice selections during the evening. Solos were also sweetly sang by Miss Christce and Miss Maud Richardson. This closed one of a most successful tea-meetings, intellectually, spiritually and I presume financially. The Baptist friends purpose commencing operations on a handsome new brick church here early in the spring.

Holland Centre.

(From our correspondent.)

Business is again brisk, and the merry bells are heard. The return of sleighing after the recent thaw, has given fresh vigor to the cordwood, tie and square timber business.

Some of our local wood buyers are acting a little spooney, and if they don't be cautious will get into hot water. We don't want any more burns or scalds this winter.

Mr. Jas. Foster has been prostrated with inflammation of the lungs, but is, we believe, on the mend.

Mr. C. Price has sold his old store—the one he first occupied in the village—to a man from Meaford for a harness shop. This will be the second harness shop in town. Our present one is a good workman and getting plenty to do and says he vil dry and do the best he gan for himself and vizinidy, but cannot act odd as he ish a Sherman and nod used to dot kind of foode.

Mr. Pereira almost lost his horse, by running short of hay and feeding too much grain. He intends to be more keerful in future.

Plowing commenced a week ago at Medicine Hat.

Shoddy pedlars are victimising farmers around Erin and Acton.

CRUTCHES RENDERED USELESS.

The poor cripple who has to use crutches on account of Rheumatism, stiff and swollen joints, contracted cords, and other aches, pains and lameness, may throw aside his crutches if he will try Hagyard's Yellow Oil faithfully.

The Mt. Forest Index has donned a new head gear.

Mr. Chas. Anderson of Owen Sound died suddenly last week.

THREATENED DANGER.

In the fall '84 Randall Miller, of Maitland, N. S., was prostrated to his bed with an attack of incipient consumption. Cough remedies all failed. He rapidly grew debilitated, and friends dispared of his recovery. He tried Burdock Blood Bitters, with immediate relief, followed by a speedy cure.

Kelly Bro's Roller Rink in Kincardine was destroyed by fire last week. Loss $8,500; insured for $500.

West's Cough Syrup is a positive and certain cure for all forms of Pulmonary Complaints, it relieves a Cough almost instantly, and is admitted by all who have used it to be the best remedy of the kind ever placed before the public. A. Turner & Co., Druggists, are Agents for the above Medicines. Price 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00 per bottle.

A gang of counterfeiters have been broken up in St. Catharines.

The new C. P. R. elevator at Montreal, with a storing capacity of 600,000 bushels, has been opened.

WEATHER PROBABILITIES.

The probabilities are that we shall have much damp, chilly, sloppy weather during the coming season—just the weather to contract sudden colds. Be prepared for them by having on hand Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, a safe, agreeable and speedy cure for colds and their consequences.

John B. Gough has had a stroke of apoplexy, and lies in a critical condition.

Ex-Mayor Dudgeon, of Collingwood, has been presented by the citizens with a gold watch and chain.

THE FAITH CURE.

This new theory of cure is rapidly growing in fashion but is illogical in reason and science. Faith without works is dead. Those who have faith in Hagyard's Yellow Oil have its good works to assure their faith. It is an unfailing external and internal relief for aches, pains, lameness and soreness.

The proposed reduction in the tarift rates of the United States will reduce the revenue about $20,000,000 a year.

The outhouses and barns of Geo. Campbell, of Craighleith, were destroyed by fire on Wednesday, 10th inst. Insurance $1,125.

OF VITAL IMPORTANCE.

It is just as essential that the human body should have pure blood, as that a tree or plant should have sap to invigorate its growth. Nearly all our bodily ills arise from unhealthy blood Burdock Blood Bitters purifies this fountain of life, and regulates all the vital organs to a healthy action.

Petitions for a daily mail between Chatsworth and Durham have been forwarded to the Post office Dep. at Ottawa.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

The liver secretes bile to move the bowels; the kidneys secrete urine, to carry off uric acid, which would poison the blood; the stomach secretes gastric juice to digest or dissolve the food, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters acts upon these organs and purifies the blood by clensing all the secretions of the system.

The Spring Assizes will open in Owen Sound on Tuesday the 9th March, Mr. Justice Armour presiding.

A 5,000 roller skating rink was destroyed by fire last Saturday at Lindsay.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, France or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Notes for Housekeepers.

"Pork and beans" do not of necessity go together. Beans can be made very palatable cooked with other meats, particularly corned beef.

TEST FOR DRINKING WATER.—A hygienic writer says that the purity of water can be tested in no better or simpler way than to fill a clean pint bottle three-fourths full of water and dissolve in it a half-teaspoonful of the purest sugar—loaf or granulated will answer—cork the bottle, and set it in a warm place for two days. If in twenty-four or forty-eight hours the water becomes cloudy or milky it is unfit for use. People in doubt as to the purity of the water they are using easily decide the matter by making this simple test.

CREAM OF OYSTERS.—Put a quart of oysters and their liquor in a porcelain kettle over the fire, and watch them until they are on the verge of boiling. Then take them off and pour into a colander over a bowl, leaving the oysters in the colander. Chop the oysters as fine as possible, and pound them well in a thick bowl. Now put in a saucepan a piece of butter the size of a small egg, and when it bubbles throw in a generous tablespoonful of flour, stir it well with the egg-whisk so as to cook the flour without allowing it to color. Now pour in the oyster liquor and when well mixed over the flour, add the pounded oyster pulp and a pint of good cream. Pass this all through the sieve, season it carefully with salt and cayenne pepper; return it to the fire to heat without allowing it to boil, and just as it is about to be served add a half-cupful of fresh cream and a piece of butter the size of a small pigeon's egg. Whisk it well with the egg-beater, keeping it hot, without boiling, over the fire for a minute. Pour into a warm tureen and serve immediately.

BAKED EGGS.—Break eight eggs into a well-buttered dish, season with pepper and salt, one half cup of cream, one tablespoonful of butter, set in the oven and bake twenty minutes.

CORN BREAD.—Put two tablespoonfuls of wheat flour into a quart measure and then fill it with Indian meal. Turn this into a sieve, adding two teaspoonfuls of sugar, half a teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar and one teaspoonful soda. In place of the cream tartar and soda, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder may be used. Sift all into a bowl and mix with one quart of milk, one egg and two teaspoonfuls of melted butter; beat thoroughly and pour into a medium-sized dripping pan well greased; bake in a good oven. When done cut in squares and serve hot for breakfast.

CUMBERLAND PUDDING.—Two ounces of butter, four ounces sugar, three eggs, two ounces flour, four ounces breadcrumbs, a gill of milk, three ounces lemon peel, three ounces dried cherries, a little essence of lemon, and some apricot jam. How to use them: Beat the butter to a cream, add the sugar, then the eggs one at a time, stir in the flour, add the breadcrumbs and milk; mix gently together; then add three drops of essence of lemon, and the lemon-peel and cherries chopped fine; pour the mixture into a well-buttered mold, twist paper over and steam one hour and a half. Dissolve a half pot of apricot jam in a tablespoonful of boiling water. When the pudding is cooked turn into a dish and pour the jam over. Serve at once.

Ill-Mannered Guests.

In the matter of hours for meals, for rising and retiring, conform without hesitation or comment to those of the hospitable household. It is underbred and selfish to keep breakfast waiting, because you have overslept yourself, or dinner or tea, while you have prolonged a drive or walk unseasonably. If a meal is well cooked, it is injured by standing beyond the proper time of serving, and if our hosts' time is worth anything you are dishonest when you waste it.

It is quite as selfish in want of tactful regard for others' feelings, if less glaringly inconvenient, to present yourself below stairs long before the stated breakfast hour. You may not like to sit in your bed-chamber; the parlors may be in perfect order for your occupancy or the library tempt you to snatch a quiet hour for reading, but she is an exceptionally even-tempered hostess who does not flush uneasily at finding that you came down by the time the servants opened the house, and have made yourself at home in the living room ever since. The inference is that your sleeping room was uncomfortable, or that she is indolently unmindful of your breakfastless state.

I have an anguished recollection of a long visit paid to my family by an accomplished gentleman whose every intention was purely humane, yet who descended to the parlor each morning at an hour so barbarously early that he had to light the gas to see the piano-keys on which he strummed until breakfast was ready. There is a saving consolation in the knowledge that, if he is distinguishing himself in the heavenly mansions as a player upon instruments, there is no mother with a teething baby and a headache in the room overhead.

A Woman Kills a Panther.

Mr. George Greenleaf, accompanied by his wife, was returning home from Clayton, in the mountains of Georgia, one night. It was about nine o'clock and, as is the custom of the country, they both walked up of one the hills while the mules and wagon ascended, their little boy being the driver. Suddenly a rustle was heard in the bushes, and peering out in the darkness could be seen what looked like two balls of fire. It proved to be a large panther. As if by instinct Greenleaf opened his knife, and as the beast sprang at him he made a plunge, only to drive the knife into his wife's arm, she having thrown herself upon him at the sight of danger. He dropped the knife and fell under the second spring of the panther. The beast, evidently maddened at the scent of blood, was about to insert its teeth into Mr. Greenleaf, when his wife, who had picked up the knife, acting under the inspiration of desperation, made a clean cut at the beast's throat. The panther gave a pitiful cry, rolled over, and died. The cry reached the ears of some hunters near by and soon a number of them were on the spot, to find that a woman had accomplished what they had been six weeks trying to do.

Puzzled.

You ask me whether I'm High Church,
  You ask me whether I'm Low.
I wish you'd tell the difference,
  For I'm sure that I don't know.
I'm just a plain old body,
  And my brain works pretty slow;
So I don't know whether I'm High Church,
  And I don't know whether I'm Low.

I'm trying to be a Christian
  In the plain, old-fashioned way
Laid down in mother's Bible,
  And I read it every day;
Our blessed Lord's life in the Gospels,
  Or a comforting Psalm of old,
Or a bit from the Revelations
  Of the city whose streets are gold.

Then I pray, why, I'm generally praying.
  Though I don't always kneel or speak out,
But I ask the dear Lord, and keep asking
  Till I fear He is all tired out.
A piece of the Litany sometimes,
  The Collect perhaps, for the day.
Or a scrap of a prayer that my mother
  So long ago learned me to say.

But now my poor memory's failing,
  And often and often I find
That never a prayer from the Prayer-book
  Will seem to come into my mind
But I know what I want, and I ask it,
  And I make up the words as I go;
Do you think now, that shows I ain't High Church?
  Do you think it means I am Low?

My blessed old husband has left me,
  'Tis years since God took him away.
I know he is safe, well and happy,
  And yet when I kneel down to pray,
Perhaps it is wrong, but I never
  Leave the old man's name out of my prayer,
But I ask the Lord to do for him
  What I would do if I was there.

Of course He can do it much better;
  But He knows, and He surely won't mind
The worry about her old husband
  Of the old woman left here behind.
So I pray, and I pray, for the old man,
  And I am sure that I shall till I die.
So may be that proves I ain't Low Church,
  And may be it shows I am High.

My old father was never a Churchman,
  But a Scotch Presbyterian saint;
Still his white head is shining in Heaven,
  I don't care who says that it ain't;
To one of our blessed Lord's mansions,
  That old man was certain to go.
And now do you think I am High Church?
  Are you sure that I ain't pretty Low?

I tell you it's all just a muddle.
  Too much for a body like me.
I'll wait till I join my old husband,
  And then we shall see what we'll see.
Don't ask me again, if you please, sir;
  For really it worries me so.
And I don't care whether I'm High Church,
  And I don't care whether I'm Low.

Auber.

Auber, the celebrated French composer, was one of the few people who seem able to perform a maximum amount of work, and yet to take a minimum quantity of sleep.

His public career was somewhat late in beginning; his first real success was attained when he was thirty eight years old, but he had won that recognition by years of previous labor patiently bestowed. He rarely slept more than four hours, and once declared to a friend that he had practically done without sleep since his twentieth year.

It once happened that Sainton, a young violinist, was invited to play at the French Court, and that he consequently asked of Auber the privilege of rehearsing the music before him.

"Come at six o'clock," said the composer

"In the evening?" asked Sainton.

"No, at six in the morning."

The young man was punctual, but on arriving at Auber's house, he was surprised to find the composer already at work at his piano.

"Ah!" said the latter, calmly, when Sainton expressed his amazement at such industry; "I have been at work since five o'clock."

Indeed, it seems as if this man was incapable of fatigue. His physician once informed him that he must leave Paris for a fortnight, for rest and change of scene. He at once set out for the country, remained there five days, working from morning till night in his room, and then rushed back to the city, having thought of nothing during his absence but the score which was to follow the one he had just finished.

He lived to the age of eighty nine, a young man to the very last, well deserving the title bestowed on him by a French critic, two years previously: "that adorable youth of eighty-seven." He never would admit that he was old. When some one showed him a white hair on his coat-collar, —"Oh," he said, "some old man must have passed me."

"Don't you think," a lady once asked him, "that it is very unpleasant to grow old?"

"Very," he said; "but until now it has always been thought the only way of living a long time."

He died during the siege of Paris, broken-hearted at being forced out of his habits and separated from his quiet ways of life.

Stained Hands.

Young men are sometimes deterred from pursuing a vocation to which they are inclined by the fear that, being "unfashionable," it will exclude them from "society." An eminent mechanical engineer began his life-work by filing iron in a machine shop.

At night, after his first day's work, he looked at his soiled hands and broken finger-nails, and thought, "How can I go into society with such hands as these? What will the young ladies think of my finger-nails?"

Then came the temptation to abandon the shop, and become a clerk. He resisted, gave up society, devoted himself to his trade, and in a few years was constructing ships. He had the courage to give up society that he might acquire skill in mechanics.

Ampere, the great French chemist, though one of the most intellectual of scientists, found that he could not be both in "society" and in his laboratory. He once went to dine with a fashionable lady, who made a point of gathering notable persons about her. His hands were stained by a harmless drug which blackens the skin for a few days. Ampere wrote to his wife,—

"She declared that my hands looked unclean, and ended by leaving the table, saying she would dine when I was at a distance. I promised not to return there before my hands were white. Of course I shall never enter the house again."

Ampere became great; the vulgar woman is unknown.

Marshal Bazaine's Life in Madrid.

Bazaine has been living in Madrid for many years, in comfortable circumstances, with the income of Mexican property Mme. Bazaine inherited from her mother, who died a short time ago, and she herself had some property in Mexico. Mme. Bazaine has stood by her husband and brought up her children, and she at one time mixed more with Madrid society than at present. She was to be seen, often accompanied by Bazaine himself, in balls and receptions of the Castillian nobility, and they were both until very lately at the Royal Opera House in two orchestra stalls—butacas, as they are called—every four days.

Bazaine was received in Madrid society on account of his wife's connections and friends and one of the houses where they were constant visitors was that of the last Mexican Minister, Gen. Corona, the very officer who received the Emperor Maximilian's sword at Queretaro, by the by. The presence of Bazaine in Madrid drawing rooms led to some fracas a few years ago with a French Ambassador, Admiral Jaures, who made it a point of instantly leaving any reception where he met the ex-Marshal, a scene of this sort causing much sensation one night at a ball at Duke Fernan Nunez's.

There is no foundation in the report that Bazaine lives in poverty or has separated from his wife; but she is, on the contrary, very much pitied in Madrid, because she, for her children's sake, overlooks much of which she has goods reasons to complain. The Bonapartists and the Empress Eugenie decline to have anything to do with him. His personal appearance has much altered, and he is so aged, so stout and bloated, so neglectful of his attire and outward appearance, that he is a wretched sight as he shuffles along the Recolitas promenade or a sidewalk in the Retiro, and this leads many people to fancy he is in worse circumstances than in reality.

His last efforts at intellectual work were a book on his Mexican campaign, and a lame defence of his conduct at Metz, upon which he worked for years. No one would recognize in this strange wreck the once-upon-a-time brilliant soldier of the second empire. The present income of Mme. Bazaine is estimated at £1,400 a year. Her eldest son is a volunteer in a crack "Cacadere" battalion in Madrid garrison, and she herself has still retained much of her dashing Mexican style and good looks. Bazaine is now 74 years old.

Dreading Dead.

Kaunitz, the Austrian Minister, who died, in 1794, had such a dread of death that everything which might remind him of dying was carefully kept in the background. No one was allowed to utter in his presence the word "death," to mention his birthday, or allude to small-pox. Ingenious methods were adopted to avoid the prohibited word, while communicating the fact of a death:

When the referendary Von Binder, for fifty years his friend and confidant, died, Xaverius Raidt, the prince's reader, expressed himself in this way: "Baron Binder is no longer to be found."

The news of the death of Frederick the Great reached him in this way; His reader, with apparent absence of mind, told him that a courier had just arrived from Berlin at the Prussian ambassador's, with notifications of King Frederick William.

Kaunitz sat for some time stiff and motionless in his arm-chair, showing no sign of having understood the hint. At last he rose, walked slowly through the room, then said, raising his arms to heaven, "Alas! when will such a king again ennoble the diadem!"

When the Emperor Joseph died, the valet returned to Kaunitz a document, which the emperor was to have signed, with the words, "The emperor signs no more." The death of his sister, Countess Questenberg, Kaunitz only knew when he saw his household in mourning.

In like manner he once remained unacquainted with the recovery of one of his sons from a severe illness, until the convalescent came in person to call on him. Kaunitz himself had never been to see him during his illness. To an old aunt of his he once sent from his table one of her favorite dishes, four years after her death.

The Expulsion of the Poles.

By an order which went into effect recently, the alien Poles of Prussia were expelled from the kingdom. These people are natives of Russian and Austrian Poland, who settled in the neighboring Prussian territory without becoming German citizens. By the laws of the German Empire every subject capable of bearing arms is required to serve seven years in the standing army. This duty the Poles escaped by refusing to become naturalized, and the Prussian government decided that they should no longer enjoy the advantages of a citizenship whose burdens they would not share.

The expulsion of the Poles was accompanied by great loss and suffering. Many of them were old and poor, and had lived long in their adopted country; but the order was enforced against all alike. Whole families re-entered their native land homeless and penniless. Committees were formed in the cities of Russian Poland to relieve their distressed countrymen. In Austrian Poland the action of Prussia provoked an intense feeling of hostility to Germany. German shop-keepers were boycotted and German laborers dismissed. The Russian Czar issued a decree commanding all unnaturalized Prussians to leave his dominions at once.

Even in Germany the action of Prussia was considered harsh. No sooner had the Imperial Parliament assembled than this question of the treatment of the Poles came up. Thereupon Prince Bismarck, who is both Chancellor of the German Empire and Premier of the Kingdom of Prussia, bluntly informed the delegates that they had no right to interfere in a matter which concerned Prussia alone, and was not of national importance. The Poles themselves denounced the Prussian order as worthy of a place beside such cruelties as the persecution of the Huguenots and the expulsion of the Moors from Spain.

The edge of religious controversy has changed. It may be as sharp, but it has lost its saw teeth.—John Miller.

One of the greatest pleasures of childhood is found in the mysteries which it hides from a skepticism of the elders and works up into small mythologies of its own.

A Warning.

It is apt to be too late to save a drunkard when his habits have driven him to mania-a-potu, but a New York paper tells of a shoemaker in Angelica, of that State, who minded the warning in time to escape. Going to his barn one day, he "saw snakes." One was a crooked stick, and the other a whiplash—but they moved. He tells the rest of the story as follows: The cold sweat of fear came out on my forehead. I wiped it off with my handkerchief, and sat down on the lower round of the hay-mow ladder, for I felt faint. Then I stared straight ahead at a corn stalk. It soon began slowly to wriggle and curve! With bursting eyeballs and all the strength of mind I possessed, I forced that corn-stalk back from the animal to the vegetable kingdom, and then I staggered feebly out into the open air. I leaned against a fence, and for fear I should see more of those horrible twisting things, I clung to a post and closed my eyes.

"Time is called, Jim," I said to myself. "Whiskey and you part company to-day;" and soberer than I had been for many months, though with no more strength than a baby, I managed to get back to the house.

There was a fight, though! I didn't tell my wife, for I had made a good many promises that hadn't been kept, and I thought I'd go on alone for a while. I got up in the morning, after a terrible night, with the thirst of a chased fox upon me. Water wouldn't quench it, and I tried milk. I crept into the milk-room, slipped a straw into the edge of a cream covered pan, and sucked out the milk until only the cream was left, lowered smooth and unbroken to the bottom. Then I tried another, and another, until the fierce craving was somewhat dulled. It was a household mystery what became of the milk. No cat could lap it, my wife said, and leave the sides and cream untouched, and where did it go?

I let them talk, for the struggle was too sore and fearful to be spoken of, and I went on drinking the milk.

The road from my house to my shop lay by the greggery. When I left my gate in the morning, I took the road, and on a dead run, as if pursued, I made the distance. I ran hard all the way home to dinner, and back after that meal, never, in fact, trusting myself to walk or even take to the sidewalk for months. The cure was slow. I keep all the brakes hard set yet. A single glass of hard cider would undo the work of all these years, but that glass doesn't touch my lips while the memory of those little crawling black reptiles stays with me!

"And did your wife finally learn what became of the milk?" he was asked.

"Yes," and his voice broke. "I told her on her deathbed."

"'Jim, dear,' she said, when I had finished, with her hand clasped in mine, 'Jim, dear, I knew it all the time.'"

The struggle ended in victory, but who would be willing to enter upon a course that would impose upon life an experience like this?

Close Calculation.

If the population of different places could be estimated according to the pounds avoirdupois belonging to them, imagine the rows of figures to be set down against the names of certain health-giving summer resorts!

"Are you a native of this parish?" asked a Scotch sheriff of a witness who was summoned to testify in court.

"Maistly, yer Honor," was the somewhat enigmatic reply.

"I mean, were you born in this parish?"

"Na, yer Honor; I wasna born in this parish, but I'm maist a native, for a' that."

"You came here when you were a child, I suppose you mean?" continued the sheriff.

"Na, sir; I'm jist here aboot sax-year noo."

"Then how do you come to be nearly a native of the parish?"

"Weel, ye see, when I cam' here, sax year sin', I jist weighed eight stane, an' I'm fully seventeen stane noo; sae ye see that aboot nine stane o' me belangs to this parish, an' the ither eight comes frae Camlachie."

The Sacred White Elephant.

A correspondent writes from Mandalay just after the deposition of Thebaw: "Next morning I obtained admission to the palace, and for several hours wended my way through the endless succession of buildings. It is impossible to attempt here any detailed description of the mingled magnificence and squalor, filth and splendor which I witnessed. . . . I found myself in the Lord White Elephant house. He had been left without food or water. The magnificent silver vessels which held his food had been laying about unprotected. The royal monster seemed in a very bad temper (no wonder). He was chained by the fore feet to a massive pillar. Unless you were told that he was white you would not perceive it. In the dusky light he seemed much like any other elephant. On closer examination he seemed of light mouse color, with large white blotches." The same correspondent describes a most disgraceful scene of plunder. The crown jewels narrowly escaped.

A Peculiar Accident

Henry C. Davis, assistant general passenger agent of the Northern Pacific, who returned to St. Paul a day or two ago from the Pacific coast, tells of a rather remarkable accident which occurred near Paleuse Junction. As the train, west bound, was passing Washtucna Lake a coyote started across the ice. A Mr. Maurits, who sat beside Mr. Davis in the car, saw the animal. He drew his revolver, a 45-calibre Colt's, and fired at the beast. The ball struck the ice and glanced fully a half mile, striking a Chinaman working on section 8 in the left shoulder and inflicting a serious wound. The unfortunate Celestial was taken aboard the train and sent to Walla Walla for treatment. Mr. Maurits paid all the expenses consequent upon the accident. Mr. Davis, on his return trip, inquired the condition of the Chinaman, whose name he learned was "Who." He was informed that the wound was not dangerous. The ball had entered the left shoulder to the scapula, and then glanced downward four or five inches into the muscles, where it was cut out. The Chinaman took chloroform as meekly as a child, and smiled blandly after the operation was performed.

YOUNG FOLKS.

Ned's Choice.

She has not rosy cheeks,
  Nor eyes that brightly shine;
Nor golden curls, nor teeth like pearls,
  This valentine of mine!
But, oh, she's just the dearest,
  The truest and the best;
And one more kind you will not find
  In many a long day's quest.

Her cheeks are faded now;
  Her dear old eyes are dim;
Her hair's like snow, her steps are slow
  Her figure isn't trim;
But oh! and oh! I love her!
  This grandmamma of mine;
I wish that she for years may be
  My dear old valentine.

Moppet's Valentine.

"Oh! oh!" said Moppet, with a sad little sigh. "I wish I'd have one. I never had one 'long's I've lived—not an honest truly one, you know."

"Yes, I know," said mamma, smiling. She had been reading Moppet a nice little valentine story from one of Moppet's own papers, which somebody was kind enough to send her—a story of a lovely valentine that one little girl sent another little girl to make up friends again.

"I shouldn't think she could have been mad any more, should you, mamma?" asked Moppet, eagerly. "'Cause 'twas so pretty—all posies and everything! Don't you s'pose 'twas orfle pretty, mamma?"

"I wouldn't wonder, dear," mamma answered, putting down the paper and taking up her work. But Moppet wasn't through yet.

"Did you ever see one, mamma?"

"Yes, dear, a long time ago; but it wasn't like that, I guess."

Moppet looked sober.

"I didn't ever much as see one, only what you made, mamma," she said. "I didn't even see a boughted one."

That was very true, because in the little out-of-the-way town where Moppet had lived ever since she was a baby, people never thought of such a thing as sending a valentine. I don't believe, if you had shown one to Mr. Prime, who kept the village store, he would have known what it was, even.

So there were none to buy. If there had been, Moppet's mother would have bought one—one that didn't cost too much. And it was quite too late to send for one now.

"I guess you'll get one next year," said she.

But next year was a long time off, and the thought of what might possibly happen then wasn't much of a comfort to Moppet.

"I wish I could to-morrow," she said, soberly.

Mamma didn't believe she could, but you wouldn't have caught her saying so. She smiled, and began counting the stitches on the heel of Moppet's little red stocking.

Just then Mr. Frazer took his pipe out of his mouth. Mr. Frazer was a tin-peddler man, who often stopped for dinner, and sometimes for an after dinner smoke. He was a very pleasant looking man, Moppet thought, and he almost always brought her an apple or a piece of candy when he came.

"So you never had a valentine, eh?" he asked.

"No, sir," said Moppet, bashfully.

"And never saw one? Well! well! now that's a dreadful pity!"

Mr. Frazer's eyes twinkled. Was he laughing at her? Moppet wondered. But before she could quite settle the matter in her own mind, she heard a little tap at the window.

"Oh, it's Dovey Diamond!" she cried, forgetting for the moment everything but her pretty drab and white pet outside. "And he's come after his dinner."

So Moppet opened the window, and got a handful of crumbs, and fed the dove half of them, and left the other on the table.

And nobody but Betty, the cat, saw Mr. Frazer put those crumbs into his great-coat pocket when he was ready to start. And Betty didn't tell; though maybe she wondered what he meant to do with them.

"Good-by," he sang out to Moppet, after he had harnessed his gray horse into his red pung. "Look out for the valentine, now."

And then Moppet felt very sure he was laughing at her, and she hated dreadfully to be laughed at.

But the next morning she had something else to think about. Dovey Diamond didn't come to his breakfast.

He didn't come to his dinner, either.

"Where do you s'pose he is, mamma?" asked Moppet, the tears just ready to fall. "He's always come before every day this winter. O mamma! do you s'pose somebody's e caught him, and baked him in a p-pie?"

"No, no, dear; I guess not."

"Then where is he, mamma?"

"I don't know, my child."

Then Moppet curled herself up on the lounge and had just begun to cry in good earnest, when "Tap! tap! tap!" came a sharp little beak against the window. She sprang up, almost wild with joy.

"Oh, it's Dovey!" she cried, flying to the window. "O mamma, come quick! What is that he's got on, mamma? Oh, look!"

Mamma didn't need to look—she knew without looking.

"I guess," said she, smiling, "I guess it's an honest-truly valentine, dear."

That is just what it proved to be.

Mamma let Dovey Diamond in, and untied a silken string which held the large white envelope under his wing. Then Moppet opened it, trembling with eagerness.

"Oh! oh! oh! oh!" she cried, too full of joy to do anything besides scream. "Flowers, the flowers, mamma! o-oh! and that little girl with a wreath on! Where did it come from? I never saw anything half so pretty! O mamma! mamma!"

And would you believe that that foolish little Moppet began to cry again with her arms tight round her mother's neck!

"I s'pose it's 'cause I'm so glad I don't know what to do," she said, beginning to laugh next minute. "O mamma, who do you 'spose sent it?"

Mamma knows, or think she does, which is quite as well. She thinks Mr. Frazer could tell more about it than any one else.

And Betty knows, too,—she knows what Mr. Frazer meant to do with those crumbs.

But Moppet hasn't begun to guess yet.

"Whenever my wife scolds me," said a hen-pecked toper, "I go right straight and liquor.

German Superstition.

As a rule Germans are not gamblers; they play sometimes, and when they do they like to win, so there are charms to secure their success. Here is one of them in rough outline. It is by far the most and most blasphemous we have ever heard of in Central Germany—a distinct case of witchcraft, as it seems to us. To the words of the charm, distinctly noted down at the time, we regret that we cannot refer. The receipt without them is thus: Catch a toad on Easter Sunday morning before sunrise, take a piece of wood larger than the toad, and then nail the wretched creature upon it in the form of a cross, hang it on an isolated pole to the sun, thus gradually changing its face with the progress of the day: keep feeding it every now and then with flies; for if it dies before the sun sets your labor has been in vain. If, when the sun goes down, he is still partially alive it is enough; take him to the nearest ant-hill and bury him in it. On Whit Sunday dig up him. If no one has disturbed the hill you will find the bones quite clean and white; put them in a little bag, hang it round your neck, and you will always win in games of chance. This charm is, of course, a violation of every law of humanity and religion; a giving one's self to the devil even more formally than if one signed a contract with him in one's own blood. We could reproduce the words to be used at the different hours it would be seen, impious as our account ever then would be, but the mysteries are caricatured, and therefore violated. The man who employs such charms simply says, "I shut myself out of the kingdom of Christ; all I want is to win at cards." The charm was preserved by an old man who had served in the wars 1813 and 1814. Another man, a comrade of his, to whom he had carried wounded off a battle-field had given him, when on the point of losing his "lucky bag," and told him how to make a new one. The veteran did not know from what district the man he had served; for a day or two had come; his knowledge of the charm itself was evidently incomplete; he protested that he had never opened it: but the bag and the bones were there. A little blue silk bag, worn and frayed, with a name worked upon it that looked like Efza—a girl's name who was living some 90 years ago, we may suppose, who had put a ring, or perhaps a few gold-pieces, her scanty earnings, into the bag, and gave it to her lover before he went away. It was full of a toad's bones when we opened it.

YOUNG RANDALL'S ROMANCE.

Refused Not Marry the Girl He Loved, and Finally Killed Himself.

John K. Randall, aged 32 years, the son of the Baltimore Mercantile banker, died by his own hand early the present morning. Almost at the same hour his father, an inmate of the government asylum for the insane, died from old age and mental exhaustion. Nearly ten years ago young Randall became enamored of a young lady in Annapolis. After a long courtship he was accepted as her affianced husband. The girl was young, beautiful, and wealthy, and Randall seemed devotedly attached to her. Not long after the engagement was announced the elder Randall became hopelessly insane. It was then decided that insanity was hereditary in the family, and young Randall decided to postpone his marriage. No one ever doubted his love for the girl, but, as years rolled by, he showed a morbid fear of marrying her, and thus subjecting her to the possible affliction of having an insane husband. In vain did his friends urge his fine physical condition and freedom from all signs of mental disorder. About eighteen months ago the long engagement was broken off with the consent of both persons, but Randall never again showed the same interest in life. Two weeks ago he received invitations to the marriage of his old love with a young naval officer at Annapolis. This was undoubtedly the direct cause of his taking his life. He shot himself through the heart in his boarding house.

Minerals up the C. P. R.

In the vicinity of Sudbury there have recently been great discoveries of ore of a high grade. The general character of the veins is very much like the lodes of Butte City, Montana, some in Colorado, New Mexico, and other well-defined mining regions. The mineral belt extends across the continent from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, and the veins cross it diagonally, chiefly at points of change of geological formation. The Iron Island vein, of nearly pure specular iron, is at right angles to those containing copper and other metals. The Sudbury vein has been located from lot 5, front lot 4, to lot 3, front of Snider, a distance of three miles, on which eight rich outcrops have already been opened; and on a side line those of Murray, Falconer, and McConnell have been slightly tested, the latter at the southern extremity being very rich in yellow copper and peacock ore. It here turns north-east into the main lode, the most northerly point of which abounds in native copper, grey ore, and some specks of gold. The mixed colored rotten quartz, abounding along the whole of the veins, will probably prove at least as rich as in Montana. The percentage of copper in my selected specimens ranged from 14 to 75 per cent, iron, 50 to 60 per cent. sulphate antimony, and some silver, with traces of arsenic and gold. No thorough tests have as yet been made.

How the Zulus Make Love.

Wooing among the Zulus of South Africa has little sentiment in it. A young girl may have taken a liking to some warrior. She will leave her father's house, and at their will station herself before the hut of the favored one. She will remain perfectly silent, neither asking nor answering questions. If her attentions are favored she will be asked into the hut to stay a week or more. Then he returns with her to the father's home, taking a few cattle along. These are presented and invariably accepted, a sign that the parents are willing to enter into negotiations. The price is fixed and the couple return, and thenceforth are regarded as man and wife.

The Dawn of Worship.

The "dawn of worship" is to be found in the flint hatchets and other rude implements deposited with the dead, as by modern savages, testifying to some sort of belief in spirits and in a future existence. This clearly prevailed in the Neolithic and possibly in the immensely older Paleolithic, period, though the evidence for the latter is at present very weak, and the first object which can be affirmed with any certainty to be an idol or attempt to represent a deity dates only from the Neolithic period, as do the cannibal feasts, which can be proved to have not infrequently accompanied the interment of important chiefs. For anything beyond this we have to descend to the historical period, and turn to early monuments, myths, and sacred books. The earliest records by far are those of the Egyptian tombs of the first four dynasties, and they tell us little more than this, that with a highly developed civilization the idea of a future life was very much that of a continuance of the present life in a tomb which was made to resemble the deceased's actual house, and with surroundings which repeated his actual belongings, while the whole complicated Egyptian mythology of symbolized gods and deified animals was of later origin. If we turn to the earliest mythologies of the Aryan and of the mixed Semitic and races of Western Asia we find them plainly originating, to a great extent, in the personification of natural force, mainly of the sun, on which are ingrafted ideas of family, tribal, and national gods and of deified heroes. Sometimes, as the original meaning of the names and attributes of these gods came to be forgotten, the mythologies branched out into innumerable fables; at other times, among more simple and severe races, or with more philosophic minds in the inner circle of a hereditary priesthood, the fables of polytheism were rejected, and the idea prevailed, either of a unity of nature implying a single author, or of such a preponderance of the national god over all others as led by a different path to the same result of monotheism. The real merit of the Jewish race and of the Hebrew Scriptures is to have conceived this idea earlier, and retained it more firmly, than any of the less philosophical and more immoral religions of the ancient world; and this is a merit of which they can never be deprived, however much the literal accuracy, and consequently the inspiration and miraculous attributes, of these venerable books may be disproved and disappear.

Geographical Changes.

The recent appearance of a new island in one of the Pacific ocean groups illustrates the fact that hundreds of geographers and surveyors have all they can do to keep their work abreast of the never-ending physical changes of the earth's surface. Great Britain employs ten ships and 600 men in its admiralty surveys, and much of their work consists in making new charts of waters that were carefully surveyed from ten to thirty years ago. New surveys along the east and west coast of England last year showed that important changes in depth and other features have occurred since the previous surveys. Navigation charts are likely, after ten or twelve years, to be as valueless for purposes of present information as a last month's newspaper. In addition to the natural causes of shifting river courses, advancing or receding coast lines, and raising or sinking ocean beds, such artificial influences as garbage dumping in New York harbor will help to make the U. S. coast and geodetic survey a permanent institution, with its work never finished.

DIARY OF A BURGLAR.

He Puts Down the Rich Places of Earth as Fast as He Spotted Them.

N. Pollard was arrested at Pittsburg the other night for burglary. In his pocket was found a queer diary and book of reference. The mind of the writer seemed to run on the rich places of the earth. Diamond, turquoise, and gold mines are jumbled up curiously with the residences of many rich men, both native and foreign. The volume, an ordinary looking account book, is prefaced with the statement:

I have thought it necessary to write my name and address, taking into consideration the uncertainty of human life. I was born in Burgessville, Oxford county, Canada (the present residence of my father, Alfred Pollard), in the year (9th of March) 1886, and was christened Norman Clark Pollard.

This is followed by assertions to the effect that in the valley of the Santee River, in Peru, is a great graveyard, very ancient. Also, the statement that Miss Neily Harrison goes to Boston once a month from New York. A personal experience is related as follows:

In the year 1885 it became necessary to go to a hospital. I found that the different nations were represented as follows: Ireland, 18; America, 8; Germany, 5; England, 1; Scotland, 1; Canada, 1; colored, 1

A Cure For Drunkenness.

The Cure of drunkenness is a task with which the regular practitioner has been unable to cope. Nine-tenths of mankind look upon drunkenness as a social vice, which a man may overcome by force of will. Drunkenness is a bad habit, we all admit, in the moderate drinker. In the confirmed drunkard it becomes a disease of the nervous system. The medical treatment of this disease consists in the employment of remedies that act directly upon those portions of the nervous system which, when diseased, cause lunacy, dementia, and the drinking habit. Remedies must be employed that will cure the appetite, for strong drink, steady the trembling hand, revive the lagging spirit, balance the mind, etc. The nervous system of the dram drinker being all unstrung or shattered, must be given a nutriment that will take the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevent the physical and moral prostration that often follows a sudden breaking off from the use of alcoholic drinks. Lubon's medicines may be given in tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Those of our readers who are interested in this subject, should send their address for Lubon's Treatise, in book form, on drunkenness, opium, morphine and kindred habits, which will be mailed free to any address, when stamp is inclosed for postage. Address, M. V. Lubon, 47 Wellington street east, Toronto, Ont. Mention this paper.

"WHAT we need is a whipping-post," remarks the editor of an Illinois journal. He has probably been printing paragraphs from his exchanges without giving credit, and is now conscience stricken. He is not the only editor, by the way, who needs the whipping-post.

AUCTION SALE.—Robt. Watterson, lot 3, con. 12, Glenelg, will sell by public auction on Tuesday the 2nd March, commencing at one o'clock, a large stock of horses, cattle, sheep, &c., also farm implements. Terms, on sums over $5, ten months credit on approved joint notes. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

WE are pleased to know that James, son of Rev. A. Wilson, is recovering his late severe illness—inflammation of the bowels. Mr. Wilson feels very greatful for the sympathy of his neighbors, and especially for the faithful and assiduous attention of Dr. Sproule, whose medical skill and unremitting attendance he largely atributes in the recovery of his boy.

A MAN in the coal region put a little dynamite in a cook stove to remove clinkers. It removed them. It also removed three chairs, one table, the family cat, a 24-hour clock, four dollars worth of dishes, and the stove. The fact that the man was likewise moved, in something of a hurry, will be apt to prevent his mode of removing clinkers of becoming popular.

FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA.—On Tuesday morning, John Mercer and family, John McDuff, Robt. Mordock, Wm. Abercrombie and Jane Hall left this place for B. C. McDuff and Mordock go to fill lucrative situations which they have accepted, and Miss Hall goes to join her brother Wm. formerly of this place, while the others go to farm. We wish them success.

TRYING IT AGAIN.—The date of the end of the world is satisfactorily fixed for this present year of 1886! There is an ancient prediction, repeated by Mostradamus in his "Centuries," which says that when Saint George shall crucify the Lord, when Saint Mark shall raise him, and Saint John shall assist at his ascension, the end of the world shall come. This year it happens that Good Friday falls on Saint George's day, Easter Sunday on St. Mark's day, and Holy Thursday (ascention day) will be also the feast of John the Baptist.

CHOLERA PREVENTATIVE.

In order to withstand Cholera and such like epidemics a perfect purity of blood, and the proper action of the stomach are required. To insure that end, in the cheapest, most available and complete manner, use McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, and Impure Blood. There is no purer, safer or more reliable remedy in existence for indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, etc. Ask your neighbor or any person who has used it. Sold by Hill Bro's. Trial bottle given free. 1

G. M. HASKETT, Esq., and lady is expected home on Friday, after over two weeks tour.

WE understand Mr. Stinson, who is newly married, is going to reside in Markdale.

MR. JOHN WHITBY talks of retiring and becoming a resident of our town.

HOLLAND and Euphrasia council minutes crowded out this week.

MR. MCCULLOUGH, the lawyer, is working up quite a business, and growing popular.

MR. BROOKS, stone mason, has sold his property in Flesherton and is coming to Markdale. Glad to see such men coming amongst us.

TRAINS were delayed about seven hours on Tuesday, by the snow plow leaving the track near Proton Station, and about eight hours on Saturday, owing to snow drifts near Bolton.

OYSTER SOCIAL.—The Oyster Social under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist church, by the young people of the congregation, was held in the basement last night. —What! eat oysters in the church basement? Yes indeed, and drink tea, and eat sandwiches, and jelly cake; lots of good things. I tell you what, those church people don't pretend to fast, whatever self-denial they may practice. Don't blame them either; what harm is there in oysters more than any other kind of soup.—Well, the evening was fine; there was a fair attendance, and a very enjoyable time was spent.

WE are very thankful to the large number who have renewed their subscription so prompt, and trust the number will be greatly increased forthwith. We are seriously considering the advisability of adopting the city plan of stopping all papers, as soon as the subscription has expired, but will not, however, adopt this mode before the end of the present year, and then give all a fair chance. It would save us an endless amount of annoyance, and a great deal of loss, but is a very difficult system to put in force without offending many.

PASS HER AROUND.—The Mt. Forest Representative exposes a Madame De Montford, a fortune telling adventuress, as a dead beat. That's right, brother. By the way, we have a number of dead beat residents who should be "passed around," and we have a strong inclination to give a few such names to the public. They exist on what they can beat out of the unwary, and often remove to fresh fields when they become too well known to borrow, or buy on tick. They have sufficient brass to construct a whole railroad, but it's a miserable kind, more than 99 per cent. dross They lie, prevaricate and make promises to perfection, but will not even try to pay their way.

ARE the people of this school section aware that when they appoint a trustee, he is supposed to, ex officio, look after and convict where found, all parents or guardians, having children between the ages of 7 and 13 years inclusive, who do not attend a public or private school for at least 55 days in each half year. It would seem that this is not known, or why have we so many children running around our streets during school hours. It, however, narrows itself down to this; if it is so, of which there is little doubt, then our trustees are neglecting their duty and thereby leaving themselves open to the "ruthless hand" of the law. Parents should read this carefully and not blame the trustees when they have to pay the piper.

THE WORLD'S BEST.

It is certainly remarkable the wonderful cures effected by West's World's Wonder or Family Liniment. This remedy has not an equal in the world for the speedy cure of Rheumatism, Sprains, Cuts, Bruises and all diseases requiring external application. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Mar.

Glenelg Council.

Council met in the Town Hall, Glenelg, Feb. 6th, 1886, pursuant to adjournment. All the members present; the Reeve in the chair. Minutes of last meeting read and cofirmed. The Reeve presented report as to the Treasurer's sureties which, on motion of Mr. Binnie, secopded by Mr. McCuaig, was adopted and ordered to be engrossed on the minutes.

The Auditors' report was presented and finally audited by the council.

Williams—Lamb—That the Auditors' report, as finally audited by the council, be adopted.—Carried.

Binnie—McCuaig—That the Clerk be instructed to ask for tenders for printing 300 copies Auditors' Reports and 250 Voters' Lists from Grey Review, Durham Chronicle and Markdale STANDARD, and to take the lowest tender, and get reports printed as soon as possible.—Carried.

Binnie—McCuaig—That Adam Turner and John Nichol, be paid $5 each for auditing as per By-law and that they receive $1.00 each for extra services.—Carried.

Binnie—McCuaig—That the Reeve be paid $2.00 for services on committee on Treasurers' Sureties —Carried.

Lamb—Williams—That John Cameron, Reeve of Holland, be paid $8.75 for repairing Townline Holland and Glenelg, as an equivalent to the same am't expended by Holland.—Carried.

McCuaig—Binnie—That Henry Burnett's account for goods furnished to Mrs. Anderson, an indigent be held over till next meeting of council. And that the Reeve enquire whether Burnett was authorized by this Council to furnish said goods.—Carried.

Lamb—Williams—That $5.00 be granted to Samuel McArthur, as charity, he being unable to support himself. The above amount to be paid to Mrs. Annie Glencross for judicious expenditure.—Carried.

Binnie—McCuaig—That the sum of $4.00 be refunded to Alexander Dunlop, being arrears of taxes charged in error, against West part of Lot 1, Mill St. South, Markdale.—Carried.

Williams—Binnie—That this council grant James Atkinson, the privlege to cut a culvert on the Durham road, he agreeing to furnish said culvert to the satisfaction of the commissioner for ward No. 1, and keep it in repair. —Carried.

Binnie—Lamb—That C. W. Rutledge, be paid the sum of $24.63 for printing and municipal stationery.—Carried.

Lamb—Williams—That John Fallis be paid $2 for two cords of wood for use of Hall.—Carried.

By-low 240 introduced and read a first and second time.

McCuaig — Binnie — That By-law No. 240, appointing members of Board of Health, Fence Viewers, Pound Keepers & Pathmasters, be now read a third time, signed, sealed and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

Council adjourned to June 14th, at 10 a.m. then to meet at the Hall.

J. S. BLACK,
Clerk.

HORSEMEN, ATTENTION!

When your horse is galled, scratched or cut, or has an ugly sore, bathe twice daily and apply McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is undoubtedly the finest healing and cleansing application for it. Be sure you get McGregor & Parke's. Sold for 25c. per box. at Hill Bro's. 1

A Flying Column for the North-west.

OTTAWA, Feb. 19.—A flying column, consisting of A and B batteries and a detachment from the cavalry and infantry schools, commanded by Gen. Middleton, is to be dispatched to the Northwest the first week in March. The Indians reservations will be visited.

FLUID LIGHTNING.

All sufferers from the terrible torment, Neuralgia, can be made happy in one moment by a single application of Fluid Lightning briskly rubbed on painful parts, and without using any disgusting medicine day after day with little or no result. Fluid Lightning also cures as effectually Toothache, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Headache, and is only 25 cents per bottle at Hill Bro's. 1

THE FARM.

Notes and Suggestions.

What the Canadian farmers' wives really need is a little more help and less drudgery in the house; less fear of sunlight, and more light work out doors.

There are several kinds of roots favorable for milk producers. The English use turnips almost exclusively, while the Hollanders raise beets and carrots. A judicious admixture would contribute to healthfulness.

A dull eye, a staring coat, an unnatural position in standing or lying, a sluggish appearance, a loss of appetite, or an appetite for unnatural substances—any or these are usually symptoms of something wrong with stock.

Before putting new pork into the barrel, the latter should be thoroughly scalded to remove the impurities and to destroy any germs that would surely affect the pork if not removed. A barrel that has once been used to pack beef should never after be used as a pork barrel. It will be found next to impossible to keep pork sweet in it. But this is a rule that does not work both ways. An old pork barrel is one of the very best for keeping beef.

Perhaps it is not generally known that barley, (like the pine tree) grows all over the world. It is grown alike in Arabia and Norway, and it will vegetate and grow at a lower temperature than any other small grain. It never blights nor rusts, and will make something on almost any kind of land and under any circumstances, though good, rich, dry soil suits it best. It is fine feed for horses and mules, and when cut before it is fully ripe the straw is equal to the best Northern hay.

The first herd of cattle known on the continent of America were brought by Columbus on his second voyage. From these, and from other small herds brought by later Spanish navigators, the wild cattle of South America descended. In 1553, the Portuguese took cattle and hogs to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. The Canadian cattle were introduced in 1608. In 1620 Virginia had 500 head of cattle. The most stringent laws were passed prohibiting the killing of any domestic animal. In New England, cattle were introduced in 1624. It is said that for a time price was regulated by color, a red calf being cheaper than a black one because it was more likely to be mistaken by the wolves for a deer and killed.

The flavor of mutton can be greatly improved by fattening upon the best of food and removing the viscera with all possible despatch after the animal is bled, using care not to cut or rupture the entrails, so as to bring the contents in contact with the carcass.

Many farmers in places where their land is swept by fierce winds find it profitable to plant apple trees in masses large enough to to make a wind-break on the side of the arm most exposed. The apple tree branches low down, and if bordered by a fence four or five feet high on the windward side the ground will be covered with snow almost as perfectly as it was in the original forests.

The use of dried Lima beans as food is increasing, and would be greater if the demand for seed did not always make the price so high in winter and toward spring. They are very rich and much superior to common beans. It is a surprise that the Lima bean is not more extensively grown for market. It needs rich land and a long, warm season, but under favorable conditions will yield twenty to thirty bushels per acre. One of the difficulties in growing Lima beans on a large scale is in harvesting and threshing them. They have to be hand-shelled, but at even lower than the average prices this will pay.

Care of Swine.

As every effect has its producing cause, it is well to ascertain if possible the causes of certain prevalent diseases among hogs. It is now a well established fact that all zymotic or contagious diseases among human beings have their origin in unsanitary conditions and surroundings. The large majority of the aforesaid diseases are rightly denominated "filth diseases!" Doubtless this term is as true in relation to hogs as to men. Pure air, water and food are essential to the health of brutes as well as their masters. Take hogs, for instance, that are kept under a barn where it is constantly dark, damp and filthy; this is a sufficient cause during hot days of summer to develop "hog cholera." No wonder that some hogs, however proof naturally against disease, succumb to such infernal environments! For weeks and months lying in a semi-putrid puddle of filth, constantly breathing the poisoned air, with little or no exercise, the marvel is that any of them can survive till released from their bastile imprisonment by the merciful knife of the butcher! What wonder that some hogs in such pens should occasionally develop a "cholera plantation" from which the cholera microbes go forth on their mission of death through the whole country, attacking in their flight even hogs which are kept in clean pens and have wholesome surroundings.

Would it not be well to have a health commission for animals, and thus compel ignorant and careless men to do their duty in this regard? Hogs should not only have clean pens, but they should have yards, or, better still, lots, in which to exercise their muscles, especially when young. Trichina I am convinced has its origin in an inflamed, gouty, and bactera-hatching condition of the muscular system, induced by a want of exercise in pure air. Suppose a hog does fatten a little faster when deprived of exercise and kept in a dark place? What gain is that if we must eat diseased pork as the result at the risk of our lives? The best pork the writer of this ever put in a barrel was raised and fattened on sanitary principles, even if he did not get quite so many pounds of lard he had pork that was free from the smell or taste of filth and the taint of disease.

Putnam's Corn Extractor

Is the best remedy for corns extant. It acts quickly, makes no sore spots and effects a radical cure. A hundred imitations prove its value. Take neither substitutes offered as good nor the close imitations of the genuine too often offered.

In Portugal the ballot-box is placed between two saints, and a man who knows how to work the saints gets himself elected.

"OLD MAN LUCAS."

Something about the Oldest Man in the World.

When old "Dad" Freeman was buried in Windsor a few days ago, it was believed that the oldest man in the world had been laid to rest. "Dad" was

122 YEARS OLD,

as conclusively proved before his death, and left 138 descendants. Since Freeman was buried some relic hunters have brought forward a man whose authentic record fixes his age at the remarkable figure of 127 years. The proof furnished leaves no room for any sort of doubt. The name of this man is Andrew Lucas. He is the father of P. A. Lucas, who for nine years past has kept a barber shop at 81 Larned street West, Detroit. Mr. Lucas was born

A SLAVE UNDER THE FATHER OF GENERAL JACKSON,

him of "eternal" fame, and was a grown man when the General succeeded to the paternal estate. He remembers the revolutionary war distinctly, and recalls many very interesting incidents of the second war between this country and Great Britain. He declares that it is as distinct to him as yesterday,

WHEN GENERAL JACKSON WENT TO NEW ORLEANS

during that very memorable struggle, when he accompanied the General as his body servant. He describes the cotton bales piled up as a temporary fortification.

Soon after this, at a time when the General was away, Lucas was whipped for some reason and ran away. He remembers very well why he was whipped but does not give the reason. He worked his way slowly north and crossed into Canada at Black Rock on the Niagara River. Andrew Kirby, then Customs Collector at Fort Erie, sheltered him and helped him to cross into the King's domain. Lucas who was killed in the war of 1812 at Queenston Heights. Next he ran on the Niagara River under Captain John Clinch, for whom he worked nine years, and was then discharged by his employer because the latter considered him too old to be useful. Lucas was then 62 years old.

FOUND EMPLOYMENT IN THE FAMILY OF GENERAL BROCK,

FOUND EMPLOYMENT AT KINGSTON.

Lucas soon found employment again, this time at Kingston, Ont., where he married his second wife. His slave wife had borne him seven children. His second and free wife bore him seventeen. One daughter by this union is still living at East Saginaw, Mich. Her name is Mrs. Williams, and she is 71 years old. Fifty years ago Lucas

REMOVED TO BRANTFORD

Ontario. There he got work from the father of Judge Stevenson, of Cayuga. The judge, though now an old man himself, remembers Lucas as a man about 70 years old when he as a boy was going to school.

For 29 years Lucas was a

DRIVER FOR THE EXPRESS COMPANY AT BRANTFORD,

and resigned the place ten years ago for the reason that he was getting along in years and felt the need of rest. He has the frame of a once powerful man, and stands six feet three inches in his stockings. A year ago this month he sawed and split 25 cords of wood for William E. Walling, of Brantford. Up to three years ago he never wore spectacles, and during the summer of 1883, when visiting his son in Detroit, Mr. Lucas read the City Hall clock from in front of the Kirkwood House across the Campus Martius. He then walked without the assistance of a cane, being 124 years old!

This is a most remarkable case of longevity. Lucas is certainly as old as stated and from his appearance to-day promises to hang on for some time to come. This man is probably the oldest person living. He has witnessed the development of the most wonderful era in the world's history, and has personal recollection of all the many great events in the career of this nation.

SOBER MOMENTS.

The best mind cure is to make up one's mind to be contented

Many people mistake stubbornness for bravery, meanness for economy, and vileness for wit.

Depression of spirits, when it is real and when people cannot help it, is not the result of circumstances, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred from a discordant liver – in short, from bodily causes.

There are hundreds of men in this country who spell as imperfectly as the late Josh Billings, yet their names never appear in the papers, as they always manage to fill government offices.

To tell what a man says pay attention to the tongue. To ascertain what he means, pay attention to the eye. To talk in opposition to the heart is one of the easiest things in the world; to look this opposition is more difficult than algebra.

We may be pretty certain that persons whom all the world treat ill entirely deserve the treatment they get. The world is a looking glass, and gives back to every man the reflection of his own face; frown at it and it will in turn look sourly upon you; laugh at it and with it, and it is jolly company; so let young people take their choice.

Suspension of judgment at certain times should be sedulously cultivated. When we remember how frequently complex conditions are involved, and how difficult it is to understand and appreciate these conditions and to accord to each its proportionate value, we may well pause and reflect before committing ourselves to the judgments which prove to be wrong.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

The "elements," according to one of our "funny" contemporaries, are getting into trouble. The first misfortune comes to the Manitoba blizzard. It blew the tail off a mule; but what became of the blizzard afterwards is not known; though it is presumed that it had the wind knocked out of it. The next sufferer was a flash of lightning. It had gone about setting fire to barns, splintering "monumental oaks," and killing men and cattle. It then struck a dynamite can. "That," says the Hawkeye man, "was the most surprised flash of lightning that you ever saw." It hit nothing afterwards.

Cremation is beginning extremely popular in some parts of the United States; but Buffalo clergymen have organized a crusade against the practice. The chief objection to the thing, so far as we can see, is that it might beget a system of spurious pedigrees. One could put any label that he pleased upon a jar and palm the fraud off upon his visitors. He might have a vessel containing some pine ashes, and still have written upon it: "The mortal remains of John Robbins, who came to America in the May Flower, A. D. 1620." One cannot very readily perpetrate spurious legends upon tomb stones. One; for this reason keep to the honest, old-fashioned plan of burying. We do not want everybody's great grandfather to be a U. E. Loyalist or a Pilgrim Father.

Mr. Adam Badeau has been contributing a number of letters to the New York Sun descriptive of the social life of the English aristocracy. He affects to have found much vulgarity among titled folk, and relates a number of incidents in his own personal experience, which we should judge are less intended as rebukes to the manners of Upper-Tendom in England, than as a boast of his intimate friendship with certain Dukes and Duchesses, and other members of our "old nobility." Mr. Badeau's letters may be entertaining to those who desire to get a peep "over the garden-wall of nobility," but all the same they are manifestly the work of a vulgar snob whose personal acquaintanceship with the class whom he describes, in all probability was obtained through an opera glass. We feel quite certain that if some Duchess had condescended to confidential communication with Mrs. Badeau he would have come across the ocean loaded to the eyes with reverence for her order. Criticism such as that which appears in the Sun, is the last thing to which he would have turned his genius.

A Galveston, Texas, dispatch says killing of J. Hanlon, a noted gambler city, has caused a great sensation, ing prominent and wellknown this section of the State. Alderman of Houston, an eye-witness of the makes the following statement: "I hack, drive up in front of Miss De L house. A heavy-set man without jumped out and went into the house. minutes after he came out again and to the driver apparently talked to him. he was talking Crowley stepped up. man without a hat walked into the the other man followed. Jack Hanlon the door. The door was then closed few minutes after I heard the report of tols. Then Miss De Launey opened front door and called for assistance. I over and entered the first door to the It was dark in the room with smoke opened the shutters to let out the and saw Crowley alongside of the stove asked him questions. He could not I examined him and found two bullet in his abdomen. He was not dead, but last throes. A pistol lay close to his hand. I picked up the pistol and saw it was cocked and with but one barrel ed. All the other barrels were discharged. I left the room to see who was the party to the tragedy. In the left room saw the same man, Hanlon, of Galveston lying on the floor of the room with a six-shooter lying next his right hand. I examined the six-shooter and found that was emptied. It looked that way to me. him if he needed water, and he said: "No help me off with my coat and boots. I raise up. I am strong enough yet." then asked me to put him to bed. I put there."

Miss E. De Launey, at whose house tragedy occurred, says "that she had a letter to Galveston by Crowley; that Hanlon arrived in a carriage and that Crowley followed close behind him on foot. He came inside of the house at once. In less than five minutes he went out to the carriage. I looked out of the window and saw Jack Crowley coming up to the carriage. I then went to the back of the house, and soon heard rapid pistol shots. After this Mr. Hanlon came to where I was and said, 'I am shot. He shot first, and for a physician.' He then fell on the floor. I then went to the parlor door and looked in and saw Jack Crowley resting on his elbow. Both have been paying attention to me. I am engaged to be married to the man who lies wounded in the other room."

A responsible gentleman who was on Houston on the same train with Crowley says Crowley said to him that he was on route to Galveston on important business at the same time showing him a small letter which he said had come from a lady the contents of which might result seriously to him or the man to whom he carried it. Next day the same gentleman returned on the same car and in the same seat with Crowley. When Crowley renewed the conversation of the previous evening, he seemed to be more serious than before, and on coming to a man occupying a seat some three in front of them, said that he and that man were going to Houston together and were going to the house of the lady referred to before. This conversation happened on this side of Galveston. When near Houston, Crowley said in a whisper to the gentleman with him: "My mind is made up. I am going to kill him. I want to live. I am made of anyhow. I don't give a d—n if I am killed. Keep this quiet. I have two good pistols on me now." Getting off the train at Houston he said: "Take the battle out of my pocket. I don't want to drink any more. Good-bye if you never see me any more." The man pointed out Jack Crowley was no doubt Jack Crowley as the description given by this gentleman who made the above statement tallied with Hanlon's appearance. Crowley's remains were followed to the grave by a large concourse of people. Hanlon, who has a bullet-hole through his left lung and one in the groin, remains in a very precarious condition, the physicians declining to state the chances for his recovery are.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

THE HOTEL D'ORIENT—STONED IN THE STREETS.

There they were at last indeed, and at the beginning of their worst troubles, only happily they did not know it, for the supremely merciful act of an all merciful Providence is that it permits us no knowledge of the future.

There were plenty and to spare of vehicles standing for hire, and helping Nellie into one Frank instructed the Arab driver to take them to the Hotel d'Orient, which he fancied somewhat to surprise him, perhaps because everybody else was shouting "To the harbor" or "To the mole!"

However, off they went at the full speed of a thin, wiry horses (who knew no pace between a crawl and a gallop) over rutty roads, across logs and puddles, past coal depots and gas works, through flocks of sheep and almost over individual members of the roof, and then through a perfect sea of thick mud again, whilst Nellie, jolted almost out of breath, began to wonder was this ever the Alexandria of "four thousand palaces, four thousand baths, four hundred theatres, twelve thousand shops for the sale of vegetable food alone, a museum where forty thousand students studied and a library containing four hundred thousand volumes." Neither could she picture it as the Alexandria where the most poetical of the historians declares that "the Hebrew literature expanded into Greek under the auspices of the Septuagint, where Cleopatra vanished with her Roman conquerors, where Saint Mark preached the gospel and Saint Athanasius held war-like controversy, where Amrou conquered and Abercomby fell."

But what town in the world shows to advantage from its railway station and when the Mahmudiyeh Canal was crossed by its broad and lofty bridge and the city proper was entered by the Gabari Gate, her sentiments somewhat underwent a change.

She looked then upon a town half European and half Oriental, with large streets well laid down, substantial houses built upon the most fashion, banks, theatres, cafes innumerable and shops the contents of whose plate glass windows would, in some cases, have done credit to Paris, London, or New York, whilst here and there above the roof waved the broad, fan-like fronds of the omnipresent palm, and occasionally, when the breadth of the thoroughfare permitted, they drove through a perfect avenue of carob trees that were in full leaf and blossom.

"It is hard to imagine, Frank, that all danger is not forever past and over when we see these tokens of civilization around us; and despite it all, there every now and then comes to me a presentiment that it is not so and that our greatest perils are yet to be encountered," said Nellie Trezarr, with a shudder that caused her plump and shapely white arms to quiver to the very shoulders.

But her lover could not resist kissing one of them as he rejoined:

"You must not think any such nonsense, darling. It is the natural reaction of your fright that alone causes you to do so, but a cup or two of strong tea and a brief rest will set you all right."

But though the young officer spoke thus trying to reassure her, his heart was by no means as bright as his words, for he noticed how the few natives who were out and about at that early hour scowled at them and muttered under their beards, and sometimes spat on the ground as they passed by them, and one tall Arab actually took up a stone as though with the intention of hurling it at the vehicle, but the next instant apparently altered his mind and dropped it, perhaps fearing that he might injure the property of a brother Moslem instead of striking the unbelievers inside.

Ah, here at last is the Rue de la Colonne Penchee, for all the streets have a French nomenclature in Alexandria.

The two-horsed caleche has drawn rapidly up at the door of the Hotel d'Orient, and Pat Monaghan, springing off the box, runs down the steps, and then gives a military salute and grins at the near prospect of a good breakfast, for a certain aroma has already attacked his nostrils, which, ascending from the region of the kitchens, would have caused Pat to grin under almost any circumstances.

As one was found to be ample accommodation at the hotel, so Frank Donelly ordered the bedrooms and a private sitting-room, dispatching his man to seek his own quarters and to see that he had everything which he required or fancied, a command which Pat felt very much like obeying with alacrity.

Five minutes later Nellie and her lover found themselves most comfortably quartered.

Their sitting-room commanded a cheerful view of the street, a fine and indeed almost noble thoroughfare, and here a tempting little breakfast was daintily served, but though Frank was as hungry as a hunter, Nellie was still too excited and agitated to do more than drink cup after cup of tea and nibble a little dry toast between whiles.

"Now, my darling," said Frank. "It strikes me that it will be an economy of time to do two things at once, namely, to eat our breakfast and discuss what is to be done immediately afterwards. What I would advise you to do would be to go to bed and try to get a little sleep, or failing that, at all events rest, whilst I look after the two essential necessaries, a parson and a bride."

"Oh, Frank, can you not depute both duties to others? You must be so tired."

"Not a bit of it. A pretty soldier I should be if I suffered such trifles as we have been through to master me. Of course to a young and tender girl they presented a very different aspect. Besides, Nell, have you not read me what you wish to be done well you had better do yourself!"

"Yes, yes; but if you leave me, Frank, I shall tremble. We are not out of danger yet. The little French chambermaid, Marie, is too afraid to go out shopping for fear, because there have already been so many outrages upon Europeans in the streets, and, worse still, because every day of late one or two white girls have mysteriously disappeared, and nobody can discover what has become of them. She declares in her pretty way that the Europeans in Alexandria stand on the brink of a volcano, and that at any moment an eruption may occur and overwhelm them."

"The more reason, my darling, that we should marry and make off before Marie's volcano does begin to misconduct itself. By Jove! perhaps a parson may be found without even going out of the hotel. Alphonse! Just touch the gong, my dear; it stands at your elbow."

Nellie did as she was asked and the next minute the French garcon entered the room.

"Alphonse, is there any kind of a clergyman staying at the hotel?"

"No, monsieur; but zare is ze church close by—ze Eglise Sante Eustache—and ze first messe would be just commencing."

"Would you have any objection to being married in a Catholic chapel, and by a Catholic priest, Nellie?" asked Frank, abruptly.

"On the contrary, I should prefer such a wedding to any other, for the Catholic is the only religion that raises marriage to the character of a sacrament, and through remembering how our Saviour honored it by choosing it as the symbol of the indissoluble union between Him and His church, declares in the words of Holy Writ that 'what God hath joined together no man dare put asunder;' no, not even the judge of an iniquitous divorce court."

"Well Nellie, my opinion exactly coincides with your point, and as the little church is close by, suppose that we ask Alphonse to be our guide thither, and take Pat Monaghan to give you away, as the saying is, and act as a witness. You would not object to a common soldier doing so, eh?"

"And if I did, Pat Monaghan is a most uncommon soldier, and so the objection could not apply to him, and I'd as soon be given away by Pat as I would by a duke, or even a prince of the blood, for he possesses honor, courage and fidelity, and they take precedence of rank and riches."

"Pat would be a proud man if he heard you speak thus of him. Well, then, Nell, if you cannot buy, borrow something to throw over your lovely shoulders, and we will try to get into the church before the first mass is over."

"I dare say Marie will lend me something that will do," and Nellie Trezarr hurried out of the room to her own.

In a very short while the party of four were hurrying along towards the little church, Pat Monaghan's lips going as though he was muttering preliminary prayers, whereas he was simply finishing his breakfast, a pleasing occupation whereat he had been disturbed.

It was now a quarter past eight o'clock in the morning, and even yet there were not many people astir in this, the essentially European quarter, of the city.

Despite this fact, however, the wedding party had not proceeded very far when some mischievous Arab gamins, who seemed to be performing the duties of chiffeniers, began to stone them from a safe distance and curse them for infidels and unbelievers.

At this hostile demonstration Alphonse pointed out the church, and turning very pale, declared that he dared not stay away any longer from his work, and immediately made a most undignified rush back to the hotel.

But Frank Donelly, Nellie Trezarr and Pat held on their way, taking no notice whatever of their assailants, who were all of them happily very bad marksmen, and in another three minutes the church afforded them at all events temporary safety.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

MARRIED, AND ALMOST MURDERED.

It was a beautiful little church, and it was tolerably well filled with ardent worshippers, for it is no trifling peril that will keep the Catholic from the gospel of his God and the place where His glory dwelleth.

It being low mass, the entire service was performed in impressive silence, so that a pin might almost have been heard to fall.

A quarter of an hour after our trio had entered the chapel the solemn service was ended, and the congregation, bowing a knee to the altar as they quitted their seats, began reverently to file out of the chapel.

It was then that our three friends walked slowly forward toward the altar, and up to them soon came a priest; not the one who had said mass, but an older man, and in low tones inquired of them what they wanted.

When Frank told him he was somewhat embarrassed, since it was a strange thing for two who were not Catholics to come to be married in a Catholic church. So he asked them to accompany him into the sacristy, in order that they might further explain themselves, which Frank Donelly there did with such earnestness and force of pleading that the priest made no further objection, but conducted them back into the chapel and there donned his vestments and at once commenced the service.

It was a very solemn and impressive one, and the saint-like looking old man gave them some very good counsel when it was ended, so that they quitted the sacred building more impressed with the seriousness of the joint responsibilities they had undertaken and the blessedness of the God-hallowed state which they had entered into than if the ceremony had been performed in any other.

Then they passed forth into the open air again hardly realizing that they were now man and wife, so like a dream was it all, nor did they even try to realize it for long, since other matters soon necessarily engrossed their attention.

The half hour or so they had spent inside the church had made a great difference in the appearance of the streets, say as vast a one as the seashore presents at high and low water, or in Winter's storm as contrasted with Summer's calm.

The burning sun of Egypt now glared down as though it hungered to scorch and consume everything that it bathed with its dazzling brightness, and it seemed to have called into life on this occasion swarms of noxious reptiles in human form that as a rule make their habitations in darkness.

For, as a flooded river overflows and inundates a plain, so the native population seemed to have overflowed and inundated the Frankish quarter of Alexandria, where, as a rule, they never appeared in anything like numbers.

Loafers, and idlers, and vagabonds they seemed to be, and less determined on present mischief than on taking stock as to what they could do when they deigned to set themselves in earnest to the task, for their gaze was greedily bent on the contents of the windows and in through the doors of the banks.

Dirty, half naked and sore-eyed were the majority of these wretched beings, but amongst them were not a few Egyptian soldiers in red tarbouches and soiled linen uniforms, who seemed to be on leave, mingled with yash-macked women in blue cotton chemises and mahogany-hued children sans chemise or shirt and looking as much like young imps or demons as it is possible to conceive.

This crowd of humanity sauntered to and fro, and up and down, in a listless sort of way, in company with yelping and mangy dogs and those little detatched swarms of flies that always attend upon native gatherings.

To Frank Donelly's dismay he could see no other Europeans about save themselves, and, as though they anticipated some danger or unpleasantness from the native invasion, shop shutters were being hastily put up, though they had not been for more than an hour taken down, banks and warehouse doors being closed and so on.

They themselves were so situated, however, that the nearest available shelter was the hotel whereat they were stopping, but the shortest way to reach it was across an open space that by a stretch of imagination might have been called a square, and the question was should they make a quick dash across this, with the almost certainty of drawing attention upon themselves in the act, or should they take the longer route around by the houses and trust to apparent unconcern and non-provocation for safety.

The latter course being decided on as the safest, albeit that their danger and suspense would be continued for at least a couple of minutes longer, away they went, Captain Donelly especially cautioning Pat not to let his innate love for a row get them into a scrape, but to bear any insult or even indignity rather than afford the mob an excuse for murdering them.

"Faith then I'll turn 'em cheek an' cheek about for the smiting till yer honor an' yer honor's wife is safe as safe can be, and thin, by the mother ov Moses, I'll take it out of the nagurs with Jew's interest, I will."

"You must bide a bit longer than that, Pat, for we can't spare your services, and you would assuredly get killed if you provoked these murdering thieves to attack you. Now come along and keep your hot blood well iced."

Pat nodded assent, though his eyes were ablaze and his nostrils quivering with excitement, like those of a thoroughbred horse.

Had not the habit of military obedience been strong in him, there is no knowing what he would have done, for the mob had already begun to curse and make faces at the three Christians, and some of the naked gamins to even throw mud at them.

Frank Donelly endured all this with smiles, as though it was highly complimentary and wondrous entertaining as well, whilst Nellie tried to smile and look unconcerned also, though she did not very well succeed.

For she had noticed that the male Arabs all carried sticks of such formidable appearance that they well deserved the name of clubs, and furthermore wore their long knives thrust in their belts and so fully exposed to view, instead of underneath their blue cotton outside garb, as usual, and she felt sure that clubs were not carried and knives so ostentatiously displayed for nothing.

But the hotel was very near and they would gain its shelter in another minute at the most.

Why, half the journey was already accomplished without any serious mishap.

Nellie was comforting herself thus when all at once an Arab woman, taking a fancy to the coquettish and gay-colored half cloak, half jacket which Marie, the French chambermaid, had lent her (chiefly to conceal the fact that her dress was a very low cut and almost sleeveless evening one), sprang forward and with a quick clutch tore it off her shoulders and away from her grasp.

Nellie thereupon shrieked, imagining that this was the commencement of an attack, and the shrill cry, coupled with the exposure of so much of her glossy, heaving, palpitating whiteness, at once drew hundreds of eyes upon her.

But not in love or admiration, for a brown skin is considered by the lower class of Mohammedans as the acme of beauty, and a white one a disgrace, as marking a descent from the first murderer, Cain, who they declare was once brown like themselves, but turned white from excess of terror when God asked him what he had done with his brother, Abel, wherefore they think that all Europeans have Cain for their progenitor.

On this account Nellie's most exquisite bust and full, fair, rounded arms were far from calculated to win their homage or even their forbearance.

A big hulking boy, whose heart, had it been human, should have beat with an intense and till then unknown joy at the sight, picked up a stone and cast it at her, the missile striking her on the breast with a dull thud that caused her in an instant to feel faint and giddy.

A howl of horrible significance went up to the blue heavens.

There was a simultaneous rush in her direction, and dozens of long bony arms and lean crooked fingers seemed to shoot out toward her at once, not greedy to be blessed with a momentary touch of her yielding, glossy smoothness, but to scratch, and rend, and tear that exquisite white flesh of hers.

At the sight of the furious face and the outstretched arms, Nellie shut her eyes and clung wildly for a few minutes, whilst her snowy and dimpled shoulders upheaved themselves almost to her little pink ears, as the shoulders of the young (whether pretty or otherwise) are always prone to heave when their owner is in momentary expectation of a blow.

Despite the danger and the horror of their position, Frank Donelly could not help pressing with his lips the one that was nearest to him, but he lost not a moment over the (even under those circumstances) ecstatic delight, but, twisting her around, he shielded as much of her back as he could with his left arm and outspread hand, and whipped out his sword, vowing in his choicest Arabic that he would lop off the first hand that approached her.

"An' bedad, I'll levy contribution on the second, third an' fourth, an' so on until I've taken one for every finger on me two hands," shouted Pat, as he followed his master's example.

But happily the flash of the two drawn swords was all that was needed to make the scores of savage Arabs recoil, whereupon Pat exclaimed in accents of scorn:

"Move on yer honor, move on. Sure an' the shadow of our blades is enough as yet to clear the way, and the way ain't a long one, please the pigs."

Frank Donelly saw the truth of the remark.

"Nellie, darling, slip behind me and we'll do it safe enough, sandwich fashion. You'll be the ham and fat and I the bread, and thus mustered I'll be hanged if the Arabs shall give you any more pepper. Now, now, before they fish their courage up out of their shoes again."

He helped to sling her around as he concluded, for she was very faint and feeble.

She could manage to do what required of her, however, and the distance was only a matter of two score yards now, so though several missiles were hurled they all fell fortunately on her companions, between whom she staggered up the hotel steps, and the instant the door was opened reeled inside and would have fallen ere the great door was closed and barred, had not her husband caught her in his arms.

EMBRACED BY A BOA.

Experience of a Keeper who Bath'd the Monster Snakes.

A little while since, says a writer in the St. James Gazette, I was examining some snakes in a certain collection, meanwhile gossiping with the attendant. In the collection were several fine specimens of the beautiful gold and black boa, and also of the black and white spotted boa. I found the keeper a very intelligent man, and some little information I was able to give him led him to ask me whether I had ever seen the snakes bathed. Now, I knew that it was customary to give these creatures an occasional bath, to keep them healthy and preserve the skin pliant and the colors fresh and clear, but I had never had an opportunity of witnessing the operation. Gladly, therefore, I accepted the offer. In a little time a moderately large tub, half-filled with warm water, was placed upon the ground, and my attendant and another man stripped off their coats and waist-coats, turned up their shirt sleeves to prepare for action. The first case contained four boa-constructors varying from eight to sixteen feet long. The keeper opened a small door in the end of the case, and then sliding back the glass pannel at the top, put his hand boldly in and ran his hand down the back of the nearest reptile, which moved from beneath his touch toward the open door. As passed the door he seized it with his right hand firmly around the neck, and dragging the body quickly out caught it five feet or so lower down with his left hand, the other man taking the remainder and closing the little door. The reptile "squirmed" a good deal as if objecting to such handling; but was quickly deposited in the tub, the keeper retaining his hold of the head and fore part of the body. As the water touched the snake a perceptible quiver ran through it; for a few seconds it coiled and uncoiled itself forcibly, dashing the water about, and then seemed to settle down to placid enjoyment of the bath, struggling no longer, allowing itself to be slowly moved about the tub.

Ticklish work, it seemed to me, and the keeper rather assented to that opinion. "You see one is apt to get careless; but so long as you are cautious it is simple enough. I remember well the first time I tried it. I was then at M—— and the regular keeper was taken ill and died. The day for bathing the snakes came round, and no one could be found to do it. Two days went over, and then I thought I would have a try. I had been feeding them for a year or more, and was pretty well used to them. Well, we filled the tub, and I got through with the job all right, and was soon appointed head keeper of

THE SNAKE HOUSE

Time went on; I fed and bathed the creatures regularly and got a little careless over it, and so it happened that one day I did not look after my man to see that he fastened the little door properly after we had one in the bath. On this particular day, too, he forgot to bring the change of blankets with him, and I never noticed it until I had one of the smaller snakes in the bath. As soon as I did notice it I sent him post haste to fetch them. The one in the bath was only about nine feet long; so when he had been in the water long enough I lifted him out, intending to put him in a square case and wait my man's return; but as I raised him I felt something around my right leg, and, looking down found the little door was open and that a fourteen-foot boa was out and had got a half-turn round my thigh. Of course, he had to be stopped; so I let go of the body of the one I was holding, and by a fortunate shot grasped the other just below the head. The one in my left hand had coiled his body round my arm, and, soothed by his bath, was quiet and comfortable; but the other was taking up all my spare time. He wriggled and twisted until I could scarce hold him, straining the coil round my thigh very tightly. He had also given a turn of his tail to my other leg, so that I could not move a step. However, there was nothing to prevent my calling out and I did it; more especially because the door of that case was open, and there were three more inside. My man might be five minutes gone, and I had to keep up as best I could. The worst of it was, while the beast got his hold nearer and nearer to my body he would almost out of my grasp, turning and twisting without ceasing. My fingers ached, and my wrist felt like breaking, while the circulation in my leg nearly stopped. Presently the feeling came over me that I did not mind much how it ended, and felt inclined to give up there and then. In fact, my fingers were relaxing when I heard a step outside, and my man came in. A glance told him, the state of affairs. He had the one off my arm and into the case in the twinkling of an eye, and then between us we got the other gentleman loose and boxed him, and then—well, there were no more snakes bathed that day. We kept it very quiet, and up to my leaving M—— it never oozed out; then my man was made keeper and he let it out. You can imagine it was a lesson to both of us that will last some time."

The keeper looked immediately at the reptile in the bath, no doubt recalling the sensations of that afternoon. "Fifteen minutes, sir!" said his assistant, breaking in upon his reverie. The keeper rose and lifted the snake from the tub, the assistant taking the hinder half. The reptile seemed quite torpid, and when they laid him on his clean blanket allowed them to wrap him up and deposit him in the case, where after a lazy look around, he withdrew his head under the folds. A slight rise and fall could be seen as he finally settled himself, and then all was motionless.

I stopped and saw the rest of them go through their ablutions, but there was little variation and no excitement, and so, thanking the keeper, I came away.

The Dance of Death.

A doctor of my acquaintance told me the other day of the case of a young woman who is one of the dancers in "Adonis." She appears in tights as do all the dancers in that play. These tights are pulled on with the greatest care so as not to show a wrinkle, and are held in place by a narrow leather belt which is strapped around the waist next the skin, and pulled so tight that the girl is almost cut in two. She cannot do the pulling herself; it has to be done by another person; and when it is so tight that she is ready to drop the tights are tucked under it, and thus kept in position. Then she dresses and goes upon the stage and dances. The consequence is that she has a terrible internal disease which can never be cured while she is playing this part, and she cannot afford to stop playing it, for she is the breadwinner of a large family. The doctor argued with her on the subject, and that if she kept on she would kill herself, and then the family would have no one to work for them, and would not have the money to bury her with. She admitted the truth of what he said, but added that all the other girls were in the same condition, and that they had to take their chances. She might not die if she went on dancing, and she certainly would starve if she stopped. It is not only the girls who dance in "Adonis," but the girls who dance anywhere, who have a very hard time of it, for there seems to be no way of holding up the tights than this process of strapping. They might be fastened over the shoulders in some way, but then, as the girls have to wear the necks of their dresses low, that is impossible.

A Very Remarkable Story.

A gentleman tells one of those stories that few people will believe "without seeing it." He says that he was out fox hunting, and when the chase was at the height of its excitement his horse ran into an old well thirty feet deep. The horse was instantly killed by the fall, but the rider was unhurt. The walls of the well had caved in at the bottom a distance of three or four feet, and the gentleman says this prevented getting out by digging footholds. Realising his situation, he began to call for help at the top of his voice, but no assistance came. He was compelled to remain in the well all night, and the next morning the stench arising from the dead carcass of the horse was anything but pleasant, and he noticed that buzzards were soaring over the spot. Finally the buzzards began to alight in the well, and it was then that a bright idea struck him. He decided to catch the buzzards by the leg as they came down until he got a sufficient number to carry him out. That he did, and when he caught as many as his hands would hold, he "shewed" at them and they flew out, carrying him out of the well.

But still the fox hunter was in a dilemma. The buzzards flew up so rapidly that he could not turn loose when he reached the top without falling back in the well. Upward the buzzards flew with their human freight, and the fox hunter began to despair of his life after all. When about 100 yards above the ground the fox hunter was just about to let go and fall when he was struck by another bright idea. He decided to loose one buzzard at a time until his weight would pull them downward. Acting upon this plan, he was soon landed safely upon the ground.

Prince Bismarck's hatred of the Poles is so great that Germans are forbidden to intermarry with them in those portions of the Empire where Polish sentiment seems to the Chancellor to be aggressive. If one were to read in a novel that such an edict had gone forth in the nineteenth century in an enlightened country and from an enlightened statesman he would be inclined to say that the author was an ass. But truth is ever stranger than fiction.

The new Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Earl of Aberdeen—John Campbell Hamilton Gordon—is the 7th Earl, was born in 1847, succeeded to the title in 1870 on the death of his brother George, whose life was full of romantic passages, including a temporary disappearance, during which he passed as a common sailor. The late Lord Aberdeen succeeded to the title in 1864. In 1866 he embarked in a sailing vessel for St. John, N. B., and during the voyage volunteered to take the place of a disabled seaman. The occupation took hold of him, and he made several short voyages under the name of George Henry Osborne, was licensed as mate in New York in 1867, and as captain in 1868. In 1870 he shipped from Boston to Melbourne as mate of the schooner Herd, and on this voyage he was swept overboard and lost during a storm. During all this time the family knew nothing of his whereabouts, as letters he wrote to them had miscarried.

MARKDALE FEBRUARY 25 1886

S. S. ANNIVERSARY.

A pleasant and successful anniversary was held in the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening. Wm. Brown, Esq., superintendent, occupied the chair, and gave, in a forcible and clear manner, the object of Sabbath Schools and their necessity and relationship to parents and the public. The school rendered their part very well indeed, and maintained excellent order throughout. Revs. Wilson and Casson gave suitable addresses; Mr. Bowes also made a few appropriate remarks, and Mrs. Brown gave an excellent reading.

A very pleasing part of the entertainment was a

from the school and congregation to the organist, Miss Wilson.

The following address was read by Mr. A. McFarland:—

Markdale, Feb. 23rd, 1886.

To Miss Wilson:

DEAR FRIEND,—You have for a number of years very faithfully and very acceptably filled the office of Organist in this Church. The office, we know, is a difficult and laborious one, requiring an almost superhuman amount of patience and perseverance, and in order to gain the success to which you have attained, it must have been necessary for you to sacrifice a great deal of your time and attention.

The unfaltering interest which you have taken in this part of our Church work, together with your willingness to assist in everything undertaken by either the Church or Sabbath School, has endeared you to the hearts of this congregation, and they feel that it is beyond their power to adequately remunerate you for the very valuable services you have rendered them; but, as a recognition of these services, and as a token of our estimation of your kind efforts, I beg to present you with this purse as a just recognition of our indebtedness to you.

Your faithfulness and constancy has set as an example which is worthy of being imitated by every officer and member of this Church, and our sincerest wish is that you may be long spared as a blessing and example to us in the future as you have been in the past.

Signed on behalf of the members and adherents of Markdale Presbyterian Church.

MRS. GEO. GRANT,
ANDREW C. MCFARLAND.

Miss Wilson briefly replied, and Rev. Mr. Wilson, on the part of his daughter, supplemented her reply with a few well chosen remarks, and expressing the pleasure it gave him to know that his family were in a measure useful in church work, and that their efforts were appreciated.

This brought to a close a pleasant and profitably spent evening.

NON-PARTIZAN PAPERS.

We are beginning to understand the political whereabouts of the Flesherton Advance; not from the paper generally, but from the editor's articles directly on the point. We must confess having misunderstood and misquoted him in a recent issue, but take it all back.

The Advance then being a loyal supporter of the present Government, and the editor affirming that the STANDARD has an equal claim for Government patronage with the Advance, then why do we not get that patronage? and again we ask, why?

The Advance further states that we were once neutral, but are now independent. Well, that is brought about by habits of industry and economy.

ASSESSORS DIFFICULTIES.

The Assessors have a great many questions to ask and particulars to note, and the people from whom those statistics are to be ascertained are just as varied in their disposition and manner, as well as their ability and willingness to answer.

The followieg dialogue, which took place last week, will perhaps better explain some of those difficulties: one of the questions to be answered is the age of the head of the family, and in this case there was but one in the household and she was a female. She was intelligent and apparently well to do, and was sole proprietor, and the genial assessor made out all right until it came to her age, when the question was put:

What age are you?
I don't know.
How old do you think you are?
Indeed Sir, I couldn't say.
Well, you will have some idea?
Indeed I haven't. I was once in court, and on my oath I couldn't tell. Well do you think you would be sixty?
O, surely I am not that old.
Would you be twenty-five then?
Well, surely I am more than that.

The assessor was completely puzzled. She had a good mouth and a fine set of excellent teeth so that even from that source there was poor hopes of ascertaining her exact age.

Another place he called, on a young man this time, the young man was, however, married, and when the question came, was there any births during the past year? the modest man hesitatingly replied, y-e-s.

More than one?
Y e-s.
Was it twins?
Y-e-s, it happened to be.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Independent Newspapers.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—It is quite amusing to notice the editor of the Advance wriggle and twist, upon the political status of his paper.

Its editor is possessed of a remarkably poor memory.

If he will turn back in his files, he will undoubtedly discover (not so long ago) that he avowed the paper to be Conservative pure and simple.

He forgets too, that the persons chiefly interested in establishing the paper, fully understood its principles to be Conservative out and out. No doubt an appeal to them would fully confirm this statement.

He forgets that, because of its political caste, the Advance was placed on the Government list for patronage; this also can easily be verified. And when therefore the Advance says, "We did not, and never did, say it belonged to any party," he simply commits a grave error, and imposes on the intelligence of its readers.

And when he says: "he gets a share of the Government patronage, and it does not by any means necessarily follow that he 'belongs' to that party," he expresses an anomaly, certainly not understood by the party. It indicates a "Wolf in sheep's clothing"—a "running with the hare and hobbling with the hounds."—It declares an amphibiousness of the pure type.

But it is well the Conservatives know just where to place this editor, who cuts such a sorry figure in his wriggling upon the definitness of the terms "Neutral" and "Independent."

The Advance desires to be both, and yet to please his large circle of Conservative friends, tries to make believe he is Conservative.

If the editor were qualified to deal with great political problems, and by strength of its logical reasonings, caught the ear of Sir John McDonald and Ed. Blake, there might be some force in his assertion, of reserving an "individual right to censure, &c.," but as it is with no such articles in stock, the paper is politically inert; and therefore such utterances are the consummation of silliness.

I have nothing to say, Sir, regarding the status of your paper; all I can do is merely to re-assert that the Advance has grievously somersaulted, or else is preparing to do so.

If through his refined hair-splitting I have committed an error, and not apprehended him, then I would say to the Advance editor, the less twaddle he writes on such a subject, the less ignorance will he expose. His expressed opinion on the great Statesman, Sir John McDonald, is quite in keeping with the rest of his unintelligible announcements.

CONSERVATIVE.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

AMONG THE CHURCHES ON SUNDAY LAST.—In the Methodist church in the morning the Rev. Dr. Sutherland delivered a very impressive Sermon on behalf of the Missionary cause. The Rev. Dr's address was plain, practical and full of gospel truths and was listened to with wrapt attention by the large congregation present. In the afternoon the Rev. Mr. Hall of Feversham occupied the pulpit in the Presbyterian church and delivered a most excellent and practical Sermon. In the evening Dr. Strongman of Dundalk preached in the Methodist church to a large and apreciative audience.

Success was written on every part of the Brass Band and Glee Club Concert, given in the Town Hall here on Friday evening last. The house being crowded to the doors with an attentive and appreciative audience, gave inspiration to the performers. The programme was lengthy and well sustained. The Brass Band rendered well, a large number of choice selections, and never before appeared to better advantage. The Glee Club did good work and sustained their part of the programme well, to the end. The operetta by, the Glee Club, assisted by Miss Ayers, entitled "Barber of Bath," was well played and fairly brought down the house.

On Monday evening the Missionary meeting in the Methodist church, owing to the very inclement, weather, was but poorly attended; but to those present a rare treat was given. After the singing of a hymn, prayer was offered by Rev. W. Casson when Mr. G. S. Bowes of Markdale was called to the chair. A brief Missionary report by the pastor, followed by an excellent address of about 25 min., by the Rev. Mr. Casson who dwelt upon Mission work and enterprise generally. Mr. Casson in one of his happy movements thrilled the audience by his words of love and burning eloquence. Next followed Dr. Sutherland who, for about one and a half hours, with the simple Missionary story kept his hearers in ecstacy. At turns the faces of all illuminated with a smile and even laugh; in the next moment melted to a tear. Time was so limited that Rev. Dr. had but time as he said to stumble over parts of his address; but that given was quite enough to repay all who wended their way to the church through the blinding storm. Some most thrilling incidents in connection with some of the lives of our noble christain hearted self-sacrificing missionaries were told, we feel sure warming the hearts of all present and setting the affections of many more upon missionary work. During the whole address the Dr. was frequently interupted by the applause given Dundalk.

From our own Correspondent.

Large quantities of ties, paving timber, etc., are being brought in.

Rev. Dr. Strongman and Rev. J. W. Mahood, have received an earnest invitation from the Quarterly Board to return a second year to the Dundalk circuit.

One of our townsmen, in the provision business, is said to be an adept at healing breaches between espoused ones. Natural of course: the more weddings, the more groceries will be wanted.

There was a report to the effect that our bank was broken into, or an attempt made to do so last week, but, we believe it was nothing more than a boy's snowball that broke the window. It being after dark, it was natural that the brave defender should appear at the breach with revolver in hand. So it is reported. The treasures are all safe.

The Dundalk Gospel Band went to Hopeville last Thursday evening and report success.

J. R. Oldfield, late partner with D. O. McQuarrie, talks of going "ome" to "Hingland" shortly. The Band boys will miss James. The Band has made good progress, and become more popular under his management.

Miss Henderson, the third teacher, began her duties last week.

Rutherford Bros. have re-oped their photo. gallery.

Mr. Plewes, Sr., of Markdale, has leased the oatmeal and flour mill.

Action is being taken to secure the annexation of the Old Survey of Proton to the township of Melancthon.

New Railway Project.

[From the Owen Sound Times.]

Among the railway bills now before the Legislature there is one that will be of special interest to the people of this section of country. It is a bill to charter a line to be called the Lake Huron and Georgian Bay Railway, which is proposed to be built from at or near Southampton to Meaford. The new line it is expected will start at either Southampton or Port Elgin, on the Wellington, Grey and Bruce Railway, will cross the Stratford & Huron at about Allenford, and from thence proceed to Owen Sound, crossing the C.P.R. here, and then go on to connect with the Northern at or near Meaford. It is not often that in such a short distance (about 40 miles,) a line can be built tying together the ends of four systems of railway; and besides the benefit it will be to the country en route by bringing railway communication to their doors, it will give the places on each of the present railways, which have now only one outlet, practically access to four, and open up communication for them with sections of country they have no means of reaching now, except by staging, or by such roundabout railway journeying as to be out of the question. A glance at the map will show that for Southampton, Wiarton, Allenford and other places this will open up really the shortest route to Toronto and places east; while to the whole western peninsula on the lines of the Wellington, Grey & Bruce, Stratford & Huron and places west of Stratford on the Grand Trunk, it will give direct communication with the port of Owen Sound and the C.P.R. steamers in the summer, and with the main line of the C.P.R. via the new Pacific Junction road in the winter. On the other hand it will give Owen Sound and Meaford access to the whole western country served by the Stratford and Huron and Wellington, Grey and Bruce and their connections. To reach Stratford or London now from Owen Sound, a person has either to make a stage journey to Allenford, or to go all the way around by Orangeville, Mount Forest and Palmerston, while many go down to Toronto direct and then take the main line of the Grand Trunk or Great Western for the west.

Mr. Frank Turner of Toronto is the chief promoter of the new line, and we understand he expresses his determination and ability to work out a scheme for its construction when he gets the charter through. There has never been before the Legislature a line of equal length possessing more or greater advantages than this one.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

The liver secretes bile to move the bowels; the kidneys secrete urine, to carry off uric acid, which would poison the blood; the stomach secretes gastric juice to digest or dissolve the food, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters acts upon these organs and purifies the blood by cleansing all the secretions of the system.

C. O. O. F. Concert.

Cascade Lodge of C. O. O. F., Walter's Falls, gave their annual concert last Friday evening and tho' the night was stormy, the hall was chock full and the entertainment a grand success.

Mr. Patterson, of Blantyre, was voted to the chair, which position he filled with marked ability.

The Owen Sound "Glee Club" were present and gave five or six pieces which were well received; Misses. Norton of Holland sang sweetly; Miss Lemon of Owen Sound capped the house. W. J. Benson of Markdale was on hand and paralyzed the audience with comic songs and recitations, while Jas. Henry of Markdale, Ventriloquist, made the audience believe there was a man freezing to death in the cellar.

Everything went off excellent and all left satisfied and whispering--"that's the best concert ever given at the Falls." Proceeds, $45.00. COM.

Markdale Cheese Factory.

On the 30th of January last the patrons of the above named factory met in the Markdale House, Markdale, to receive report of business during the past year, and to appoint Directors and officers for 1886.

It was shown by Secretary's report that the factory was in operation 137 days, and manufactured 922,894 lbs. of milk into 90,205 lbs. of cheese, which sold at an average of 8 cents 3¾ mills per lb. Expenses for manufacturing, teaming, salaries, &c., amounted to 2¼ cents per lb. nearly. A statement being asked for, by a patron present, showing the relative result of cheese and butter manufactured at current prices during the season. Cheese was shown to net a handsome profit to the patron over butter, and at the same time saving the labor and expense of making and marketing butter.

The Auditors reported the business of the factory in a very satisfactory condition, and commended the President and Secretary for care and diligence in the discharge of the duties pertaining to their office.

The meeting received the report as highly satisfactory and unanimously ordered its adoption and engrossing with the minutes.

The following officers and Directors were then elected for the ensuing year:—

B. Coleman, President.
H. D. Irwin, Secretary.
Thos. Boland, Patrons' Auditor.

DIRECTORS:

Route No. 1, Wm. McLoughry.
" 2, John Whitby.
" 3, Shepherd Boyce.
" 4, James Wright.
" 5, John Richardson.
" 6, Wm. Brady.
" 7, George Richardson.
" 8, John Hutchinson.

THREATENED DANGER,

In the fall '84 Randall Miller, of Maitland, N. S., was prostrated to his bed with an attack of incipient consumption. Cough remedies all failed. He rapidly grew debilitated, and friends dispared of his recovery. He tried Burdock Blood Bitters, with immediate relief, followed by a speedy cure.

AN AGE OF DISCOVERY.

We certainly ought to appreciate the fact that we are living in an age of progress and discovery, this is especially appreciated by all persons that have been afflicted with Rheumatism, as West's World's Wonder or Family Liniment is a positive cure for Rheumatism. It is invaluable for Cuts, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, and all diseases requiring external application. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Feb.

Bee Farming.

Some bee-keepers in this country and elsewhere are in the habit of sowing the seed of noxious weeds in order to get a supply of bee-pasture. This is a mischievious practice, and persons guilty of it should be visited with a severe penalty. There is no lack of varieties of flowering grasses, plants, etc., to furnish pasture for bees, whose culture or growth are free from objection on any score; and some are worthy of cultivation for other purposes as well as for the honey they afford. Among forest trees the basswood, or linden, gives in its flowering season, an excellent and plentiful yield of honey, and in some localities bee-keepers have set out large plantations of it for the sole object of providing for their bees. Small trees of this variety may be obtained from any good nurseryman and, being rapid growers, they commence to bloom in a very few years.—[Rural Canadian.

WEATHER PROBABILITIES.

The probabilities are that we shall have much damp, chilly, sloppy weather during the coming season—just the weather to contract sudden colds. Be prepared for them by having on hand Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, a safe, agreeable and speedy cure for colds and their consequences.

THE FAITH CURE.

This new theory of cure is rapidly growing in fashion but is illogical in reason and science. Faith without works is dead. Those who have faith in Hagyard's Yellow Oil have its good works to assure their faith. It is an unfailing external and internal relief for aches, pains, lameness and soreness.

The American Agriculturist for March, 1886, opens with a full-page engraving of the Monarch of the Shorthorn Herd. This is followed with nearly one hundred full page and smaller illustrations, of the noted brilliant Percheron Stallion; Hampshire, South Down Sheep, Celebrated Brahma fowls, original and modern Jersey Cattle, Poultry Houses, Farm Houses built at moderate expense, Serviceable Barns, Pig Pens, and Insects Injurious to Vegetation. The Horticultural, Household and Children's Department, are profusely illustrated. All the engravings are accompanied with original articles by recognized leading writers, among whom are Seth Green, George Thurber, D. D. T. Moore, Andrew S. Fuller, Col. L. S. Hardin, Mason C. Weld, F. D. Curtis, and a large number of others. The full page paper on American Seeds and Seedsmen, by Dr. F. M. Hexamer, will be found valuable by all persons interested in this industry. One of the leading features of the American Agriculturist this year, are Seth Green's papers on Fish Culture. With these plain and simple instructions, every man can raise his own fish on his own farm. $1.50 a year. Single number 15 cents.

JOYFUL NEWS.

It is certainly glad tidings to the poor invalid to be informed of a remedy that will give prompt and sure relief in case of painful suffering. Such a remedy is Hagyard's Yellow Oil, adapted for internal and external use in all ordinary aches, pains, lameness and soreness. It cures rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, croup and all inflammatory pains.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Dability and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, France or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N Y.

YOUNG FOLKS

What it Was that Woke Rob Barkham Up.

"Oh-h-h!"

It was Rob Barkham whose big eyes made you think of soup plates, and his mouth, now open in wonder, suggested a third. "Soup plates!" Very little soup or food of any kind had Rob tasted in the last twenty-four hours, but just now under the sign, "J. Blodgett, Birds Mounted and Animals Stuffed," he saw such a wonderful sight that it almost made him forget his hunger.

"Pij-jins, see 'em! Can stand all day, and a whole year, I guess, too, on one leg!" exclaimed Rob. "Ducks, owls—don't know what the next be—squirrels, and oh, my! Don't I wish I could get in that door?'

Looking in past the door half-open, he saw a deer that turned soft, staring, big eyes towards him, and a fox with its sharp little nose, and an old brown bear that had such a surely, ugly look. A boy's curiosity can't stand everything. It was too much to expect that Rob would stay outside this shop. Stealing forward into this marvelous collection, conscious that a hundred birds, fifty squirrels, several deer, a dog, a lamb, two monkeys and the above brown bear directed strange looks of wonder at this invader who dared face them in their seclusion, Seclusion? Who was it that bobbed up quick as a Jack-in-a-box and scowled across a counter? A funny old man, carrying in one hand a swan, sightless now, but in a minute to be supplied with as fine a pair of glass eyes as could be bought in all the city.

Rob started. He did not expect to see this wonderful menagerie His heart beat wildly. He felt cold, hungry, wretched. An air of business returned to him. He was no longer Robert Barkham, the sight-seer and boy of leisure, but Robert the place hunter and boy of business, who did so want to find somebody who would hire and give him a job.

"Who—who—what—you want?" demanded the old man with a fierce air.

"Could—could—you give me something to do?" asked Rob in hoarse, solemn tones.

The old man shook his head and Rob hurried to the door. How disdainfully looked bird and beast!

"Can you stick a swan's eye in?" shouted the old man, following Rob to the door.

His boy heart leaped up in hope. Could he? His heart went down. Oh, no, he couldn't! Once he made a mistake and put out the cat eye's with a stick. Alas! that cat's eye never went in again, and what could he or any boy be expected to do with a swan's eye? Rob shook his head and murmured:

"N-n-o, sir."

"Humph!" muttered old Mr. Blodgett. "How did ye expect ye could without larnin'? You come in this way, and let me see what you can do."

Rob did not see the old man's face. He only saw the back part of his head as he preceded Rob. The old gentleman was very bald, and Rob was thinking if nose and mouth and eyes were marked on the back of his head how stern he would look. If Rob could have seen the other side of his head! Just the pleasantest face in the world! Old Jonathan Blodgett was saying to himself:

"I ought not to have scared the little feller so, jumpin' up behind that counter at that rate. Dear me! To see how his face changed! I wonder when 'old Blodgett' will stop bein' a boy! Never, Mr. Blodgett, never!"

"Do you think you can give a swan an eye, if I give you one to start with, a good glass eye, say?' asked the old man. The problem of the swan's eye was now different.

"Might try," said Rob, timidly, hardly daring to hope.

Jonathan Blodgett watched the slender, lithe fingers, with their quick movement, as they inserted the bit of glass and gave the swan his sight, such as it was.

"I'll try you for a week," said the old man.

Oh, such joy as that occassioned in the Barkham household! They were so straitened in their circumstances that food had been given out by the crumb-measure. On the strength of Rob's good luck Mother Barkham sent out at once and engaged of the butcher a big mutton bone for broth. At the end of the week Rob was established in Jonathan Blodgett's employ, and soon made nothing of making even a dead bear's eyes look as lively as a bruin's running in the woods.

"I like my new boy," thought Jonathan. "If he jest proves to be honest!"

Honest? He meant to be. He was tempted one day. Rob's old pants would tear in the knees. In a week his mother intended to buy new ones. But he did want them at once, and a dollar would place on those troublesome knees a new covering. One evening, while doing extra work, furnishing several owls, eagles and canary birds with eyes, he chanced to see a dollar on the bench near him.

"Take me!" the dollar seemed to say.

How Rob did want that dollar. He was firm, though.

"No!" he said, resolutely, gaping at the same time, for he was very tired.

"Take me!"

"N-n-o!" replied Rob, nodding now. In a little, though, he began to waver.

"I'll take a peek at that dollar," he softly said, rising for a closer view; I'll just feel it," he concluded. How nice the feeling that powerful dollar!

"I'll—I'll——"

Here, what an outcry was raised by all that bewildering crowd of birds and beasts in the shop! A hen began to squawk, a duck to quack, a goose to hiss, a monkey to angrily chatter, a lamb to bleat in terror, a watch dog to bark, while the bear growled and scowled, looking as if he would make a mouthful of the thief. In addition to all this, a voice was shouting, "Rob!" It sounded like a dreadful voice.

Rob opened his eyes, and there was old Mr. Blodgett, not thundering in terror, but saying, pleasantly:

"Guess you got asleep, Rob. I must not keep you longer. Ah, there is a dollar I left on the bench. I am glad to see, Rob, that you are honest. I ought to give you suthin' for the extra work, and I won't keep you waiting for the extra pay till payday. You take this now."

Oh, the delighted Rob!

Before another night came those troublesome knees were duly shingled.

VARIOUS TOPICS.

Among the table ornaments at a late yacht club dinner in Toronto were two boats chiseled from blocks of ice, one filled with champagne and the other with claret cup. An ice dolphin with a bottle of champagne in his mouth was another decoration.

A Main farmer astonished even the natives by his ingenuity in keeping warm. On the forward part of his sled was rigged a small tight shanty, in which were a comfortable seat and a hot stove. Two small holes admitted the reins and a pane of glass let him see whither he was going.

Canadian lumber dealers are now glad to buy the black walnut fence rails which farmers split and used as they would any other timber twenty or thirty years ago. The long exposure has seasoned the wood thoroughly, and it is valuable as material for chair legs, spindles, and other small articles.

In Norway it is believed that wolves are frightened away by telegraph lines It is said that however hungry a wolf may be he will never go into a spot that is enclosed by ropes stretched on posts. Since the first telegraphic line was established, twenty years ago, wolves have never appeared in it's neigborhood.

A writer in the British Medical Journal advises people to be careful not to slice up a pineapple with the same knife they use in peeling it, as the rind contains an acid organic substance which is likely to cause la swollen mouth and sore lips. In Cuba sat is used as an antidote for the poison of pine-apple peel.

St. George's Church, Berlin, consecrated on the birtnday of the Prince Imperial of Germany, is almost as much an American as an English institution. The reredos, alms dish, and lectern are the gift of Mrs. Sidney Everett, wife of the late Secretary of the American Legation, whose father was Edward Everett.

The farmers of Virginia, and especially those who are members of the different agricultural societies, are preparing to move on the Legislature for appropriation of $15,000, to be devoted to the estaolishment of agricultural experiment stations at the three principle colleges of the State which are now supplied with an agricultural department.

William Rowley and a gang of men were working in the gravel pit of Biddeford, Me., when a cave-in began. All managed to jump out except Rowley, who as he was caught by the falling gravel, threw his shovel as far as he could. This act saved his life, for every other shovel was buried by the slid; by working with Rowley's shovel and their hands the men dug him out, not much hurt, but very badly scared.

W. R. Williamson, being held up, robbed and bound by California bandits near Colfax, the other day, complained bitterly as the robbers were making off with his $100, and said it was pretty mean to leave a man without a cent. "That's so," said the chief of the gang. "Here's a couple of five-dollar pieces. It isn't every robber that would do that much." And putting the money in the victim's pocket they disappeared.

An English stage manager is said to have invented a method of preparing a stage army without the use of too many supernumeraries. He has eighty wax heads carefully modeled, and these were fitted on dummies of wicker work clad in suitable uniform or armor. Each "supe" in the company carries two of these figures attached to a sort of frame-work, so that it seems as if three warriors were marching abreast. As this army marched past with all the paraphernalia of war the audience was completely deceived.

Washington Territory thinks treating is a bad custom, and an Anti-treating bill has passed one branch of the Territorial Legislature. It prohibits any person from treating or entertaining "gratuitously any other person or persons to or with spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, or any other beverage whatever, in any public bar-room, saloon-beer hall, or grocery in this Territory, in any other public place of resort or amusement," If the bill passes it will cost a man from $5 to $25 to treat a friend there, not including the price of the drink. Nothing is said about cigars.

Hudson Stiles went to the boarding house kept by Mrs. Gilkinson, in Rochester, Ind., and demanded lodging. He was drunk and boisterous. The landlady suggested that he pay for previous lodging. He made an insulting answer, and the angry woman promptly knocked him down with the poker. He was carried to the hospital and died, and the Coroner's jury acquitted Mrs. Gilkinson.

Once in a while a good idea comes from Philadelphia. The latest is the establishment by a few sensible women of a place where, according to their advertisement, "Bachelors and other unfortunates" can have done "darning, patching, and all kinds of mending done." Here's a chance for some women of business in Canada to make a fortune by establishing just such a mending establishment.

In Mexico the morning newspapers are sold in the streets the night before, for they go to press about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The Sunday morning papers are sold Saturday night, and there are none ready for Monday, so that in Mexico there is no Sunday newspaper work done and no Sunday newspapers; but just where the moral advantage comes in even a long sojourn in Mexico fails to make plain.

The Norwegians in Minnesota have introduced their peculiar snow shoes there. The shoes are made of strips of hard wood, about ten feet long and six inches wide, slightly turned up in front. They are fastened to the foot at about the middle of the shoe. The wearer slides over the snow, not trying to lift the shoes, and carries a pole with which to keep his balance. Since the big snows of this winter these shoes have been almost the only means of locomotion in Dodge country. It is not unusual to see something like half a cord of shoes piled in front of a store, within which their wearers are shopping.

A young woman of Columbus, Ga., about to visit the generating station of the electric light company, was told to leave her watch at home lest it be magnetized by the strong electric current. She did so, but complained afterwards that her watch would not keep good time. She sent it to a jeweller, but he reported that it was not magnetized and kept good time. Still, whenever she carried it her time was too slow, although when she left it in her room it ran correctly. A gentleman who knew of the circumstance suggested to the young lady that she wear another pair of corsets when next she carried the watch. She did so and had no further trouble with the watch. The steel springs in her corset had been magnetized

A recent writer in the Atlanta Constitution tells this unique story of Tiger Tail, the Seminole chief: "A sewing machine agent drifted into his dominion one day and set up a machine in Tiger Tail's tent. The old chief with great deliberation watched him put it through its pace. He then arose, brushed the agent to one side, and, seating himself, adjusted his feet in the treadle. He started the wheel and found that he could make it go. He sewed up one piece of cloth and down another, and then gravely and critically examined his work. At last he appeared to be satisfied that it was all right. He then turned quietly to his wives, who had watched the proceedings with interest, and kicked them, one after the other, out of the tent."

The Happy World.

BY C. T. G

Do you know I believe some people think
'Tis a crime to be merry and gay?—
The hours we spend in enjoyment or fun
Are sinfully frittered away?
To dig and to delve, to work and to weep,
They think is the lot of mankind;
And thro' the whole course of their long weary lives
Not a moment for pleasure they find.

Ah, well! 'tis a blessing all don't think as they;
What a sad dreary world this would be!
Our time taken up with labor and sighs,
Not a moment for innocent glee;
No time to appreciate half the good gifts
Bestowed by beneficent heaven,
No heart to enjoy the fair beauties around
That God in his goodness has given!

Now, really, I wonder do they ever think
Why earth is so beauteous and fair?
If life's what they deem it, why was not the world
Made gloomy and ugly and drear?
I'm sure we'd exist if never we saw
A flower, if never we heard
The song of the brook and the breeze, and the lay
From the throat of a rapturous bird.

Ah, yes, yes, indeed! this old mother earth
Is a dear blessed place after all;
Tho' many dark hours we all must endure,
Fight battles, have many a fall
On our way as we travel, 'tis yet worth our while
Just to live if we only believe
That we are put here to enjoy God's good gifts,
Not only to work and to grieve.

The purse had better be empty than filled with other folks' money.

It is considered a breach of etiquette to give your seat in the horse car to a poor working woman if a fashionable young lady is standing,

A LEGAL MIND.

Grandpapa (trying to be severe): NOW, MABEL, TELL ME WHY YOU DIDN'T PUT THAT QUARTER I GAVE YOU INTO THE PLATE AT CHURCH THIS MORNING. I LIKE TO SEE A LITTLE GIRL GIVE CHEERFULLY AND "NOT LET HER RIGHT HAND KNOW WHAT HER LEFT HAND DOETH."

Incorrigible Granddaughter (who is saving the money for candy): THAT'S JUST THE TROUBLE, GRANDPA. MY RIGHT HAND THOUGHT MY LEFT WAS PUTTING IT IN, AND MY LEFT HAND THOUGHT MY RIGHT WAS, AND SO BETWEEN THEM IT DIDN'T GET PUT IN AT ALL!

HOME, SWEET HOME.

BY THE REV. DR POTTS.

There is no spot of earth's surface where home has more significance than within the bounds of this Dominion of Canada. As an institution, the family stands first in the front rank, and is vital to the church and the state; indifferent home-life is seen in indifferent church and national life. There is something very interesting in the founding of a new home. It is a matter of interest far beyond the two young hearts that have become one in purpose, one in love, and one in their plans of life. It is a matter affecting citizenship, morality and religion. Therefore, patriots and Christians are interested in the home-life of their country. I want to have a chat with the readers of this paper upon home-life in Canada. We should all resolve to make our homes the brightest places in all the world. There should be something in home that could and would induce all of us to sing, when we turned our feet in its direction, whether from school, or from business, or from social visiting, "Home, Sweet Home." But what is home? It may be a castle, or it may be a cottage. The cottage, upon the whole, is the more likely place to find a model home. Home does not depend upon wealth and high position, nor is it necessarily connected with moderate circumstances. It may be the precious heritage of all classes of society. The mechanic may have as much of it as the millionaire. The farmer has as good a right to it as the princely merchant. The newly-wedded couple, whose home is but a rented tenement, may enjoy it as well as the family residing in the brown stone mansion. Home is not conditioned upon rich carpeting, magnificent paintings, luxurious living, and a well-established place in what is known as society. There may be all these and no home. There are great houses and you might as well look for the warm atmosphere of home in an ice palace, as in such houses. There are certain conditions absolutely requisite to constitute home, and these are within the reach of all. It will be worth our while to examine them, and then look at our home life, and see if it be all that it ought to be, and if not, resolve to go on unto perfection. Model home life must be founded and conducted in respectful love and mutual esteem. If these be wanting, whatever else may be, there can be no true foundation for a delightful home. Where these essentials exist, home life is sure to flourish, bearing flowers and fruit unto happiness.

Another essential of a true home is politeness. Why should politeness be confined, as it often is, to the circles of society How is it that some men are noted for their polite attention to all classes outside their home, while within them they are noted for harshness and severity, not only to their servants, but to their wives and children, Society men in society, but tyrants at home. Why is it that a young man is regarded as a model for young men among his lady friends who is absolutely unobliging to his mother and sisters? Politeness shines nowhere with such radiant lustre as in the daily intercourse between husband and wife, parents and children, and employers and servants.

How essential is home sympathy, and how beautiful it is. The world is cold and heartless. Selfishness seems to be almost universal. It is seen in all classes of business, in all the walks of professional life, and its chilling presence penetrates even the church of God, Every human being needs sympathy, its look, its touch, its word, soothes, comforts and nerves for renewed action in life's toil and warfare. Home without sympathy, how repelling, how desolate, and how often it has sent men to clubs and saloons, to drown their worry, and at least for a time forget their perplexing circumstances.

But there is another aspect to the picture. The wife and mother may be in as great, need of sympathy as the husband and father. That delicate woman with her sick child, or her wayward child, or her incompetent servant, may be as much exhausted as the man of the house. Let the sympathy be mutual.

The husband says to himself, in the midst of his disappointments, "Well, I shall have rest and sweet sympathy at home." He involuntarily says, "Thank God for home." During the day, while husband is away toiling for the support of his family, the busy housewife looks forward to the evening hour, not because the day's work is done, but because her other self, who is in such accord with her, shall come to the dear spot where he delights to be and where she longs to have him be.

I plead for a cheerful, happy home. Let it be so to the children, and let it be so to all who come under its roof. Let the meal hours be free from all fault-finding, let pleasant topics be discussed, and try each to please the other. Let the evening hour be made charming with reading, music and general conversation. Make sons and daughters feel there is no place like home. I must conclude but not before I write that the crowning glory of home is piety. "Show piety at home." How delightful is the home music of family praise; how fragrant is the sweet incense of domestic worship; how comforting is the unobtrusive, but all-prevading spirit of a true and beautiful Christian discipleship. It is the bond of perfectness in family life. Every home represented by the readers of this paper may be such as I have described in this article.—Toronto Truth.

GLINTS OF HOME LIFE.

BY ANNIE L. JACK.

"I think of all meals breakfast is the most cheerless," said one housekeeper to another lately. And her companion replied, "It is the pleasantest meal of the day in our house, but then we have a sunny window that faces the east." I though how much of the secret lay in the sunshine that helped to make the people cheerful and happy. A dark room is neither conducive to health nor good temper, and if both are gloomy, the first thing in the morning, there is not much comfort for any one while the day lasts. A summer morning breakfast with windows open and fresh, cool air, the table spread with china and crystal, and tempting food, with flowers and fruits such as the season brings, is the perfection of enjoyment. I always pity the breakfasts of olden times, when beer and salt fish or a chop of beef made the chief feature of the breakfast, which they ate at a board that spurred

HEALTH.

Diet in Disease.

BY A. ARNOT, M. D.

r hopes of progress in the prevention ure of disease lie more in the direction estigation of its causes than the dis- y of specifics. Heroes as great as any never faced a shower of bullets, have ked the bodies of those who died of ious diseases, with this object in and enough has been accomplished in line to raise the most extravagant for the future.

there is a large class of diseases although not so fatal, are yet the of a great deal of suffering and im- ment of usefulness, in which we do not equal progress. We have made vast in the study of disease, in which we trace the causative agent to his lair, him and feed him, and breed and his habits, and discover his vulner- points; while in various affections their cause in the conditions of day life, we have advanced little the days of Abernethy.

rtment among these conditions is the we eat. When we consider the in- of the food on the flesh and products lower animals, may we not infer the influence of our food on the caus- and cure of di-ease would be very ! Indeed, even in the vegetable it is well known that a tree fed on soil will produce healthy, well-de fruit; while that of its neighbor, has been fed on some badly-drained will be small and frequently spotted disease.

derations such as these suggest that may sometimes be a cause behind ious germ, and without which it not be able to survive. It certainly the importance of a careful study daily bread.

purpose of this paper is merely to that several disorders of the system their origin in the consumption of nitrogenous food than the constitution rcumstances of the person require, and quently that the regulation of the t of albuminous food consumed, fre- ly constitutes a valuable and definite peutic resort.

r food may be said to consist chiefly ten, starch, fat, and sugar; and it seem evident that the first principle tics should be the knowledge of to increase or decrease any of these nts. A great deal has been done in line, but much still remains to be ed. The effects of diet in the treat- of diabetes, Bright's disease, scorbut- , prompt the hope that the treat- of disease by a skillful regulation of may be still further extended, and corresponding decrease in the use of ful drugs may ensue.

we inquire what becomes of any excess ed taken into the system beyond its rements, we find that if an excess of or starchy food be taken, it may be ited as fat. If too much saccharine be indulged in, it may be deposited r carried off as a temporary gly- ; but an excess of albumen has no outlet. It demands a plentiful supply ygen to fit it for elimination; and if, gh sedentary habits, diseased lungs, her cause, this be not forthcoming, the l is flooded with offensive matters h all the emunctories of the body are fficient to remove. The breath from ings under such circumstances has a y odor, the skin becomes dark-colored, conjunctiva yellow or muddy, with all vessels engorged. The prophet Daniel ured long ago these truths; and it be that if vegetarians had set them- to discover the precise conditions call- for such a diet, rather than going to an ed extent, they might have conferred benefit on humanity.

shall now, as shortly as possible, men- a few clinical facts that seem to sup- the theory that too much albuminous sometimes produces disease.

y attention was forcibly called to this er when studying certain forms of cranis. Some of these, I noticed, completely cured by a diet from albuminous food was almost entirely ded, and instead of the patients' run- down and becoming weak, in several nces they gained in weight and gth. In one instance the patient gain- fourteen pounds in a short time after change of diet. Of course, outdoor ise might have answered the same e, but that is a prescription which obvious objections.

spasmodic asthma and bronchitis, I there is no therapeutic measure that give greater satisfaction than lessening amount of albuminous food consumed. affections are sometimes curable by measure alone, even in cases where hereditary tendency thereto is distinct- rked. I might cite several such cases, let one suffice.

r. S. was very asthmatic as were also of his brothers. His children, when young, were severely troubled with monic bronchitis, and I was often sum- ed in the night to some of them who suffering from that affection. This on two or three years, and I frequent- ndered if it must continue during whole lives. In truth, it had gone on ing the greater part of the life of the r, who was now a pretty old man. ly, I requested them to try the experi- of feeding their children chiefly on and cereals; and from that time I was ly ever summoned to any of them for a ar cause.

ulousness, when accompanied with a skin, tense arteries, and a deposit of tes in the urine, is very much benefited this measure. Of course, the opposite of cases are met with, where an ex- ted system calls for rest and generous shment; but well selected cases will found to yield very satisfactory results. Bright's disease, whether acute or nic, the diet should not include albu- food. The reasons for this are so that no further reference need be to it.

ul breath, not due to any local affec- will frequently be cured by this diet out the aid of medicine. Not long ago ung lady with a vigorous appetite for food, and who had become a ce to the rest of the family on ac- t of the foul breath, was entirely cured this simple means.

I might easily extend my list of diseases, and relate more cases that were cured in the same way after medical treatment had failed; but enough has been said to show the drift of my opinion on this important subject.

This very morning a young man, an asthmatic patient of mine, called to tell me that one month of this diet had done more for him than all the medicine he ever took; that during the month he had only tasted meat once, and that night he had symptoms of the return of his old trouble.

There is an absurd notion prevalent that a person will grow weak under this regime; so far is this from being true, that I have had patients gain several pounds in weight. Get weak, indeed, on a diet which has produced so many splendid Scotchmen and Irishmen, and enables the Arab to travel from fifty to sixty miles a day, and undergo the greatest hardship!

Albuminous food is a true stimulant, causing increased vigor and power of endurance, and the want of it is certainly felt by the patient; but we must not take sensations for reality, nor the patient's feelings as our guide in prescription. Nor must we forget that if more coal is put into the furnace than is completely burned, the grating will become choked with too much waste.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

When the meeting had been duly opened the Secretary announced the death of Brother Gilmartin Cox, of Mississippi.

Samuel Shin moved that a resolution of condolence be forwarded to his wife.

Sunset Jackson moved that Paradise Hall be closed for the space of thirty days.

Pickles Smith moved that some member be selected to deliver an eulogy on the dead brother's character.

"Why all dis 'citement ober de death of a member?" asked Brother Gardner, as he looked up and down the aisles. "We knowed de dead brudder as a poet an' a leckturer. We can't tell whether his wife am grieved or rejoiced. We doan' know whether he was strictly honest or a great rascal. He may hev had a tender heart, an' he may hev bin a brute in his ways. He may hev bin sober an' lawabidin', and he may hev bin a hard drinker an' a lawbreaker.

"Befo' deliberin' an eulogy on a dead man we ought to be posted as to what he was in life.

"Moas' grave-stuns am silent liars.

"Moas' eulogies contain four falsehoods to one troof.

"Moas' of de tears shed fur de dead outside our fam'lies am worked up by a fo'ce-pump.

"If a man am honest an' upright de fack needn't be placed on his grave-stun to make people remember it.

"If a man has had charity—if he has bin forgivin'—if he has airned de reverence and respect of men an' women, you kin leave his grave unmarked an' it will be hunted out an' remembered.

"De usual emblem of sorrow will be tied to de doah-knob fur de space of ten days, but beyand dat pint it will not be prudent to venture."

BRANCH LODGE REPORT.

The Branch Lodge at Findlay, O., made the following report:

FINDLAY, O.

Secretary Lime Kiln Club.

The Plum Duffs, No. 3, "Findlay branch of the Lime-Kiln Club," held their monthly meesing at the Gas Well Hall, Saturday night at 12 o'clock, the new hall having been completed since the December meeting.

The meeting was called to order by Damascus Joy, Chairman. After roll call the minutes of the last meeting were read by Headlight Peters, Secretary.

Treasurer Anthony Smith moved that an assessment of $10 a head be levied to replenish the treasury. He said that he expected to pay a visit soon to his cousin in Canada, and might need the money. Motion not seconded.

Poker Winterson was called upon, and delivered his lecture entitled, "Natural vs. Sewer Gas." He was tendered the receipts of the collection hat, but declined, saying he preferred the hat.

Maj. J. Sly having been detected digging a tunnel from his cellar to the street to tap the gas mains was fined $104 and suspended for four months.

The election passed off quietly. Township Marston being elected over his competitor, Bony Carruthers, by a majority of 16 votes. He was immediately escorted to the chair and seemed very much at home. One-eyed Orinson was elected watchman for the ensuing year and Perpetual Motion Barker was elected doorkeeper.

The derrick having been removed, and thereby putting an end to the lookout, a motion to build a watch tower was carried, the necessary glue to be raised by a lecture by Midnight Sorkins at $5 per ticket on his renowned subject, "Sure Things." Jack Plumstead was authorized to have posters printed announcing the same and to send free passes and complimentary tickets to the officers of the Lime Kiln Club.

Applications for membership were received from seven brothers, and they were laid over for the Februray meeting.

A huge wreath bearing the motto of the order, "Keep in the middle of the road," was received and placed over the President's chair.

Doughnut Henderson arose to make a motion and was fined $5 for not having on the leather medal voted him at the last meeting.

President Township Marston, after requesting each member to be on hand early at the next meeting, sang an old plantation song, which so affected him that he released all the fines imposed and dismissed the meeting.

Respectfully submitted,
HEADLIGHT PETERS,
Secretary.

On motion of Givesdam Jones the report was accepted and placed on file.

INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

Whalebone Howker announced that he had received a postal card from Indiana, to the effect that Prof. Featherweight Smith, of Kentucky, who started for Detroit two months ago to deliver an address before the Lime-Kiln Club, was in jail. He had been arrested on suspicion of being a horse-thief, but was as innocent as a child three weeks old. He fondly hoped and expected the Lime-Kiln Club would at once take the necessary steps to secure his release and clear his reputation.

"Does you wish to make any moshun in de case?" softly inquired the President.

"Yes, sah! I moshuns dat we git him out."

"De moshun can't prewail, Brudder Howker. In de fust place, we doan' know de Purfessor, an' in de last place dis am fustrate weather fur diggin' outer jail. De hull bizness am largely postponed."

WILL SO REQUEST

A petition from fourteen colored citizens of Kalamazoo requested the Lime-Kiln Club to use its influence with Congress to have the name of Nigger Shoal, Lake Huron, changed to Colored Shoal. Also, to have Coon Island, at the mouth of Detroit River, changed to Bruce Island.

The President replied that the influence of the Club would be so used.

The President then announced the following:

Joe Johnson's Room Mckinley, Ala.—Sekretary ob de Lime-Kiln Club, Detroit, Mich.:

On 'count ob de many Christmas frolicks de attenshun ob de most intelligen' portion ob de cull'd populashun of Central Alabama hev been declined away from de outside wurld, and de recent sokshuns of Brudder Gardner in punishing conspirators hes just come before de cull'd populashun of McKinley Beat fur its estimashun.

De following am de proof-sheet ob de resolushuns I am directed to send to you by de pustoffice as ebidence ob sympathy fur de cull'd pussons ob de North:

Whereas, De high handed perceeding ob Brudder Gardner, President ob de Lime-Kiln Club, in communicatin' with conspirators am recently reported to de cull'd population ob McKinly Beat, and

Whereas, Accordin' to our best estimashuns such preceedins am unbecoming a gentleman, now, be it

Resolved, Dat such demonstrashuns on de part ob Brudder Gardner am ebidence ob too much centralized power, and if de members ob de Lime Kiln Club am looking arter der best interests dey will purvide de necessary imposishun for conspiracy at der next meetin'.

Resolved, Dat a copy ob dis resolushun be sent to the Sekretary of de Lime Kiln Club wid de request dat it be read in open meetin' to show to de wurld whether de cull'd populashun ob de North am allowed freedom of speech.

P. HUNTER,
Secretary Joe Johnson's Club.

The meeting then adjourned for one week.

A CURIOUS DREAM.

A London Lord Mayor's Story of the Dick Wittington Class.

We may, perhaps, be pardoned for here introducing an amusing anecdote concerning a former Lord Mayor of London, whose early life was connected with the town of Uxbridge, namely, Sir Wm. Staines, who was London's chief magistrate in 1801. He started in life as a bricklayer's laborer, and at city banquets, with great glee, he used to introduce the following anecdote: When he was a youngster, he was employed in repairing the parsonage house at Uxbridge. One day, going up the ladder with his hod of mortar, he was accosted by the parson's wife who told him that she had a very extraordinary dream. She told him that she had dreamed he would one day become Lord Mayor of London. Astonished at such a prophecy, Staines could only scratch his head and thank her for such a vast promotion. He said he had neither money nor friends. The parson's wife, however, was not to easily to be turned from her prognostication, and this dream had evidently left a great impression. Her mind was now bent on young Staines, and Lord Mayor he should be. The same dream occurred again, and the same communication was repeated to him that he was to be Lord Mayor. The matter passed off, and young Staines left the parsonage house at Uxbridge with no other impression, than the kindness which had been shown and the notice which had been taken of him. It was not until he became sheriff that his dream came to be talked about, though there is little doubt that the dream made a lasting impression upon his own mind, and was an incentive to laudable industry through life. The Uxbridge parson had by this time become old, but he lived long enough to be chaplain to Staines when sheriff, and he died during his Shrievalty.

Wm. RENNIE, TORONTO

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

A CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS

Opium, Morphine, and kindred habits. Valuable treatise sent free. The medicine may be given in tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Send two 3c. stamps for full particulars and testimonials of those who have been cured. Address M. V. Leban, 47 Wellington St. East, Toronto, Canada.

Since taking the first bottle I have noticed a decided improvement, and can with confidence recommend it to be one of, if not the best medicine extant for Dyspepsia. This invaluable medicine for Liver Complaint, Indigestion, Kidney Complaint, is purely vegetable. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 2

A Marked Change.—There has been a marked change for the better in the conduct of newspapers in the last five years. This change extends not only to the daily but also to the weekly press. The days seem to have gone by when long editorial homilies or verbose local comment are demanded. The public now crave all the news in a condensed and concise form. Editorial opinions which formerly consumed a column must be boiled down to ten or twenty lines. All news must be brieted into the fewest possible words. The same rule applies to local intelligence in the county press. Those papers which fail to recognise this popular demand will shortly learn their mistake.

Monday evening last Mr. James succeeded in organizing a singing class in Walker's church, Holland. A large No. joined the class and all present were quite enthusiastic in the matter. Mr. James speaks in high terms of the warm reception given him and the kindness shown him by the friends of that neighborhood. A very successful term is anticipated. He has four classes already. Requisitions are coming in from various parts of the country for his services as Teacher.

It is a fact that can be varified everywhere that West's Cough Syrup is the only compound known to science, that can eradicate the seeds of Consumption in its early stages, and completely cure Coughs, Colds. Asthma, Bronchitis, and all Throat and Lung difficulties. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Druggists. Price 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00 per bottle. March 4

Done with Tobacco.—I am twenty one years old and have used tobacco about six years. I came to the conclusion from what I read, and the advice of friends to abandon the filthy and worse than useless habit, and have not used it in any shape for over two weeks. I feel much better without it, though it took a determined effort to break away from the habit. I have no desire for it now, and would recommend others to do as I did. James McGrogan.

Implement Depot.—Mr. Wm. Jackson has, not only became a resident of our town, but has opened an extensive agency for the sale of farm and other implements. He is the authorized agent for a number of the best manufacturers, such as A. McGill, Chatsworth: Fleury, Aurora; J. O. Wisner Son & Co., Brantford L. D. Sawyer & Co., and Geo. Wilkinson & Co., Aurora; whose implements and machinery, together with repairs, he will keep constantly on hand in their season. We can cheerfully recommend Mr. Jackson to the public as a man of sterling worth and undoubted integrity, and bespeak for him a large share of public patronage. His wareroqms are directly opposite the Standard office.

"What is good for a cold?" is a question often asked, but seldom satisfactorily answered. We can answer to the satisfaction of all, if they will follow our advice and try Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, a safe, pleasant and certain throat and lung healer. Sold by all druggists.

Voice-Coulture.—Wanted 600 pupils to take lessons in Vocal Mus. & Elocution. The best culture obtainable given. The Newest Thought & Best Methods guaranteed. In V. Mus. both the Tonic Sol-fa, and Staff Systems taught. Eloqution taught on the same principles as used in the H. Sch. of E. & O. Phila. Pa. & Lewis Sch. Elo. Toronto. Special Courses for churches, Pub. Schools, Lodges, Families, & Private Pupils. Full Courses in Voice, Theory, &c., for those that wish to teach. There are 1,000 Vocal Teachers needed immediately, in Ont. alone. J. H. James.

100 pupils wanted immediately to join the Juvenile Singing Class, held in the Pub. Sch. Markdale, every Saturday afternoon. Lesson from 2 to 3 o'clock. The class is being taught the Tonic Sol-fa Method, which has in Eng. & Scotland, made more note Singers than all the other Systems together—This System is growing rapidly in the U. S. and Canada, and is the only rational, practical, and Scientific Method, for the Vocalist, extant. It is also applied to Inst. Mus. all kinds of Mus. are printed in T S-f from the symplist hymn tune to the most Complex Oratorio. Expecting a large class I have placed the fee so low (50 cts. for 13 les.) that every child in the village and vicinity can attend Ages (approximately) from 5 to 15 years—The term begins next Saturday—Send the children. Now is the time. The room will be warm and ready at 1.30 o'clock p. m. J. H. James, Teacher.

A GREAT AWAKENING.

There is a great awakening of the sluggish organs of the human system whenever Burkock Blood Bitters are taken. It arouses the torpid liver to action, regulates the bowels and the kidneys, purifies the blood, and restores a healthy tone to the system generally.

Tea-Meeting.—The Holland and Euphrasia town line people are noted for giving good entertainments at their annual tea, and the one last Tuesday was no exception to the rule. The edibles were abundant and rich. The program was ably sustained, Mr. John Lyons was called to the chair, and a capital chairman he is. The choir discharged their duties with credit to themselves. Several recitations were given in a very creditable manner by children of the congregation, Rev's Grandy, Wilson and Casson of Markdale addressed the audience, Mr. Wilson gave a particularly interesting and appreciated address. Mr. Joseph Hawken came in a little late, but fully made up for tardiness by an eloquant and forcible speech, Mr. Hawken is one of the most popular and whole soul'd men in that district, and it is always a pleasure to meet him either in private or on the platform. We counted 18 from Markdale, amongst whom were three Ministers named above, Government Inspector, Dr. Irwin, Lawyer McCulloch and ye editor, and what perfected the evenings enjoyment, at least in reference to one load from Markdale, they had a genuine upset on the way home, when ten heads and twenty feet went sprawling in the snow, nobody hurt. Proceeds of tea $31.50. We thank Mr. Henry Hamilton for his kindness in driving ten of us out to above and especially for the capsize.

THERE IS NOTHING LIKE IT.

There is no one remedy offered to suffering humanity whose use is so universally and frequently required as Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for rheumatism, neuralgia, colds. sore throat, deafness, croup, lumbago, and aches, pains, lameness and soreness of all kinds, when internally and externally used.

Aluminum.

A mechanical engineer prophesies that the metal of the future is aluminum, that in a few years it is to displace iron and steel, and revolutionize the industrial arts. Iron is reconed the commonest of all metals, an aluminum compratively rare. But aluminum is the most plentiful of all metals. The world contains more of it than of iron. It is everywhere, every clay-bed is an aluminum mine. . . . . Its tensile strength is more than three tons to the square inch greater than that of the Bessemer steel, and is by far the best metal known. A cannon made of it would be three times as strong as one made of steel or gun metal.

It is very stiff and rigid, too—three times as rigid as the best of bronze. Another important thing is that it will not tarnish. Neither air, nor water, nor salt, nor acids, nor corrosive gases have the slightest effect upon it. Neither does intense heat change its color. It is the best conductor of heat known in the world, also of electricity. It would make the best telegraph wires, having twice the conducting power of copper. with only one-third of its weight and lasting practically for ever. It is very ductile, and can be worked easily either cold or hot. It is suitable for anything that iron, or steel, or copper, or brass, or bronze, or gold, or silver is used for, from the wheels of a watch to a monster steam engine.

It is by far the lightest in weight, compared with other metals, being little more than one third the weight of cast iron. To be exact, a cubic foot of aluminum weighs onty 166 lbs. The same size block of cast iron weighs 451 lbs; of wrought iron 487 lbs; of copper 554½ lbs; of lead, 709; of brass, 528 lbs; and of gold, about 12,000 lbs. In brief, it is the lightest, easiest worked most durable, and generally most valuable of all metals; and the man who invents and patents a method of making it cheaply will revolutionize industry and become a rich man.—[Evangelist.

IN GOOD REPUTE.

James McMurdoch, writing from Kinsale, says:—"B. B. B., as a remedy for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, has an excellent reputation in this locality. I have used it, and speak from experienc as well as observation. It is the only medicine I want, and I advise others afflicted to try it."

HANDY TO HAVE.

Every household should keep some ready remedy at hand for painful diseases, sudden attacks of inflammation and accidental injuries. Such a remedy is best found in Hagyard's Yellow Oil for internal and external use. It cures rheumatism, sore throat, croup, neuralgia, lame back, sprains, bruises and burns.

A SOURCE OF GREAT TROUBLE.

Probably the most prolific source of chronic ills is indigestion or dyspepsia, causing unhealthy blood. Yet taken in time it is positively curable. Burdock Blood Bitters has cured some of the worst cases known, even of 15 years' duration. If troubled with indigestion try it.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Dability and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, Frence or English, with full directions for preparing and using. it depends on. If, however, the ocean could be readily reached why that would alter the complexion of things materially, but the length of time that the Straits are open is a matter of dispute."

"What kind of a country would the proposed road traverse?"

"The country is barren and inhospitable. It is simply a medium for reaching the sea. There could never be any local traffic."

"What length would the road be, do you think?"

"Well, I can't say, but the distance between Winnipeg and Fort York is something over six hundred miles."

THE INDIANS

"Is there anything in the rumors of a rising amongst the Indians of the North-West?"

"There are many rumors about the Indians, and in some cases the time is actually fixed for the rising. I think this is absurd. I do not believe there is any plan among the Indians for a rising, but I think that a rising amongst the red men might take place at any moment. You can never depend on the Indians' temper."

"If a rising amongst them did take place, would you consider it serious?"

"Most decidedly so, unless it was crushed out promptly. Any playing with the trouble or red tapeism would be dangerous. If a rising amongst the Indians took place, and was allowed to run for any considerable period unchecked, then the trouble would be far more serious than ever before."

"Have the Hudson Bay company settled up with the Government yet?"

"The company's bill for transport services has been paid. We engaged transport for the Government, but received nothing further than a commission for our trouble. What we got from the Government we paid, to the people we employed. We got nothing but a commission on the service."

"You have some claims against the Government for losses in the rebellion?"

"Yes, these claims have been duly presented, and will doubtless be settled satisfactorily."

Mr. Wrigley is only a short time a resident of Canada, and has already won his way into the confidence and esteem of the Hudson Bay company officials, who speak of him in the highest possible way.

A Born Soldier.

The death is announced of Sir George Udny Yule. He was only an able Bengal civilian of the older and more active type; but he once did a wonderful thing. In 1858 he was a commissioner in Bengal proper, when three regiments of Sepoys, breaking late into mutiny, marched across his district to join the insurgent army in Oude. Mr. Yule had no troops, no military authority, and no responsibility in the matter; but the impudence of the affair was too much for him. He was a hunting man, turned out his hunting equipage, borrowed more elephants from native friends, collected eighty European planters and clerks, and a small force of native "guards," and determined to construction of the railway from Manitoba to the Hudson's Bay will be commenced during the coming spring and that the work will be prosecuted with vigor, and without let up until completed, unless when severity of weather will compel a cessation of work.

It is a matter decided that the work of construction will commence from the head of Lake Winnipeg and be pushed onward in a northerly direction until tide-water navigation on the Nelson river is reached. There may be those who will object to this point of commencing construction, and who think that it should commence from the terminus in this province and move by stages northward. That selfishness might suggest such a course there is no doubt, and the people of Winnipeg more than those of any other place can produce selfish argument in its favor. But after all we believe the projectors of the road are adopting the wise and sensible course, and even those who see immediate gain in another will eventually be most benefited by that about to be pursued.

The commencement of construction at the head of Lake Winnipeg is a wise move, because by the construction of less than half of the whole road a summer outlet can be secured, which will furnish a source of earning to the company in a very short time, and commence the practical test of the value of the outlet for commercial purposes.

Then the course is a wise one because it will compel the utilising of our North-western waterways, which has scarcely been attempted as yet, and which will we believe prove them to have a value, far beyond any calculations hitherto made upon them, and ere the construction of the whole road is completed show what a valuable auxiliary they really are to railway facilities.

Then the course is a wise one because it will hurry the opening of an outlet which if only available in summer time will be of value to the whole province; whereas starting construction from Winnipeg or any other point in the province a road would be in progress for several years, which ended at nowhere, opened up no productive country of any consequence, and would be of no material value to anyone until completed unless for the circulation of money which its construction created. Thus looking at the programme of construction we must say that from every view point it gives evidence of wisdom, caution and economy on the part of those who arranged it.

But as we look at the arrangements for utilizing Lake Winnipeg in connection with this Hudson's Bay outlet, we naturally incline to ask: But what about the Red River as a feeder to this northern gateway? In almost every calculation made of the value of the Hudson's Bay route the grain carrying from Dakota and Minnesota has been counted upon, and indeed the route would loose much of its commercial value if it did not attract a good share of that trade. But then navigation of any practical value for such a traffic reaches no further up the Red River than St. Andrew's Rapids, and from there north to the International boundary that until there is independent communication between Manitoba, Minnesota and Dakota, the supplementary trade for a Hudson's Bay railway from the two latter will not make the owners of such a road wealthy. The cheapest and best link of communication is by the Red River with its obstructions removed. A matter of a quarter of a million of dollars would do that on the Manitoba side, and the efforts being put forth at Washington by our neighbors in Minnesota and Dakota shows that they will not fall short in improving the channel of the river within their territory. Surely private enterprise could take hold of a matter so small as this work in Manitoba, and we might reasonably expect that the Dominion Government would contribute liberally towards the same.—Winnipeg Commercial.

Death of a Nobleman Who Hated Horses.

The death is announced of Count Emeric Semmisch, a Hungarian magnate, who was known in society for his extraordinary hatred of horses. This aversion amounted to a real hippephobia, and it obliged the Count many years ago to throw up his commission in the army. The Count died at an advanced age on his estate in Slavonia. He was a distinguished agriculturist, an excellent landlord, and on all subjects but that of horses, asses, and mules; a man of sound judgment. He would not allow any animal of the equine kind to come upon his lands, so that visitors who rode or drove to see him had always to alight at his park gates. He himself for many years used a vehicle drawn by trained deer, but latterly he went about his estate in a carriage with a team of oxen. His horror of horses is said to have been innate, as there was no accident in his life to account for it.

Deeds Not Words.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

If words could satisfy the heart,
The heart might find less care?
But words, like summer birds, depart,
And leave but empty air;
The heart, a pilgrim upon earth,
Finds often, when it needs,
That words are as little worth
As just so many weeds.

A little said—and truly said—
Can deeper joy impart
Than hosts of words, which reach the head,
But never touch the heart:
The voice that wins its sunny way,
A lonely home to cheer,
Hath oft the fewest words to say;
But oh! those few—how dear!

If words could satisfy the breast,
The world might hold a feast:
But words, when summoned to the test—
Oft satisfy the least!
Like plants that make a gaudy show,
All blossom to the root;
But whose poor nature cannot grow
One particle of fruit!

YOUNG FOLKS.

Cracked Ice.

BY ELIZBEATH P. ALLEN.

"What does make mothers so scary, I wonder?" said Benny Martin fretfully, tugging his new skates, Uncle Ben's last Christmas present, while a small thunder cloud settled on his round face.

"I once knew a little boy," said mamma, as the sewing machine went whirring on, "and he said his mother was too scary about an old dead limb; he went out on it and got a collar-bone broken; did you ever hear of him, Benny?'

Benny did not answer, but the cloud lifted a little.

"I once knew a little boy," said mother again, stopping her wheel to pull out the basting threads, "who thought his mamma was scary because she said the water in the mill-race was too cold for him to go bathing; he went in, and liked to have died with rheumatism; did you ever hear of him Benny?"

At this time there was a bit of a smile on Benny's face.

"You needn't go on," he said; "I know all about the plum-cake, and Mr. Bartlett's kicking mule, and all that; but I don't see what those times have to do with New Year's Day and the long pond."

But mamma was buzzing along so fast, winding a bobbin, that she could not answer right away; presently she said, as if she was done thinking about the subject now, "The ice is cracked, Benny, and no boy is safe on cracked ice."

Benny understood this tone to mean: "Enough said;" and being really an obedient, good-tempered boy, though he failed sometimes, he strapped his shining skates over his shoulder, kissed his busy mother good-by, and started off for the mill-race, which was not cracked, and not deep enough to hurt him if he should break through.

He had hardly left the room before mamma remembered that she must caution him about not staying too late, and running to a front window she threw up the sash and put her head out. Benny was standing at the gate talking to George Burbank, and as the little front yard was very narrow Mrs. Martin could hear through the still frosty air what the boys were saying.

"What are you going to that stupid old mill-race for?" asked George, whose face was set toward the mill-pond.

There was silence for two seconds; Mrs. Martin could not see Benny's face, but mothers' wits are sharp about boys, and Mrs. Martin felt what made Benny hesitate; he didn't want to say: "Mother won't let me."

Benny did not say that. "Oh, there is such a crowd there," was his answer to George's question.

"Humph!" said George; "Where did you use to be afraid of a crowd?' and then the boys went their separate way.

Mrs. Martin closed the window and went back to her work, too much disturbed about her little boy's uncandid speech to remember that she had failed to tell him about coming home early.

But Benny's conscience had had a good thinking about "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and his answer to George kept buzzing along in his mind all the way to the mill-race; even the new skates did not make him forget that he had said what was not honestly true.

Presently George Burbank and a crowd of other boys joined him on the mill race. "Ho," said George, "we've come to crowd you here, Ben; the ice is smashed over on the pond, and lots of the fellows fell in; they were all big fellows, though, and got out again."

Benny shot up to the bank where the boys were strapping on their skates and sat down. He felt somehow as if he had just had his life saved, and nothing makes people so honest as to come face to face with death.

"Well, I'll just tell you, George," he said slowly, "the real reason that I didn't go to the pond; I don't know why I didn't tell you at first. Mother knew that the ice was cracked, and she wouldn't let me go."

"You don't say!" exclaimed George; "why in the name of sense didn't you tell me! I wouldn't have gone on the ice for a pretty good sum if I had known it was cracked."

Ben felt more ashamed of himself than ever, but was more comfortable, nevertheless, at having owned up.

They had fine sport on the mill-race, and Benny went home tired and happy. Indeed his mother did not at first like to see

She had on the big boots and the coat and cap. They were so large and heavy that she had got stuck fast in the snow, and could neither go nor come back.

"I don't want to play in the snow any more," she sobbed, as her mamma took her into the house.

She is now willing to wait until the sun shall melt the snow away.

The English steamer South Cambria has brought from the bottom of the sea an interesting relic of the American War. Running short of coal, she was compelled to put into the harbor of Newport News. As the crew were hauling up the anchor, they found the bowsprit of a war vessel attached to it. The spot where the South Cambria was lying was exactly where the great naval duel took place between the war vessels Congress and Merrimac, in which the former was sunk. This was in 1862, and the bowsprit brought to the surface is supposed to be that of the Congress.

HEALTH.

Hints on Your Health.

As soon as you are up shake blankets and sheet;
Better be without shoes than sit with wet feet;
Children, if healthy, are active, not still;
Damp beds and damp clothes will both make you ill;
Eat slowly, and always chew your food well;
Freshen the air in the house where you dwell;
Garments must never be made to be tight;
Homes will be healthy if airy and light;
If you wish to be well, as you do, I've no doubt,
Just open the windows before you go out;
Keep your rooms always tidy and clean,
Let dust on the furniture never be seen;
Much illness is caused by the want of pure air,
Now to open your windows be ever your care.
Old rags and old rubbish should never be kept;
People should see that their floors are well swept;
Quick movements in children are healthy and right;
Remember the young cannot thrive without light;
See that the cistern is clean to the brim;
Take care that your dress is all tidy and trim;
Use your nose to find out if there be a bad drain;
Very sad are the fevers that come in its train.
Walk as much as you can without feeling fatigue;
Xerxes could walk full many a league.
Your health is your wealth, which your wisdom must keep;
Zeal will help a good cause, and the good you will reap

Two Meals a Day.

The word meal is so old that it is uncertain just what our Saxon fathers meant by it. Possibly it dates back to a time when grain, pounded and cooked, was the chief article of food.

The Orientals generally had only two meals, between which intervened the labors of the day, and it is largely their custom now. This causes confusion in translating the Bible terms relating to meals. For instance, Christ is represented as saying to the disciples at early dawn, "Come and dine," and the Jews had no light meal after the principal one.

Even in cold countries, where three meals a day are the rule, the first was looked on as a slight breaking of the fast, while the last was a mere sup, or sip, later of tea, thus giving us tea-time as an equivalent of supper. The meal of the day was the dinner; hence among the Greeks and Jews the word for dinner and a feast was one and the same. Where, among the higher classes in England, the dinner occurs quite late in the day, no need is felt for another meal.

In the rural districts and the small towns of our own country the original custom of three meals is well-nigh universal, and the dinner divides the day into two nearly equal parts, and so controls the social and, to some extent, the religious customs of the people. Domestic cares belong to the forenoon, and social calls to the afternoon. So, too, whereas the synagogue worship of the Jews had but a single service, we generally, in the country at least, have two, the one in the afternoon being simply a duplicate of the one in the forenoon.

In our large cities, however, where office business is transacted mainly between nine A. M. and five P. M., or where business men reside miles away from their work, the tendency is toward the earlier custom of two meals. Such a change can hardly become general. But where it is convenient, there are two solid reasons in its favor, i. e., of two principal meals, with a slight lunch between: (1) It gives time for a complete digestion before again filling the stomach—a matter of no little importance to high health. (2) It transfers the principal meal from the time when the nerve force is in special demand for the brain, to a time when it is set free for the stomach.

But there is a large class everywhere who would be greatly benefited by having only two meals a day, it being understood that they eat as much in two meals, as would ordinarily be needed in three. They are the neuralgic, those whose digestion is feeble and slow, and the victims of many chronic complaints. In such cases the first meal medicines—those of a decided character—till you are informed by one who knows more than you do—the less the better of absolute poisons, such as are taken by those who wish to commit suicide. Never dream that hard work is the needed medicine. Nor think you can "work off" decided disease, though the effort of the will is of service.

The Value of Salt.

Severe pains in the bowels and stomach are often speedily relieved by the application of a bag of hot salt. A weak solution of salt and water is recommended by good physicians as a remedy for imperfect digestion, and for a cold in the head it is a complete cure snuffed from the hollow of the hand. We have known severe cases of catarrh entirely cured by persistent use of this simple remedy every night and morning for several months, when the best efforts of the best physicians failed to do any good. It should be used milk-warm. A good handful of rock salt added to the bath is the next-best thing after an "ocean dip," and a gargle of a weak solution is a good and ever-ready remedy for a sore throat. As a dentifrice salt and water is very cleansing and also hardens the gums. It will also prevent the hair from falling out. When broiling steak throw a little salt on the coals and the blaze from the dripping fat will not annoy. A little in starch boiled or raw, will prevent the irons from sticking. If the irons are rough put a little salt on a thick brown paper, lay a piece of thin muslin over it, and rub the iron over it till perfectly smooth. Ink stains are entirely removed by the immediate application of dry salt before the ink has dried. When the salt becomes discolored by absorbing the ink brush it off and apply more; wet slightly. Continue this till the ink is all removed. If new calicoes are allowed to lie in strong salt water for an hour before the first washing the colors are less likely to fade. Damp salt will remove the discoloration of cups and saucers caused by tea and careless washing. A teaspoonful of salt in each kerosene lamp makes the oil give a much clearer, better light.

A FAMOUS FENIAN DEAD.

One of the Six Convicts Rescued by an American Whaler.

Michael Harrington, the eldest of the Fenian prisoners who were rescued from New South Wales by the American whaler, Catalapa, in 1876, died recently of pneumonia, at the residence of his brother-in-law, Edward Whelan, in San Francisco. The fifty-four years of Harrington's life were full of romantic interest. He was born in Cork. While a young man he enlisted in her Majesty's sixty-first regiment just in time to serve in the Sepoy rebellion and Indian mutiny. He fought in was wounded, and returned to England, where he continued his military service until he lacked but one year of the time to retire on a pension. That was in 1866, when the mine of Fenianism was about to be fired in Ireland. Harrington deserted his regiment and hastened to Ireland to join the uprising, but was arrested at Dublin and was brought before a court martial, charged with desertion and high treason. He was sentenced to be shot. But the penalty was commuted to penal servitude for life and he was transported with a number of others to the isolated island at New South Wales. But in 1875 the Clan-na-Gal society in New York and a whaling ship was fitted out for the purpose. John J. Breslin, meanwhile, under the guise of an American millionaire went to Australia and managed to communicate with the prisoners. The vessel set out, none of the crew knowing her destination, except the captain, and in April 1876 the ship having arrived out the six convicts began their perilous march of twenty miles to the sea. Of course their prison garb betrayed them before they had driven many miles, and the alarm was given at the quarters, but they hurried on and finally reached the vessel. But this was hardly under sail before the British corvette Georgietta was discovered in chase. As it neared the whaler the captain hesitated, as he doubted his escape into the high seas, but when the first mate, William Smith, an American from Massachusetts, learned of the state of affairs he urged all hands to press on. The escaping Fenians were heavily

PLANNED THEIR RESCUE,

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

A serious Railwoy accident occurred on the Northern near Thornhill last Friday evening, caused by a runaway team of horses which dashed into the train at a crossing. The baggage car, mail car and coach were thrown from the track, one of the horses killed instantly, a news boy named Willis was killed, and eleven persons more or less injured. The accident happened at an embankment of twenty feet, and the mail car rolled down took fire and was consumed, but the most of the mail matter was saved. The baggage car was also a wreck as well as the coach. The driver of the runnaway team as also the one horse were unhart.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Arm Broken in Two Places.—On Thursday afternoon last Mr. Eckhart, traveller for the Pure Gold Co. of Toronto, met with a sad accident at Flesherton Station. He had boarded the Durham stage and was leaving the station when, in the turn, the sleigh upset; a trunk falling upon Mr. Eckhart fractured his arm in two places. Dr. Hixon was immediatoly summonsed and soon set the broken limb.

At a Cottage Social held at the residence of J. E. Moore on Tuesday evening last. A very enjoyable evening was spent.

On Wednesday evening last a large gathering of young people assembled at the residence of J. W. Armstrong, Esq., the occasion of a farewell party given to our genial friend Mr. John Bannon, druggist, who has made many friends since his coming to our midst. Mr. Bannon left on Saturday morning to pursue his studies in the School of Pharmacy, Toronto.

Sudden Death.—Mr. James Bryce, of the 4th line Artemesia, one of the old pioneers of this township, died very suddenly at his own place on Wednesday last. Deceased was in his usual health, and after partaking of a hearty breakfast went out to the yard to chop wood when, after a short time, his wife missing the sound of the axe, looked out to see what had become of her husband, and to her sorrow found the body of her husband laying across the leg he had been chopping. Deceased has been long and favorably known in this township; a man of quiet, retiring habits, had many friends and no enemies. His remains were interred in the Salem cemetery on Friday afternoon.

Mr. John Brown lost a valnable mare a few days ago by a broken leg from a kick by her mate in the stable.

Mr. James Brooks, having sold his lately erected dwelling and lots in connection therewith to Mr. Thomas Osborn, now contemplates buying again and at once commence operations on another new dwelling. This will be the third building for Mr. Brooks in his brief citizenship here. Mr. Brooks is too valuable and enterprising a citizen to loose. Success to you here, James.

Miss Bertie Philp, daughter of the Rev. S. C. Philp, formerly of this circuit, is at present visiting with friends in this village.

A pair of youths, purporting to be fruit tree agents, were in this village on Monday last, and after perpetrating a fraud on one of our citizens, the magistrate and constable were set on their tracks, but the wily lads evaded their grasp, and we suppose they are now in greener pastures.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

As it has been so long since Maxwell has been heard from, some people are beginning to think that "Phiz" has been asleep, or else he must have resigned his office as correspondent; but nay, and in order to ease the minds of the general public, we have resolved to grind a few items this week and let the public know that all is well. Bridget (my wife) has recovered her serious illness, and we are happy to say she is in a thriving condition.

Miss Ida Sykes, of Rob Roy, is visiting friends in this place.

Mr. D. A. Holman of the Big Boot broke the ice for the old bachelors of this place some time ago and took unto himself a partner in life in the person of Miss Sarah Jane Holroyd of Feversham. As there are so many bachelors in our vicinity and as D. has made such a large hole in the ice, surely some of them will follow his example and do likewise.

Mr. D. K. Preston has received the contract for the carrying of the mail between Maxwell and Duntreon for the coming year, commencing April 1st, thus leaving the present driver, Mr. Taylor, at home, who has filled the position for several years.

Mr. Wm. Arnott, Sr., an old resident of Osprey, passed away quietly on Saturday last. Inflammation of the lungs was the cause of his death.

Isaac Morris, a colored man, who lived near this place for some time, took a moonlight excursion a few nights ago and parts unknown.

Tp. Clerk.

Euphrasia Council.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment at Dodson's Hotel Rocklyn on Feb. 13th 1886. Member all present. Minutes of last Session of Council read and confirmed.

The Clerk was ordered to notify J. G. Perry to remove his fence from the road allowance (24 & 25 side line.)

A grant of $15.00 was made for the relief of R. Robinson who is now in indigent circumstances. W. McConnell, Esq., to expend said amount.

The Reeves order was issued in favor of Samuel Jefferson for $5.00 payment for road work.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit to Messrs. Russell & Hutchinson $30.97 payment for stationary, several sealed tenders for the erection of Township Hall were handed in to the Reeve during the forenoon session of Council.

In compliance with previous notice the tenders (ten in number) were opened at the Council Board at 2 o'clock p. m., the tender of Yeomans & Little of Thornbury, was accepted amount of the tender was $1675.00 which was the lowest tender made and otherwise satisfactory, the Contractors to give satisfactory Bonds for the completion of the work.

Robert Myles was appointed to inspect the work every day as it goes forward, and to be paid a salary of $45.00 for said services.

The Reeve Deputy-Reeve and Mr. Boyd, were appointed a Committee to get the agreement and Bonds for the erection of the Hall duly filled up and signed.

The Reeves order was issued on the Treasurer in favor of Mr. Hunter, Clarksburg, for $1·50 payment for drawing bonds for the purpose of binding the Contractors to complete the Town Hall.

The Council adjourned until Saturday 27th Feb. inst.

Robert Dunlop,
Tp. Clerk.

AN AGE OF DISCOVERY.

We certainly ought to appreciate the fact that we are living in an age of progress and discovery, this is especially appreciated by all persons that have been afflicted with Rheumatism, as West's World's Wonder or Family Liniment is a positive cure for Rheumatism. It is invaluable for Cuts, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, and all diseases requiring external application. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Feb.

Farmers' Institute.

CENTRE GREY AGRICULTURISTS IN COUNCIL.

Meaford, Feb. 26.—The Meeting of the Farmers' Institute was held here on Friday, the 26th of February, and was attended by many farmers of the neighborhood, notwithstanding the extremely cold weather and the terrible wind-sorm which had raged all morning. Mr. Brown occupied the chair.

FORESTRY.

Mr. Phipps, of Toronto, delivered an address on forestry, giving the principles of that science and their applicability to the country round Meaford, with information as to the kind of trees most valuable, the method of cultivating them, and the means of procuring young trees or seeds. The lecture was received with great attention, and many questions were asked at its close. which Mr. Phipps answered, and promised to send special information to those desiring it.

Mr. Palmer followed, endorsing the position taken by the first speaker, and giving as his opinion that of the two questions immediately before them, forestry took the first place, for ed decidedly thought that if they did not attend to tree-planting and forest encouragement they would soon not be able to get grass for their cattle at all.

Several farmers give it as their opinion that there was no preserving a piece of woods if any number of cattle were left in it.

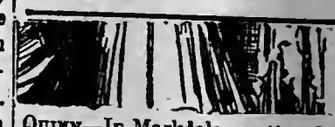
Mr. Phipps took the opportunity to quote Mr. Sargent, the chief American authority on forestry, who had stated in the late United States census that "all the injury done to American forests by the axe or by fire has not equalled that caused by the browsing of cattle."

BUTTER MAKING.

Mr. Moyer delivered a lecture on buttermaking and the advantages of the creamery system, which was received with much approval and which contained much valuable information. The lecturer illustrated a method not yet in general use of separating the water, oil, and caseine in milk, and astertaining the qualities of each. He also described the best method of erecting a creamery.

ROAD MAKING.

Mr. Ling read a paper on road making, and an animated discussion followed as to the desirability of abolishing statute labour, and introducing a system of money taxation instead.



The Chairman in closing said these institutes were doing much good, and that the Local Government was conferring a great benefit on the farmers by sending speakers, and encouraging expressions of individual opinion.

Votes of thanks were given to the speakers, and the meeting adjourned.—Globe.

March 1, '86.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—In the Advance of the 18th of February, my attention was called to an article headed Military Discipline, now Sir, I will not take notice of the first part of said article as it does not deal personally with me. So will pass on to where the Editor of this dirty sheet starts to heap honors or tries to do so, on the head of Andrew Campbell, for his untiring vigilence in bringing me before Squires Richardson & Armstrong. And for what, the writer of the article says, I refused to go when requested to the annual drill, (just stick a pin there to hang that lie on) I was never requested or notified to go with the company and had good evidence if they had been called to prove that I was ready and willing to go when notified, I was busy at my harvest and had no time to go looking for posters calling me away, but a post card would have found and took me; with boys whom I respect as a good hearted whole souled lot of men as ever enrolled their names on a roll book or learned the drill under a stuttering instructor, on the other hand it looked as though Campbell & Fields did not want me, for the night before going to camp some of the boys said in hearing of Campbell why not send Hanley word, and the brave captain said let him stay at home, we will attend to him when we come back, and then the morning that they left to go to camp one of the Volunteers asked Fields where I was and Fields said, he wished to God he (Hanley) would stay at home; and some other very loud language which I feel above quoting, now I had men to prove what I am saying; who heard these honorable officers express the feelings of their hearts. The writer says Campbell had a right to prosecute, not from personal motives. Oh! No, but as one of his duties. Now Sir, if it was not personal motives why did he single me out from others who stayed at home, did the Worthy Colonel not think he was oversteping his furlong when he sent him that letter which made the bold captain shake in his boots. Then Sir, he says I expected to keep the clothing now that is false. I wanted to leave my cloths in when we came from drill in 83, but Field placed a guard on the armoury and would not allow a man to go in to change his clothes, I can prove that to. So I took them home and kept them clean and safe ready to put on when called for, as to making the clothes my own I never thought of such a thing. Perhaps the caretaker of the armoury John Field wanted them to clothe his family or make bed quilts of, he has as good a right to do this as to flood the drill shed every winter for a skating rink even if it is rotting the timbers, they can be replaced, the Government is a strong Firm, and the money got from the youth of Flesherton helps to keep himself and family from abject poverty. He says in his sanctimonious judas like way, I may thank my stars that I escaped so easly, they were dared to their worst but could do no more than they did. So you see I don't thank them, then he says it will have a good effect on the other Volunteers. I agree with him there as a part of them has handed in their resignations and more of them intend doing so.

Truly Yours,
WM. C. HANLEY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

F. W., in your issue of 18th ultimo, refers to my using the word Reformer in my letter about School Inspectors. Allow me to say to Mr. F. W. that by Reform I do not mean simply Re-form or form again: No, I mean to make better, such as we say of a man who was once a confirmed drunkard but who has now become a total abstainer, of him we say he has reformed, and such only can with propriety be called a reform, viz., to, improve, to make better. I have long ceased to have any confidence in political parties, and the way in which our professedly Reform Government has used us in regard to our school holidays, is quite enough to show that they have not the true principles of reform at heart. As to the attitude of our County Council, I am not at all pleased with it, for I understand the object with some is to discharge Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Grier, and have only two thoroughly qualified gentlemen—one for North Grey and one for South—and give the two as much money as the three have just now. The two to be appointed must be highly educated gentlemen, you know! and of course must be paid as such gentlemen should be paid. This is all very well for talk, but in another year we would find to our cost that these two highly accomplished gentlemen would rebel as being over-wrought, and a third or perhaps a fourth also would need to be engaged to fulfil the requirements of our much boasted school law and educational advancement, and we poor ratepayers would need to pay the piper. Allow me to make a few remarks on Dr. Christoe's letter in your issue of the 4th ult. The Dr. seems to be anxious to table a lot of excuses for his stand in regard to these Inspectors. Now, if he (the Dr.) is only conscientiously discharging a public duty, as a public man, there is no need of so much of partizans, &c., no explanations of this sort is necessary; we don't want personalities. The Dr. says they (the Inspectors) "are mere fossils of a receeding age." Will this not apply to old doctors, old lawyers, and others as well as old Inspectors? But with this we have nothing to do; what we want is reduced expenditure consistent with efficient education; but we have not time to follow the Dr. through all his arguments, we will just take one other sentence and it is a quotation from the Minister of Education's speech at Owen Sound; it is this, "that water cannot rise above its level, as is the teacher so will be the scholar." It is by statements such as this that many are carried away beyond "their debth" and because a big gun like the Minister of Education says something they do not quite comprehend, they think that they are really great men. No man knows better than does Dr. Christoe how easy it is, with a little soft soap, to draw the web over the eyes of the more illiterate of our class; truly it is easily done else we would not impeach the Dr. with it. But let us look at this most remarkable sentence, so remarkable that even Dr. Christoe quotes it, "water cannot rise above its level." Of course not, neither can an apple, falling from a tree, fall upward; both are regulated by the law—fixed laws—both are material, but mind is not material; so to attempt for a moment to compare a material substance with that which is immaterial is out of the question, and no wise man will ever seek to do it, "as is the teacher, so will be the scholar," just so Mr. Minister. Did Dr. Christoe never know a pupil go away ever so far ahead of his teacher? Of course he has, and is it not a fact that in all our schools there are pupils who cannot learn at all, while there are others who "drink in" education as fast as the teacher can "pour it out" for them; and many of our most learned men never were taught by man, and why is this? Simply this, that the mental capacity of one is by no means measured by that of another, but God has given to some ten talents while others only have one, but with the Dr. and with the Minister of Education it is all "the Teacher," but let us look away from Doctors and Ministers of Education and try and do something for ourselves. F. W. tells us truly who our rulers are in this school business, and until we as farmers resolve to do our own business, we shall continue to be just what we now are, serfs to every other class in the community. We have heard it said that there is only one teacher in Ontario for every three or four hundred inhabitants, and yet this small minority rules this large majority. It seems that we form at least the three-fourths of the entire population of Ontario. Well, what proportion of the Legislative Assembly or of the House of Commons are farmers? Tell us who can, and then we shall see how the lists stand. I quite agree with F. W. that we should fling aside all political feelings when we come to deal with matters of such great importance and let farmers link together for their common good in school matters. In all that has been said about the Inspectors it has not once been hinted that their incompetency has caused any loss or injury, hence if they are incompetent and no injury has arisen therefrom, it follows clearly that we can do without them. Well, let us do without them altogether, and do away with legislative grants and county equivalents and let our High Schools, by whatsver name they are called, be supported by them who use them—them who get the benefit, and let Trustees and Teachers stand in the same relation as employer and employed, or if you will, as master and servant: that is, let these two parties make their own bargain, not only as to salary, but also as to holidays, &c., &c. Farmers, look to your own interests; Teachers are watching over theirs.

Sulphur for Lice on Cattle.

Soon after the young cattle go into their winter quarters in the barn, lice will be liable to make their appearance and unless they receive immediate attention they will rapidly increase, and all thrift and growth will soon cease, says our Country Home.

A great many remedies are offered for lice on cattle, but most of them are objectionable in one way or the other. I have never found anything, for efficacy and convenience equal to flour of sulphur sifted over their backs whenever they show signs, by rubbing or lapping themselves, of the presence of these parasites. An occasional use of sulphur in this way will keep a herd of cattle very free of these pests if applied when they first make their appearance. If they have obtained a hold on the animal, applications must be made once a week for several weeks, and if very plenty, an occasional dose of a tablespoonful of sulphur in their feed will materially aid in getting rid of them. The odor of sulphur seems to be very destructive to all vermin, and five pounds, costing 25 cents, if used in this way will keep a large herd of cattle free of these pests a long time, and it is the safest, easiest, and surest means possible.

Cattle which have become thoroughly infested with vermin are unthrifty and a disgrace to any family. I keep a small pail of sulphur and a small hand sieve hanging up in the stable, out of reach of the cattle, and whenever I see indications of lice on any animal I at once dust a little sulphur over its back and that is usually the end of the trouble. In this way I keep my cattle very free of vermin, and like it so well that I have used nothing else for several years.

Sundry Suggestions.

A small amount of chloride of lime left in their runway will drive away rats, and is besides in most cellars needed to keep the air pure and free from the dangerous malaria from decaying vegetables. If it is desired to catch the rats, a small piece of cloth placed over a steel trap and the bait set on that will secure them after they have become too wary to be taken with a trap not hidden.

All carpenters know how soon the butt ends of chisel handles split when daily exposed to the blow of a mallet or hammer. A remedy suggested by a Brooklyn man consists simply of sawing or cutting off the round end of the handle so as to make it flat, and attaching by a few nails on top of it two disks of sole-leather, so that the end becomes similar to the heel of the boot. The two thicknesses of leather will prevent all further splitting, and if, in the course of time, they expand and overlap the wood of the handle they are simply trimmed off all around.

A mixture of mutton tallow and woodchuck oil is excellent for keeping boots pliable and excluding water. If the boots have become thoroughly water-soaked fill them over night with dry oats, which will absorb much of the moisture from the inside and at the same time swell so as to keep the boot in shape and prevent its shrinking.

There is no mystery about making neatsfoot oil. The only thing necessary is to boil in a kettle as many cattle's feet and hoofs as can be obtained and skim the oil until no more rises. From the four feet of one animal a pint of oil is usually obtained, and it is well worth the trifling cost of making it.

Why the Boys Leave the Farm.

"Why do the boys leave the farm?" wails a writer in an agricultural journal. Well, dear brother, there are several reasons. One is because the boy is not 65 years old at his birth. Then, if there is a hoe on the farm weighing fourteen ounces, bright as nickleplate, and sharp as a razor, and another hoe weighing somewhat less than a breaking plow, with an edge on it like a hammer, and a sapling with the bark on it for a handle, the hired man takes one and the boy gets the other, and every man in America knows which is the other. Did you ever stand with such a hoe in your hands, away down in a corn row on some airless, still, hot summer day, twenty acres of corn blades and tassels wilting about you, standing fourteen inches higher than your head, shutting out every last trace of breathable air, and then hear a locust down in the edge of the timber strike up his long strident, monotonous call to make it ten times hotter? And all this time a cool creek, not a mile away, loitering in deep, silent pools in shady places in the woods, or breaking into merry dancing ripples over the pebbles? And in the big deep holes, the fish just lying around, lonesome for a boy? Well, then, you know why some boys leave the farm. Still, boys can be kept on the farm and made stay there all their lives. You drive a long spike through a boy's abdomen and through a live oak tree and clinch or bolt it to the other side, and then he will stay on the farm. Yes, there are some other ways we know, but this is the only infallible method.

About Creameries.

A dairy authority says that a factory which will make the cream from a thousand cows cost, outside of the land, about $2,500. But one could be started on a small scale, with a few hundred dollars, and with good management and energy be made to pay. Grain raising is becoming more precarious in the older portions of the country every year. By turning unprofitable hillsides and fields into pasture land, the soil may be brought up and made to pay a good per cent. The manure from one cow, properly saved, is worth $24 a year. A creamery, started in a good locality, would be worth hundreds of dollars every year to the neighborhood, besides paying a fair per cent. to its managers.

No, Ethel; when you hear of a young girl making a good "match" it doesn't signify that she has got something that will get up every morning and light the fire.

Johnny (just after Sunday-school)—"Say, Jack, what is a sockdolager?" Jack—"Why, don't you know? It's what they sing in church when they get ready to go home. The minister gets up and says: 'Let us now sing the sockdolager.'"

JOHN GRANT'S, THE SCOTCH HOUSE

AN OLD LANDMARK OF MONTREAL.

BY JOHN FRASER.

"Walk about Zion, tell the towers thereof, mark ye all her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following." Such was the command to preserve and hold in everlasting remembrance the landmarks of Jerusalem. Let us attempt to follow in the footsteps of old and restore or point out from among the ruins of time and the wreck of surrounding matter the whereabouts of some notable landmarks in the city of Montreal now nearly forgotten.

John Grant's "Inn" or "Tavern"--the name "Hotel" was not known in those early days. This old house is still standing, and bears the number "47 St. Henry street." Fifty years ago this old house was a noted place. It was then the Scotch head centre of Lower Canada. There was not a Scotchman or a Scotch family then living within a radius of one hundred miles, embracing the Scotch Counties of Glengarry and Argenteuil, and the Scotch settled parts of Chateauguay, but had at one time or another slept within its walls or had partaken of its old-time hospitalities.

There was scarcely a Scotch merchant or trader in Upper Canada, half a century ago, in his semi-annual business visits to Montreal, who did not make this old house his home during his stay. Not to have known John Grant, or not to have been known to him, was ignorance which no Scotchman of that day would like to acknowledge. Those now living who knew him will never forget the kindly smile and the true Highland greeting of our old host. The old hostess, Mrs. Grant, died in the city of Montreal, during the month of August, 1885, in her ninety-first year.

"We shall meet at Grant's," was an appointment often made by parties then living at the extremes of the Scotch Counties. This old house was well known in the Scotch Highlands, and it was a common practice in those early days for friends in Scotland having relatives living in Canada to address letters for them to "John Grant's, Montreal." Such letters never failed to reach their destination. The home or the whereabouts of nearly every Scotch Highlander or Scotch family settled in the Scotch-Canadian Counties, or serving in the Hudson Bay Company, was known at this old house.

During the troubles of 1837 and 1838, "John Grant's" was the Montreal headquarters of the two Glengarry Regiments then serving on the Phillipsburg and Napierville frontier, and also of the Lachine Brigade, and during the winter of 1838 it was the most noted military resort in Montreal. The writer recalls one night. It was, he believes, the 13th of February, 1838, during the illumination to celebrate the installation of Sir John Colborne as Governor General. About midnight, as the members of the Lachine Troop were leaving for home, an order reached Grant's for ten of the Troop to start immediately for St. John's. Within an hour they were on the ice, to cross to Laprairie, to be stationed by twos, every nine miles, to carry dispatches. The last two reached the old fort at "Isle aux Noix," the same evening by six o'clock. This was quick work, and a hard cold ride, the thermometer being below zero and the roads heavy with deep snow.

This old house was the town meeting place of the gentlemen of the Hudson Bay Company, whose headquarters were at Lachine, and old Sir George Simpson's gig or caleche, during his stay at Lachine, could be seen twice a week, Tuesdays and Fridays, entering the Inn yard regularly at ten, and leaving punctually at three. This was also the Montreal headquarters or meeting place of the Scotch lumberers from the Ottawa. They were noisy boys, and made things lively on their annual escape from their backwoods to civilized life. They were known in those early days as the "Grand River Roarers."

On the opposite side of the street, on the corner of St. Maurice, a noted and rising young Glengarrian (brother of the Hon. D. A. Macdonald, had his Montreal head-quarters for many years in the front room in the second storey, just above the present number, "36" St. Henry street. This house was then known as "Anderson's Grocery." This was John Sandfield Macdonald's club-room or meeting place for his political friends in Lower Canada, and many a deep subject in politics was discussed in that room. Sandfield afterwards, in later years, transferred his quarters to the St. James' club, but the old room and his favorite arm chair were held sacred for him by Mrs. Anderson until his death, which she always called "Sandfield's room." Some of the older politicians of Canada will remember this room.

Time has changed everything in and around this old house. The dignity and the military bearing of the veteran officers of the Glengarry Highlanders, the dash and the swagger of the young bloods of the Lachine Troop of Cavalry, with their fierce-looking bear skin helmets, and the noisy but innocent revelries of the Scotch lumberers, fresh from their backwoods, are not now heard or seen there. Those days are gone and have passed away forever.

How changed is all around! This old house, for several years past, until very lately, was the resort and the headquarters of horse-dealers. The Canadian trader in horses and the American buyer met there. The language in and around the old "Inn-yard" was changed! A frequenter of that old place of fifty years ago, were he to have stepped in there on one of those busy days during the horse-trading season, would hardly have appreciated the "horse slang phrases" that would have fallen on his ears. And should we enter this old house at the present day—now vacant and closed up—

"Its echoes and its empty tread
Would sound like voices from the dead."

This short sketch may meet the eye of many old Scotchmen, now scattered far and wide apart, over the whole Dominion of Canada, who, perhaps, will heave a sigh while they call to mind the times of old and the days of other years when they and we were young! Let us close this by adding: Peace to the memory of John Grant! He was a good man—a good man of the old time—a true Highlander, a loyal subject, and a staunch supporter of the "Auld Kirk" of Scotland.

MONTREAL, QUE

A playin' mon—A homely physician.

PERSONAL.

Judge Travis is erecting a fine two story stone residence in Calgary. He appears to intend to stay there.

A Tallahassee, Fla., despatch says: Sarah McDaniels, a colored woman living on Mr. Fish's plantation, one mile west of that city, has become the mother during her lifetime to forty-two children. She is now a robust, healthy looking-woman.

The first Canadian woman who emigrated to the North-West, Mme. J. B. Legimoniere, whose life has been written by the Rev. Abbe Dugost, has now, in Manitoba alone, 550 descendants, besides a number of others in Quebec and the United States.

John Simmons of Forsyth, Ga., in a sudden fit of insanity, thinking he was pursued by enemies, jumped into the Ocmulgee River, and remained there, with the water up to his neck, until discovered by a duck hunter, twenty-four hours later. He seems to suffer little inconvenience from his bath.

Fifteen years ago Mr. Joseph Arch was a farm laborer supporting his family on $4 weekly wages, and he is now a member of Parliament. He is what is commonly called a self-made man, but as his wife taught him to read and write he may be considered a creditable specimen of domestic manufacture.

Will S. Hays, the song writer, made his debut on the minstrel stage in Louisville the other night to a crowded house. He personated Old Ike, the negro character he has made famous through the river columns of the Courier-Journal. Hays has not yet signed with the show, but it is thought he will.

Guilda La Chapelle, the female pedestrian, now keeping a saloon in San Francisco, has accepted the challenge of Miss Kate Brown of England, who desires to walk against any lady pedestrian in the United States for $500 or $1,000 a side. Guilda requires Kate to visit San Francisco as a condition of her acceptance of the latter's challenge.

There is now living on the Piedmont road, near Charleston, W. Va., an old colored woman named Clara Brown, who is perhaps the oldest colored woman in West Virginia. Of course, she well remembers seeing General Washington. It was in Richmond that she met the Father of his Country. She says he entered the kitchen of the hotel where she was and spoke kindly to the cooks. She says she is 122 years of age.

Sam Small, the converted Chicago journalist, who is stirring up Chicago preparatory to Sam Jones's advent, is described as a plainly-dressed, tall, slender young man. Behind his gold-bowed eyeglasses are small eyes, and above his heavy sandy moustache is a rather long thin nose. His forehead, high and narrow, is surmounted by very carefully smoothed dark hair. He looks rather commonplace, but when he speaks he at once shows strength. The Herald says: "His voice possesses that subtle, tremulous quality which makes men listen. It is a voice which invests the merest commonplace with interest."

William Guyton was a brakeman on the Evansville and Terre Haute Railway. There was a collison in which he was badly injured, but remembering that a passenger train was due soon he managed to extricate himself from the wreck, and, mangled and bleeding, seized a red flag and staggered up the track. Twice he fell from exhaustion, but pluckily got up and went on and flagged the train 500 yards from the place of danger. Then he fainted away and remained unconscious for two days. When he recovered he was a cripple for life. He sent the doctor's bill to the railroad company and payment was refused. Then he sued for $10,000, and a jury has just awarded him $5,083 damages after four years of litigation.

Lord Wolseley's refusal to pay fees to the Herald's College for his new title, and to Ulster King of Arms and his officials for the insignia of St. Patrick, calls up a story of how a similar exhibition if independence was dealt with by George IV. A certain Knight of Windsor received the order of St. Michael and St. George and after the investiture a bill for the usual fees was sent to him, which he swore nothing would induce him to pay. There was no precedent for such a case, so a memorandum was sent to Sir William Knighton at Windsor, in order that the King's pleasure might be taken. The document was returned with the following endorsement by the King himself: "Stop the d—d fellow's pay until the claim is cleared."

Since the death of her husband Mrs. Thomas A. Hendricks has been considerably annoyed by letters and communications purporting to be from Mr. Hendricks which have been sent to her by Spiritualists. One of them pretended to be an autograph letter written by the dead Vice-President in the spirit land. Mrs Hendricks is reported as saying that this was a very close imitation of her husband's handwriting, but that she could easily detect its spuriousness. I do not believe in such things," she says, "and do not see that any good can come from encouraging them. That they do not come from Mr. Hendricks is clear to my mind, for the sentiments of none of the communications are expressed in language such as he would have used. They bear on their face the impress of an inferior mind, are inferior to his while alive, and certainly inferior now, if the spirit land, as I believe, elevates and ennobles the sentiments and spirations of the soul."

The London Canadian Gazette says: "Everyone interested in Canadian matters will turn to Lord Lorne's article in the current number of Good Words, entitled "Our Railway to the Pacific." Only the first portion of the Marquis's contribution appears in this number of the magazine, and this for the most part deals with the initial difficulties which attended the undertaking. For the indomitable perseverance and untiring energy displayed in carrying through the enterprise to a successful issue, Lord Lorne, of course, has the highest praise. The illustrations accompanying his articles, engraved from drawings by H. R. H. Princess Louise, represent views in Vancouver Island and in the Rocky Mountains. They are in every case excellently chosen and well executed, and will do much to convey to English readers some notion of the grandeur and variety of the scenic attractions of the Pacific Province of the Dominion."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

As the meeting opened Brother Gardner announced that the Hon. Standoff White, of Montgomery, Ala., was in the ante-room. The distinguished gentleman was on his way to Chicago to see his dying sister, and had taken advantage of the occasion to stop over three or four days and make himself acquainted with members of the Lime-Kiln Club. He had a little address which he desired to deliver. It was entitled: "Do We Realize Where We Were and Where We are Now?' If there were no objections the addresser would be brought in.

Whalebone Hawker arose, not to object exactly, but to enquire if the Hon. Standoff had brought any credentials with him. How did the club know but that he was a base imposter?

"Brudder Hawker!" sharply replied the President, "do you emagine dat I would take a puson into my own cabin, an' loan him a clean shirt an' purvide him wid a pipe an' terbacker, if I did not know dat he was all right?"

"N-no, sah."

"Den you kerflop yerself down into your cheer, an' de less we h'ar of you fur de next two weeks de better it will be fur all hands round!"

THE HON. STANDOFF.

The distinguished stranger was then ushered in. He appeared to be a person about six feet high, lame in the left leg, of sanguine temperament, and to be possessed of great presence of mind. He bowed right and left, smiling like a tickled baby, and begun

HIS ADDRESS

By saying:

"Nobody knows how good it makes me feel to stan' in de shelter of dis famous ole Paradise Hall an' look down upon de 200 faces turned up to de shingles. If my sister hadn't taken a noshun to die, an' if I hadn't got a half fare ticket to come dis way, I might nebber hev sot eyes on dis famous aggregation of wisdom, prudence an' progreshun. [Cheers.]

"Whar' war de cull'd people of dis kentry twenty y'ar ago? Let your memories run back to de close of de war. We war' men in statoo, but chil'en in intelleck. On de day dat peace was declar'd had you put me down in Cincinnati wid a $20 bill in my pocket I should hev bin helpless. Your wise President here couldn't hev told whether a shotgun loaded from in front or behind. Had you asked Sir Isaac Walpole who Shakspeare was he would hev crawled under de bed in confushun. Trustee Pullback had de 'Pilgrim's Progress' all mixed up wid de 'Pirate's Promenade.' Waydown Bebee didn't know whether the Onio Riber emptied into de Mississippi or Salt Creek. [Great applause.]

"We war' chill'en in feelin' an' ackshun. De tones of de fiddle war' mo' to us den dan de voice of Progress am now. If we had hoe-cake an' bacon we war' content to let de rest of de world hev poetry, science, art an' wealth. Our religun might hev bin all right, but de rest of us war' all wrong. In our ignorance, de sun riz on de plantashun to de east of us an' sot on de one to de west. De world was composed of about fo' Staits, an' all de knowledge an' wisdom was supposed to be carried under de hats of a dozen white men." [Agitation.]

Here the orator paused to wipe his brow and straighten up his wilted collar, and when he got his second wind he continued:

"Now, fur whar' we are. Take de finest lle paintin' in de land an' walk into any barbar shop in de kentry an' you'll find men to critiqise it. Dey'll pint out de fack dat de foreground has skipped a cog, or dat de perspective corkscrews too much. Dey'll light down on a bad sky like a hawk on a chicken, an' you kin trust 'em to diskiber anything wrong wid a waterfall or a side hill. [Cheers.]

"White men who oome to us an' look wise an' talk about de sciences am astenished to find dat dey am barkin' up de wrong tree. We has got dar! Sewer gas keeps just as fur away from de cabin of de black man as from de palace of the white. De science of government am discussed ober our dinner-pails as often as in de halls of legislashun. Nateral philosophy has to keep dodgin' to get out o' our way. [Prolonged applause.] De cull'd race was a long way back when de last gun was fired, but dey has bin trabblin' on a run eber since.

"I should like to talk to you fur two hours, (cheers) but de occashun am not propitious. If anybody among you has any doubts dat our race has not passed de three-quarter pole let him sot out and trabble a few miles. I shall now pass on to see my dyin' sister, and I shall always remember dis event wid de moas' malignant pleasure. In wishin' you farewell, permit me to use de words of Socrates to de Egyptians: 'Cum dig Solis.'"

PENSTOCK TRIES A SHOT.

Giveadam Jones moved that a vote of thanks and the freedom of the city be tendered to the orator, and added that he hadn't had anything do him so much good since water melons went out of market.

"I hope dat moshun will not prevail," said the Rev. Penstock, as he bobbed up. "I claim dat de greater part of dat speech was stolen bodily from one I delivered in Richmond six y'ars ago!"

"It doan' seem posaible," replied the President.

"But I am suah of it, sah. I worked fur three weeks on dat speech, an' I remember almos' ebery word of it."

On motion of Waydown Bebee a committee of two went out to find the Hon. Standoff and bring him in to face the music, but he had gone. Also, Elder Raffle's plug hat, Samuel Shin's overcoat and a lantern belonging to Antimony Johnson.

ACQUITTED.

Sir Steven Bulwark then called up the case of Prof. Pompadour. Some weeks since the Professor was charged by a white man with stealing a wheelbarrow, and the charge was given to the Interior Department to investigate. Sir Steven would like to inquire why the committee had not reported. The Chairman replied that he was waiting for an opportunity to report that the white man had found his wheelbarrow two days after making his charge.

"Whar was it found?" asked the President.

"In de alley in rear of his house. It was brought back in de night."

"I see. Purfessor de charge again' you am dismissed, an' you stan' fo'th as innocent as a lamb. Nobody saw you return de wheelbarrow, an' dar am no 'casion for you to begin yerself away."

A TEST.

The Librarian reported that the Library was in such condition he dare not keep a fire in it any longer, and asked for an appropriation of $6 for a new one.

"De matter will be laid on de table present," replied Brother Gardner. "It is a good time now to make a test as to whether thirty or forty members will visit de Library each night fur de purpose of ridin' deir minds or of tourin' dat institution. De Librarian will report any additional numbers. Any unfinished business will be packed up an' put whar' de rats can't bite it, an' we will infringe upon no homes."

GREAT SCHEMES FOR SOUTHERN ASIA

Proposed Railways in Burmah and Siam.

The complete annexation of the whole of the acquired territory in Upper Burmah by the Indian Government has done much to remove the scheme of railway communication with the Chinese frontier proposed by Messrs. Colquhoun and Hallett from the region of speculativeness, and to bring it within the scope of early practical politics. The subject constitutes essentially an Ingman's question;" and, pressed as we are by branches of English trade at the present time, we cannot but feel glad that for one of them at least there is a prospect of considerable relief. Indeed, we cannot fairly limit our congratulations. The opening of trade routes to tap some of the richest provinces of China will not be unimportant in its beneficial effects to any particular branch of Industry. These must be felt throughout the whole of our business classes.

Before proceeding to deal with the schemes formulated, we may, with advantage, refer briefly to what has already been accomplished in regard to railway communication in what has been annexed to constituted British Burmah. From Rangoon, the capital of that territory, Rangoon, two railways are now open and working in a northerly direction; the one communicating with Prome, and the other with Taungoo. The total length of these lines is severally 162 miles and 166 miles, and the latter was only completed in the course of last year.

Bankok, the capital of Siam, has a population of inhabitants, and Moulmein and its suburbs have 300,000. The traffic between these two centres must necessarily be large, and the expressed wish of the Siamese to open communication with them may be accepted as almost conclusive to the effect this, a line to Raheng, 275 miles in length, must be made from Bankok, which runs entirely through Siamese territory. The distance is 160 miles in an easterly direction to Moulmein, 80 miles of which are in British territory, and the remaining 80 miles in the Siamese possessions. A railway of 300 miles in length would therefore unite the two places named, and its construction would constitute the first link in the complete system contemplated. No commencement has as yet been made in this direction. Assuming this link to be achieved, it is proposed then to carry the Siamese system northward from Raheng above named to the extreme limit of Siamese territory at Hsen—or Kiang Khong, as marked on our maps. This would be reached by an extension of 300 miles, and further extension would be within the Shan States of Upper Burmah. To reach the Chinese frontier at Szimao (Esmok), 250 additional miles would have to be traversed, and with this would be attained the full completion of the route between Moulmein and Bankok and the Chinese frontier. The total mileage of the different lines would be as under: Bankok to Raheng, 275 miles (Siamese territory); Moulmein to junction at Raheng, 150 miles (half British, half Siamese territory); Raheng to Kiang Hsen, 300 miles (Siamese territory); Kiang Hsen to Chinese frontier, 250 miles (Upper Shan States); total, 975 miles. The estimate framed by Messrs. Colquhoun and Hallett for the accomplishment of this is eight millions sterling, or an average of about £8 122 per mile. The railways between Rangoon and Taungoo, and Prome, referred to, cost £7,400 per mile.

In immediate proximity to the boundaries of the proposed lines on the Chinese frontier are the provinces of Yunnan, with 5,000,000 people; Szechan, with 21,000,000; Kweitan, with 5,000,000; and Kwangsi, with 7,000,000. What we have stated as to the importance of the markets they are to reach we have discussed are destined to be of great British trade.

We have already stated that railway working between Rangoon and Toungoo is proposed to extend this northward to Mandalay, the recently acquired native Burmah. The distance is 230 miles. Carrying a line thence to Bhamo, would entail a further 200 miles, which, adding Indian railway system, would require an additional 250 miles. Tabulating the distances, we have, in order to join the present Indian and Burmese systems, to construct railways as follows: Toungoo to Mandalay, 230 miles; Mandalay to Bhamo, 200 miles—touches Chinese frontier at point, from Bhamo to junction—250 miles; total, 689 miles.

The two main schemes we have mentioned dealt with would be manifestly incomplete without their union, and according to the Colquhoun and Hallett proposals the line to connect Moulmein, the starting point of the Siamese system, with the terminus of the Taungoo line, the base of what may be termed the Indian system. The total length of such a railway would be but 150 miles from our furthermost Indian outlet to the Chinese frontier at two points, to the principal commercial centres of Burmah, and with the capital of Siam, Bankok. The total mileage necessitated therefore by the proposals to effect this end would be—Indian and Siamese system, 985 miles; Indian system, 680 miles: to unite the two systems, 150 miles; total, 1,790, miles. Taking the mileage as to cost an average—as above given—of £8,122 per mile, would be the total outlay involved in the scheme proposals considered of £14, 538,380 sterling. The sum need not seem startling to any one who gives due consideration to the benefits to be achieved for it. Who can estimate the full effect of its outlay! Our trade, now languishing, would secure by it the markets of hundreds of millions of people, and we are even anxious, to take the produce of labor now oppressed by foreign competition.—London Engineer.

K, DISGUISED AS AN EGYPTIAN, DEARTS ON A PERILOUS MISSION.

did not take long to bring the beautiful bride back to consciousness, and she recovered from her swoon she herself lying on a couch in the sitting-room and her husband bending fondly over her.

The first of all listened nervously and ly for sounds of riot and tumult from but the fickle crowd had already ed in quest of other excitement and sions, instead of besieging the hotel in to get at her.

Is Pat safe also?" was her next in- and when her husband had answered question in the affirmative she next re- ed:

You see, Frank, my presentiments far from idle ones, for we are not yet of Egypt and terrible perils still sur- us on all sides."

Nonsense, dear. There have been and uprisings of the mob even in dull, London, and in Paris, well-dressed have often been in worse danger in streets then they are in those of ria to-day. Here comes the landto ask how you do. I will inquire of what he thinks of our chances of getaway immediately."

was almost the first question that he to the burly host after he had told him much better his wife was; but Monsieur Boucœur shook his head and made er that he feared getting out of Alexfor the present was quite out of the tion, because even three days ago the rent European consuls had joined in gly recommending all their fellow trymen who could leave the place to without a moment's unnecessary loss and the majority had acted upon advice so promptly that there had a regular stampede, delicate ladies children being only too glad to be as deck passengers even in such dirty as steam colliers rather than be left nd."

his was very discouraging, but Nellie up bravely and said:

But we also are quite ready to go as passengers on board colliers."

dye, madam," rejoined the host, with rug of his shoulders, "but the colliers not ready for you. They steam away fast as they load, and thousands of tened people are actually living in the houses and stores along the quay sides der to be able to step aboard the first el that wharfe alongside them. These countrywomen of yours, in their love anxiety for their children, would be to fly upon you and tear you to were you, as a new arrival, to try to precedence of themselves and little after they had waited so patiently in to have the first chance."

Well, Monsieur Boucœur," said Frank, fully, "then I think that we will re- with you."

Monsieur has I am sure, decided ly, nor let the little madam be afraid, the threatening aspect of the population already been reported in Cairo, and a gram has been received in reply from war minister to the effect that as order been perfectly restored there he will nse start for Alexandria and do the e here. So the chances are that be- soon, even, we shall be quite quiet n."

sieur Boucœur," delivered all this as of soothing balsam, but its effect on shattered nerves of Nelly Donelly was of a strong irritant.

e flushed crimson and then turned ly pale as she gasped out:

Arabi Pasha coming to Alexandria? we must leave it at any and all risks, it, and that at once."

Monsieur Boucœur or Frank Donel ither could make any answer to this en there came a gentle tap to the pen door, and then the tones of a e from without:

Pardon, but may the dove bring the branch into the ark?" and without ing for answer, into the room came a y, swarthy, black-bearded man, habitntirely in black, who very much more bled the raven than the dove.

Donelly looked up and at once ognized him as one of those who had ed about Nellie in the hall, but rather, least so he had thought at the time, the sake of gazing at her exposed loveas than to render her any real service. e was therefore more disposed to resent intrusion than to thank him for his e next few words that he uttered enly changed his feelings toward him, ever, for without waiting to be quesed he went on with:

Is it not the truth that you want to e Egypt at once? Very well, I can you. I have passages secured for myself, wife and servant on board the French mer Le Comete, which sails this afternoon for Marseilles, but at the last moment my wife is taken ill prematurely, and the doctor says it would in all probability kill her to remove her, here we must ; wherefore, if you would like to purase our passage tickets, you can."

I am infinitely obliged to you," said k. "Name the price and I will e you out a check for the amount. ow the deuce can I do that without a ck-book?"

At what bank have you an account?"

The Anglo-Egyptian."

Then I have a check book of that , and if you like you can fill one up able to Moses Cohen, or order, for pounds ($250), that being the amount I paid a week ago for two saloon and steerage passage to Marseilles."

There being pen and ink on the table, k Donelly rapidly filled in and signed eck and handed it to Mr. Cohen, who, n took it, said to him:

Now, I would advise you to go at once the Marseilles Steam Navigation Com- 's offices in the Old Harbor, close to the mole, and get the names changed in the books and on the passenger list, because they all know me, and were you to simply go on board and take your places at the last moment, the steam packet people might suspect some fraud and raise some awkward difficulties about taking you, which it would be just as well to avoid—don't you see?"

"Certainly I do, and will be off at once. I shan't be long gone, Nell, so don't be nervous."

"Oh, I am sure you will be torn in pieces by the mob, and that I shall never see you again. At all events, won't Mr. Cohen and Pat Monaghan go with you?"

"I would not think of allowing Mr. Cohen to leave his sick wife, and as for Pat, though a fine fellow to help one out of a scrape, I should feel far less sure of getting into one whilst by myself. I assure you, my darling, that everything is quiet outside now."

"I'll tell you what would make you doubly safe, monsieur," said the landlord of Hotel d'Orient. "A slight wash of tincture of iodine over your face and hands, and a red tarbouch on your head. That dark blue flannel jacket and trousers are wonderfully like an Egyptian officer's undress uniform, and the tarbouch would render it undetectable, whilst the iodine would stain your skin to the exact tint. I've some remaining that I had to paint a swelling with and I'll lay it on with a camel's hair brush and make a first-rate job of it."

The landlord's offer having been accepted, Frank Donelly's face, throat and hands were quickly rendered as dark as a real Egyptian's, and as the natural color of his eyes and hair very well corresponded, nothing but a red tarbouch was wanted to complete his disguise, and this Monsier Boucœur was also able to supply him with.

"Now, Nellie, don't you think that I am quite safe?" exclaimed her husband.

"Yes," replied his wife, "I think you look much more Egyptian than English. I'll try not to be frightened whilst you are away. Nevertheless, do not be gone long."

"You may depend on that, my love. Well, farewell for the time, gentlemen, and thank you very much."

He sold this because he wished to pay his adieux to his bride in private, and both the Frenchman and the Jew took the hint and departed.

"Nellie," said Frank, then, "you must ring for Marie, and see if you cannot somehow purchase clothing sufficient for the voyage and have it already packed against my return, for I shall smuggle you aboard this French steamer as soon as ever she lies alongside the quay. Procure a yashmack, also, if you can, so as to look as much like a native woman as possible. I dare say one or other of the hotel servants has one as a curiosity, and would part with it for an adequate consideration, but if one isn't to be got procure as thick a veil as possible and be ready for a flitting the instant that you see me return, which I have no doubt will be under an hour, so now goodbye, darling, for a very little while. It will be our last parting."

Their last parting! Poor fool! Little did he guess that another was close at hand which would prove the most terrible experience that either of them had ever known.

But we must not anticipate, and misfortunes always come soon enough.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

PREPARATIONS FOR FLIGHT—THREE DANGEROUS RECOGNITIONS.

After her husband had departed the time passed very slowly to Nellie, that is to say, when once she had made, assisted by Marie the French chambermaid, all necessary preparations for flight, and had bought half her wardrobe and box as well, for now that the girl saw the urgency of the case she offered to go out and do whatever shopping was necessary, Nellie would not allow her to run the risk of leaving the hotel.

So, after the little box containing just sufficient necessaries for the voyage were packed, padded and labeled, the hour-old bride had nothing left to do but to gaze out of the window of the prettily furnished sitting room and watch what was going on in the streets, for though she had entreated Marie to stay with her for company, the lively little French maid could not neglect her work any longer, and was compelled to go.

But the prospect from the window was not an uncheering one to Nellie; indeed, it was exactly the reverse, for the mob had dwindled away by degrees until the long, broad and not altogether unstately thoroughfare was almost deserted, and encouraged by this the shopkeepers had, for the most part, taken down their shutters again, and were conducting business as usual, the cafes, whose name is legion in all parts of Alexandria, following their example and the banks in like manner.

All this made her hope her husband was not in peril, more especially as he had disguised himself so very like an Egyptian, but even while she was hugging this comfort to her heart the hoarse boom of a cannon from the direction of Fort Tebareh brought back all her fears with redoubled force, and she clasped her hands together in terror.

"Boom, boom, boom!" went the cannon, and she was not experienced enough in the sound of artillery to know that such a dull, leonine roar could never proceed from a shotted gun.

That it was Egyptian ordnance she did not know, however, because the reports came from a landward direction.

From this she jumped to the conclusion that the massacre of the Christians had commenced, and she pictured them as being blown from the months of cannon just as Sepoys were blown during the Indian mutiny.

Then, presently, the roar of artillery ceased, but only to be succeeded by rattling peals of musketry and a continuous and prolonged cheering that seemed each passing minute to be nearer and nearer, and while Nellie wondered what it could all mean the street without began to fill again, each narrow thoroughfare that opened into it disgorging a living stream of wretched humanity, who presently filled each side of the long Rue de la Colonne Pompee as far as the eye could reach.

We have already on more than one occasion described an Egyptian crowd, so there is no need of a repainting of the picture.

The only difference was that this one seemed to be more excited than they usually are, and to be eagerly awaiting the arrival of something, while naked santons, looking like revivified mummies, or plucked baboons, kept running about and around and two and fro, their long, unkempt beards all of a shake with the incessant wagging of their jaws as they continued to preach to or exhort the multitude, possibly as to how they should conduct themselves on the occasion.

"But what occasion was it?" Nellie mentally asked herself, for she could see no slaughtering of Christians going on, which, as may be imagined, was an intense relief to her.

Ah, that was a blare of a brass band, too. Well, that was cheering at any rate, and as Nellie could not associate a merry air from the opera bouffe with either violence, rapine, incendiarism or murder, all her fears began to melt away, whilst such few as yet remained her curiosity got the better of, and in order to see more clearly what was approaching she stood boldly and without any attempt at concealment before the window, as she beheld many other European women doing on the opposite side of the street, all of them apparently as curious as she was.

Their curiosity was soon destined to be satisfied, for now the head of an approaching procession appeared in view, in the shape of a troop of Egyptian cavalry, clad in a kind of French zouave uniform, with scarlet and white turbans with long lances.

These really dashing looking troopers were followed by a portion of the celebrated dromedary corps, strange looking cavalry indeed, dressed in Oriental garb, grasping long pennonless spears, and sitting between the two humps of their ungainly, long-legged steeds, that were grinning like devils and uttering uncouth cries as they came along, for dromedaries and camels are alike bepraised as they both are by poets and novelists who know next to nothing about them, are the most quarrelsome, stubborn, cantankerous and vindictive brutes in existence, who have been known to kill a child for tickling it with a straw, and many another vengeful act.

The mounted band passed directly under her window, now blaring forth the well known "Turkish patrol," and it was followed by a sumptuous open carriage drawn by six gray horses, in which sat or rather reclined, the Khedive, bowing to right and left as he passed along, but receiving no reply from his discontented and rebellious subjects, unless sullen looks and scowls could be accepted as such, so that it was no wonder Nellie thought that he looked so sad and dejected.

So full were her thoughts of him (though admiration for the fickle, extravagant and weak minded prince she had none) that she took no notice of, and, indeed, hardly saw the entire regiment of white uniformed, red tarbouched Egyptian infantry that closely followed the Khedive's carriage, and her attention was only again attracted to the street by shrill and vociferous cheering.

Nellie was now in a kind of maze, or mental lethargy, in which her brain slept though her eyes were open.

Had it not been so she would assuredly have guessed who was approaching and retired from the window to have escaped the chance of having been seen by him.

But her thoughts, still running on the Khedive who was nothing to her, she forgot all about the war minister, who was everything or at all events destined to be every thing to her, and his existence was first recalled to her mind by the sight of his face looking directly upward, with his fierce, eager eyes fixed upon her with a glance of mingled surprise, recognition and triumph, or so, at least, the poor girl read it.

This and the tempest of sound stunned her, as it were.

She caught hold of the curtain and grasped them firmly to save herself from falling, and thus she stood, riveted to the spot, and as unable to move therefrom as though her delicate ancles had been gripped between the teeth of steel traps.

She knew that she was recognized. She felt that her chances of escape from Egypt were forever at an end. She was conscious of a feeling which was rapidly creeping over her that she no longer cared whether she lived or died; and yet whilst troubled thus in mind, she was aware of a latent admiration, deep down in her heart, for him who was the chosen of the people, and as she thought the predestined liberator of Egypt, even while she condemned the worldly guile that had prompted him to interpose a far-stretching regiment between himself and his nominal sovereign and master, so that by no possible chance could the Khedive lay claim to any of the applause that he knew would be lavished on himself.

She still stood at the window, earnestly praying to herself that Frank might soon return and at once take her away—anywhere, so long that it was out of Alexandria, aye, even to the desert again.

It never struck her that there could be others from whom she had more to fear than from Arabi Pasha himself.

But it was destined to occur to her before very long, nevertheless, for when regiment after regiment of Egyptian soldiery had again marched past, they were succeeded by a continuous roll of carriages, containing, though for a long while she remarked it not, a portion of the harems of the Khedive, of the war minister and a few others of the great pashas who had accompanied him.

She was destined to make this discovery in a single instant, when she all at once saw a hideous black face leering at her from the box of a gilded and curtained caleche, and the next instant beheld one of those curtains drawn aside by a tiny but swarthy hand, and another face gazing up at her filled her with a greater degree of terror than the war minister and the hideous black eunuch's united could have done, for these magnificent yet tigerish looking eyes had been bent upon her twice already, once while driving with Frank along the Choubrah road and again from behind a lattised box at the Cairo Opera House, and it was assuredly from the owner of these eyes that the written warning had come which had threatened her, though vaguely enough with so terrible a doom.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

THE MASSACRE IN THE GREAT SQUARE.

When some five minutes later Frank Donelly emerged into the Rue de la Colonne Pompee, on his way back to the Hotel d'Orient, he found it almost empty, for the Khedival procession had swept by and the populace, had followed it.

His caleche (he had endeavored to procure a close cab or other carriage, but in vain) had therefore not the slightest difficulty in getting along, and no sooner had it drawn up at the hotel steps than, first ordering it to await his return, he ran indoors and upstairs to Nellie.

He found her lying on the sofa with her eyes closed and looking deathly pale.

No sooner did he burst into the room, however, than she sprang to her feet and throwing herself into his arms exclaimed:

"Oh, take me away from here. Take me at once, Frank!"

"That's what I've just come to do, my love. The carriage waits at the door, and I dare say Pat is already on his way upstairs for your box. It is ready for him?"

"Yes, Frank, there. And I have only to put on the hat and jacket that I got from Marie."

"And the yashmack that I advised you to procure. One was to be had I suppose?"

"No, Frank, I could not get one, and I would not allow Marie to risk going out. I have, however, a very thick veil, and I hope that will do very nearly as well."

"I doubt not but that it will do quite as well, my darling; indeed, I believe that it would be now quite safe to traverse the streets with your face uncovered, for the storm seems to have passed away, in proof of which all the shops and banks have opened again."

"The storm is at all events not over for us, Frank, for Arabi Pasha is in Alexandria. He recognized me at the window as he passed under in his carriage, and so did two others, the beautiful but terrible woman whose life you saved and who gave you that opal ring, and the hideous black man who seems to be always with her."

"Well, my dear, it don't much matter, for in a quarter of an hour we shall be aboard a French ship, and a French ship is to all intents and purposes French territory."

Nellie said not another word, but rushed into the adjoining bedroom, and hurriedly put on the natty little hat and jacket that she had purchased from Marie.

Then she muffled up her pretty face in the hideous green veil and re-entered the sitting-room just as Pat Monaghan was moving out of it with her box on his shoulder.

A couple or three minutes later they were driving away from the hotel door, Frank and Nellie inside and Pat Monaghan on the box beside the driver.

"And so we are really on our way to a steamboat bound for Europe, Frank?"

Nellie spoke the words as though she desired to be convinced again of their truth.

This strange conduct of hers caused her husband to laugh as he rejoined:

"Yes, Nell, we really are, and what is more she sails within an hour and so we shall sit down to dinner in all probability out of sight of land."

"Oh, that will be glorious," exclaimed the new made bride. "And Arabi Pasha could not tear me out of the French ship, even under the plea that it was to restore me to my parents, could he? That is what causes me most apprehension."

"Your marriage certificate proves that you no longer belong to your parents, but only to your husband, so of course he could not tear you from me, my darling."

"Now I am satisfied. Now I do not believe that I am one bit afraid, Frank."

Poor girl, she might not have expressed herself so confidently had she but known that the hideous eunuch aga, of the Khedival seraglio was within both eye and ear shot, and waiting but a favorable opportunity to pounce down upon and bear her off as an eagle scoops down upon a dove.

He was furthermore resolved to make that opportunity if he did not find it ready made.

Concealed behind one of the Ionic pillars that assisted to form a portico of the hotel door, he heard the route to the harbor given to the driver of the caleche by the landlord, Monsieur Bonoceur, as the one whereon his guests would be least likely to meet with unpleasant interruption, and no sooner had he been thus made aware that the carriage would be driven through the Grand Square, or Place Mehemet Ali, as it is more generally called, than he resolved that it should get no further.

THE AGE OF INVENTION.

Inoculation of rabbits with the bacillus of tubercular consumption is proposed as a method of exterminating them in Australia.

Crockery coffins are proposed by a Philadelphia inventor. His idea is to glaze them, thus making a tight and imperishable receptacle, the object being to protect underground water currents from pollution.

Mineral wool is said to be coming into use in the construction of buildings, on account of its strength, lightness, and resistance to the conduction of heat. It has also the advantage of being fireproof.

The manufacture of alcohol from wood has increased rapidly within a few years, and it is said to be used largely for patent bitters, ginger extracts, and other alcoholic compounds, whose strong flavor makes it unnecessary to use a better quality of spirits. Wood alcohol is a dangerous product, and sometimes gives rise to serious disturbances of the brain and nervous system.

A St. Louis doctor is credited with having cut off the tails of two lizards and united the animals by sewing the stumps together, thus making a species of Siamese twins. The object of the experiment was to ascertain if blood could be transfused by this method; and one writer maintains that if, for example, a weak and bloodless invalid were attached in this manner to a strong and healthy animal, the result must be favorable to the invalid. Dr. Roussel of Paris is said to have met with encouraging success in such an experiment.

Two Thoroughly Scared Miners.

During the great storm of a week or so since two miners started to ascend one of the mountains near Aspen. They made the trip on Norwegian snow-shoes, on which they worked their way up a narrow gulch leading to their property. As they journeyed on one of them got to be some 200 yards in advance of the other, and it was while this distance separated them that the leader, by an unhappy step, overturned a top-heavy mass of snow and started a dreadful slide. He seized hold of a convenient tree and called to his companion to "look out." The tree was small and bent over under the weight of moving snow. He let go and started with the slide. The long shoes were by this time firmly anchored in the moving mass, and he was hurried along with no power to stop himself by seizing the trees which he passed. Fortunately he was on the tail end of the avalanche, and thus rode it in safety, with nothing coming behind to cover him up. When he found that he had thus to be an unwilling passenger upon the terrible train he looked ahead to see what had become of his partner. The latter, upon seeing that there was no escape on either side, turned heels to the rearing mass, and started on a life-and-death run right down the gulch. Then followed a wild and thrilling chase. The man who was anchored on top of the snow yelled at the man in front to run, while he who was pursued strained every muscle to keep out of the jaws of the death that was close at his heels. The race was kept up for more than a mile, and during the entire distance the fellow who was on top kept yelling, "Run you ——, run," and the hair of the fellow who was running held his hat poised four inches from his head while he headed for the valley. Often the rolling snow struck the heels of his shoes, but it did not quite get him. More quickly than it takes to tell it the hunted man dashed out into the valley, and what he thought was safety. The valley, however, was more dangerous than the mountain, as an unseen gulch crossed it, into which the hunted man fell. Providence, though, was kind to him, for the slide had spent its force, and the snow piled up on the bank over which he had fallen.

When the two were able to look around, one was lying at the bottom of the gulch, while the other was seated upon the crest of the snow bank that looked over its edge.

TRAGIC DEATH OF MRS. WALDO

The Wife of a Yale Professor Jumps Over a Cliff While Insane.

The novel spectacle of the students of a great university stopping work and rushing from their desks to join in the hunt for a missing person was witnessed the other day at Yale, when news reached the college of the disappearance, while temporarily insane of the wife of Prof. Leonard Waldo of the Yale observatory. The tidings reached all quarters of the college at once, and many of the professors dropped their books, requested the students to assist in the hunt, which was then being rapidly organized, and rushed away, with the men at their backs. It had begun to rain hard by this time. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon police, citizens, and students to the number of about 800 were searching for the lost woman.

Mrs. Waldo's maiden name was Fullerton. She was a native of Philadelphia and a niece of Judge Fullerton of New York city. Some time ago, after giving birth to a child, she suffered terribly from nervous prostration and various other troubles, and for days and nights she had been nearly crazed with pain. A nurse has been constantly with her. The previous night she passed without sleep until 4 o'clock next morning, when her eyelids closed, and so did those of her attendant, who, worn out with fatigue, did not wake until about two hours and a half later. When she did awake Mrs. Waldo was gone. The household was at once aroused, but the woman could not traced.

Finally, at 4.30 o'clock in the afternoon, word was telephoned from Pine Rock that the body of the unfortunate woman had been found there. Mrs. Waldo had been seen by people in the neighborhood all day walking swiftly about in the feverish madness which seemed to possess her. No one thought it prudent to restrain her. When found she lay at the foot of a twenty-five foot cliff, from which she had either fallen or jumped. The shock of the fall killed her outright.

The body was taken to the residence of Prof. Waldo. Mrs. Waldo was 36 years old. Her sister died last summer from the effects of a suicidal leap at Double Beach.

A Child With Two Brains.

A baby about a month old was taken by its mother to a dispensary at Bellevue Hospital, New York city, for treatment last week. When the child was born it had a large swelling on the forehead, which slowly increased in size and firmness. Nothing could be done to reduce the protuberance, which was supposed to be a tumor, except to perform an operation and take it out. Before this could be done the little thing died. The consent of the mother being obtained, Dr. Janeway held an autopsy at the morgue, and found that the cause of the swelling was a second brain, which was growing on the outside of the skull, independent of the brain inside, save through a connecting substance that passed through a slight fissure in the bone. The anatomical specimen, which is a rare one, was put into alcohol to preserve it.

My gracious! You don't mean to say that you have another baby up at your house?" exclaimed a lady, when informed by the happy father of the event. "Yes; got fourteen now." "Well, I don't know but it's all right. Thirteen is an unlucky number, isn't it?"

Said a young man, the other evening: Is it etiquette, in writing to a young married woman whom you have known well, to call her 'my darling little pet?'" My dear sir, it is not a question of etiquette, but of athletics. It depends how far you can distance her husband in a mile.

"What are you waiting for, little boy?" inquired a kindly old gentleman of a street urchin who was watching each passer-by intently. "Waitin' fer a long-whiskered gent smokin' a cigar. Then I'll foller him an' get the stub." "Do long-whiskered men smoke better cigars?" "Naw, but dey don't smoke 'em so short."

For the past quarter of a century West's Cough Syrup has given relief to thousands, and no medicine compounded can show such a vast number of unsolicited testimonials ask your neighbor as to its merits. It is an unfailing cure for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption in its early stages, and all Throat and Lung diseases. Price 25c, 50c, and $1.00 per Bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. March 11

Done with Tobacco.—I am twenty one years old and have used tobacco about six years. I came to the conclusion from what I read, and the advice of friends to abandon the filthy and worse than useless habit, and have not used it in any shape for over two weeks. I feel much better without it, though it took a determined effort to break away from the habit. I have no desire for it now, and would recommend others to do as I did. James McGrogan.

IN GOOD REPUTE.

James McMurdoch, writing from Kinsale, says:—"B. B. B., as a remedy for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, has an excellent reputation in this locality. I have used it, and speak from experience as well as observation. It is the only medicine I want, and I advise others afflicted to try it."

This is Lent.—We don't mean this paper, it is probably borrowed.

There was a $10,000 fire in Forest Tuesday night.

We had a pleasant call yesterday from Mr. John McAleer, the popular hotelkeeper at Eugenia. He reports business very good at the Falls.

The Juvenile Sing. Class will not meet till Saturday of next week. Some pupils are coming two miles to attend this class. Mr. James expects, after a thorough canvass of the village, to have the full class of 100 pupils. The adult class is merely postponed and will be organized in due time. Also a class for Pub. Sch. Teachers, on Saturday. The country classes are succeeding admirably.

Newspaper Law.—For the benefit of a few persons who cease their newspaper subscription after a month or two has expired on a fresh year, it is well to quote the law, as sustained by Canadian Judges: All arrears must be paid up at time of discontinuance or the liability for subscription continues. Any one taking a paper from the post office is liable for payment until the day of settlement. When papers are so cheap as to afford little profit on cost of paper, publishers are not likely to lose a couple of months without action.

Implement Depot.—Mr. Wm. Jackson has, not only became a resident of our town, but has opened an extensive agency for the sale of farm and other implements. He is the authorized agent for a number of the best manufacturers, such as A. McGill, Chatsworth: Fleury, Aurora; J. O. Wisner Son & Co., Brantford L. D. Sawyer & Co., and Geo. Wilkinson & Co., Aurora; whose implements and machinery, together with repairs, he will keep constantly on hand in their season. We can cheerfully recommend Mr. Jackson to the public as a man of sterling worth and undoubted integrity, and bespeak for him a large share of public patronage. His warerooms are directly opposite the Standard office.

CRUTCHES RENDERED USELESS.

The poor cripple who has to use crutches on account of Rheumatism, stiff and swollen joints, contracted cords, and other aches, pains and lameness, may throw aside his crutches if he will try Hagyard's Yellow Oil faithfully.

Fire In Durham.

Sunday night last Mr. J. Woodland's store and dwelling with its contents were completely destroyed by fire. The alarm was sounded about seven o'clock when assistance was promptly on hand. An entrance was made through the front of the store, but the heat was so great that nothing could be done except to remove a few goods from near the door, some furniture from the ground floor below the store, and some goods out of the cellar. The loss is estimated at about $8,000; insured for $4,700. $4,000 on the building and stock in the London & Lancashire, and the remainder in the Western on the furniture. it is not known how the fire originated, but it is supposed to have started in the office at the back of the store.

Dominion P. O. Report.

The report of the Postmaster-General shows that 247 new postoffices were established during the year, making 7,084 now in existence, with 50,461 miles of post route. Of the postoffices 2,762 are in Ontario, 1,289 in Quebec, 1,255 in Nova Scotia, 997 in New Brunswick, 295 in Manitoba, 280 in Prince Edward Island, 109 in the Territories, and 97 in British Columbia. Sixty-eight million ordinary letters, thirteen million post cards, three million registered letters, nearly nine million newspapers, ten millions of circulars and miscellaneous articles and six hundred thousand parcels were carried by the mails during the year. The total postal revenue was $2,400,062, and expenditure, $3,097,882. In none of the Provinces was the revenue sufficient to meet expenditure.

Euphrasia Council.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment on the 27th of February, 1886,

Members all present except the Deputy-Reeve.

Minutes of last session of Council read and confirmed.

By-law No. 363, regulating statute labor, carried through different stages and passed.

By-law No. 364, (public morals) carried through different stages and passed.

A petition was presented asking the council to re-consider previous action, and erect the Town Hall on old site, not granted, as the council prefers an isolated site on account of lower premium of insurance and less danger from fire.

The printing of Minutes and auditors' report, printing Voters' List, and advertising the posting thereof, was given to Mr. Starrett, News office, Thornbury, at $50.00

The Clerk was ordered to get 50 copies of By-law No. 264 printed and to send a copy thereof to each Magistrate in the township.

The Auditors' Report being finally audited by council, was accepted, and the Clerk ordered to get 500 copies of minutes of council for 1885, together with Auditors' report for said year, printed in pamphlet form and also to get abstract of Auditors' report published as the law directs.

The Reeve and Mr. Boyd were requested to see all parties interested in the widening of 27 & 28 side road and try to effect a reconciliation.

The Reeve was appointed to employ J. G. Sing, P. L. S., to survey the site recently chosen for the new Township Hall.

A resolution was carried to pass, a By-law for the erection of said hall.

A resolution was carried that the Treasurer pay to the contractors for the new hall, 75 per cent on material when laid on the ground and 50 per cent on the building, as it progresses from time to time, as council may direct.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit to R. McKnight, Esq., registrar, the sum of $9.76, payment for registering deeds, and searches made; and to J. Paterson, Mirror Office, Meaford, $5.05, payment for printing posters and advertising for tenders for building hall.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer in favor of J. L. Wilson and W. H. Dodson for $12 each, being their salery as Auditors; and in favour of Hugh Curry for $1, repairing road scraper, as per certificate of Pathmaster.

Council adjourned until the last Saturday in March next.

R. Dunlop,
Tp. Clerk.

HANDY TO HAVE.

Every household should keep some ready remedy at hand for painful diseases, sudden attacks of inflammation and accidental injuries. Such a remedy is best found in Hagyard's Yellow Oil for internal and external use. It cures rheumatism, sore throat, croup, neuralgia, lame back, sprains, bruises and burns.

A GREAT AWAKENING.

There is a great awakening of the sluggish organs of the human system whenever Burkock Blood Bitters are taken. It arouses the torpid liver to action, regulates the bowels and the kidneys, purifies the blood, and restores a healthy tone to the system generally.

A SOURCE OF GREAT TROUBLE.

Probably the most prolific source of chronic ills is indigestion or dyspepsia, causing unhealthy blood. Yet taken in time it is positively curable. Burdock Blood Bitters has cured some of the worst cases known, even of 15 years' duration. If troubled with indigestion try it.

A SENSATION.

An unparalleled sensation is being created all over Ontario by the wonderful and unequalled manner in which Neuralgia, Toothache, Rheumatism, Backache, Headache, is removed by but one application of Fluid Lightning. No offensive, disgusting drugs need be taken for days. It is an instant cure. Try a 25c. bottle from Hill Bro's. 3

YOUNG FOLKS.

Dick's Self-Denial.

BY MINNIE E. KENNEDY.

A shrill whistle, a bang of the front door that shook the house, the sound of hasty footsteps, and Dick was home from school.

"We are going to have a jolly treat to-morrow," he exclaimed as he burst into the room where his mother sat at work. "We are to meet at Will Carlton's house to-morrow after school, and his father is going to give us a straw ride. We are to take our supper with us and eat it in the woods, and then to come back by moonlight. Won't it be jolly, though?" he concluded enthusiastically.

"I think you will have a very nice time," answered his mother, smiling at his eagerness. "Now, try to forget all about it while you study your lessons for to-morrow, and then you will enjoy yourself more than if you had neglected your duties."

"All right, mother!" answered Dick, setting himself at his books with a determined air that promised well for his lessons.

It was hard work to study with such pleasure in prospect, but Dick bravely put everything else out of his mind, and at last was able to lay his books away, feeling reasonably certain of perfect marks for the morrow's recitations.

It seemed as if school would never be over the next day, and more than one of the impatient boys longed to give the slow hands of the old clock a little push to hasten them on towards four o'clock.

Dick had been commissioned to leave an order for his mother at the butcher's on his way to the place of meeting, and he was running that he might perform his errand and overtake his friends, when he met a little girl crying bitterly. Dick was a kind-hearted boy, and he could not go on without finding out what the child's trouble was.

"What's the matter, Margery?" he asked.

"Mother's so sick," sobbed the child, "and there's no one to stay with her while I go for medicine. Oh, Dick!" she exclaimed, as a thought entered her mind, "won't you go for the medicine? Here's the money and the prescription. Do please go, for she's so sick and I can't bear to leave her alone."

Dick hesitated a moment, and his countenance fell as he thought the question over. If he went for the medicine he would surely be late, and the boys would start without him; and how could he give up this pleasure upon which he had set his heart? Yet he knew how hard it was for Margery to leave her sick mother, and he knew, too, that it would not take him nearly so long as it would take the little girl to get the medicine.

"All right! I'll go, Margery," he said, after a brief struggle with his inclinations; and, seizing the money and the prescription, he darted off, hoping that he might possibly overtake the boys after all.

There was a short delay in making up the prescription, and to impatient Dick every moment seemed an hour. Just as he was leaving the store the doctor entered, and, noticing Dick's flushed and breathless state, said kindly: "Wait a minute, my boy, and I will give you a lift on your way."

As they drove rapidly along behind the doctor's fast horse Dick explained how it had happened that he had gone for the prescription.

"You shall not lose your expected pleasure through your kind act," answered the doctor. "I will stop a few minutes to see Margery's mother, and then I will drive you on until we overtake your friends."

"Oh, thank you sir," exclaimed Dick joyfully, his face radiant with delight at the thought of the ride he had looked upon as lost.

Margery's gratitude more than repaid him for his sacrifice; and as soon as the sick woman's suffering was relieved the doctor bade him jump into the carriage again, and they soon overtook the wagon, which had but just started. Dick enjoyed himself fully as much as he had expected during the remainder of the afternoon and evening, but I am sure his happiness was sweetened by the remembrance of his brave act of self-denial.

Teddy's Doughnut.

"Will you have a doughnut, Teddy?" asked grandma.

"Yes, if you please," said Teddy, politely, helping himself to one.

He liked grandma's doughnuts—big, brown, puffy fellows. Some of them were twisted and some were round. The one Teddy helped himself to was round, with a hole in the middle.

Uncle Jack looked up just then. His eyes twinkled, but his face was sober as that of a judge.

"Don't eat the hole, Teddy," said he; "it might give you the stomach-ache."

Uncle Jack was a great tease. Sometimes Teddy didn't quite know what to make of him, and this was one of the times.

He looked from the doughnut to Uncle Jack's face, which didn't wear even the first hint of a smile.

"No, sir, Uncle Jack," he said; "I won't eat the hole."

And he didn't! he left the least little ring of doughnut around it, and tucked it under the edge of his plate.

How grandma laughed when she found it there, after Teddy had asked to be excused and gone out to play! She showed it to Uncle Jack.

"You didn't get ahead of him that time," said she.

Uncle Jack laughed too, though the least bit sheepishly.

"Well, well," he said, "I guess I owe him one. I guess I owe him a good plum quart of peanuts!"

And Teddy got them.

"My motto is, 'Live and let live,'" said the soldier as he turned his back to the battle-field.

A farmer found a hornets' nest in his barn last fall and tried to burn it. The insurance on the barn has not yet been adjusted.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

There was a painful silence as the regular weekly meeting was called to order, and it seemed as if something was about to happen. It was noticed that Elder Toots had a frightened look, while Samuel Shin, Whalebone Hawker and Old Man Davis moved about on their chairs as if to avoid carpet-tacks. By and by Brother Gardner said:

"Accordin' to de constitushun of dis club, whenever any member feels so inclined he kin demand a vote of de club on de queshun: 'Hev we or hev we not lost confidence in our President?' I has now to inform you that Major Exclamation Harrison, an active member of our club, has demanded in writin' dat such a vote be taken. Dis am de first time in de history of dis organizashun dat such a vote has been demanded. De Secretary will call de roll."

Amidst the deepest silence the Secretary proceeded with his monotonous call, and of 188 members present 187 voted that they had not lost confidence in the President. The exception was the Major. When the result had been announced Brother Gardner said:

"My frens, some explanashun seems to be demanded by dese yere proceedins. Three y'ars ago de Major begun borrowin' my hoe an' spade an' ax an' wheelbarrer. As time wore on his family borrered sugar an' butter an' flour. As confidence increased, I was axed to lend de Major my Sunday butes an' plug hat, and my wife was axed to hand over her shawl an' breast-pin, whenever a funeral was to come off. De odder eavnin' de Major come ober to borrow my pink undershirt fur hisself and Mrs. Gardner's zebra hose fur his wife, dey havin' bin invited to a 'lasses candy levee. I felt it a solemn dooty to draw a line somewhar's, an' I drawed it dat night on undershirt an' stockings. He went away in a huff, and de call fur dis vote which has just bin taken am de result. I observe dat de Major am heah in pusson, and p'raps he would like to state his side of de case."

"I hasn't got nuffin to say, 'cept dat I wish I hadn't done it," replied the Major from his corner.

"Wery well. Dis chair has no feelin's toward you. De meetin' will purceed wid de reg'lar rowtine of bizness."

THE HALIFAX BRANCH.

The Secretary announced the following report from the Halifax branch club:

BROTHER GARDNER—The annual meeting of the Amalgamated Whitewash Society took place in Uno Hall last night. The finance committee reported a deficit of eight cents, owing to dullness in the whitewash business. Lime had gone up two cents per bushel, while labor was paid chiefly in old clothes and scraps, thus causing the above void in the exchequer. It was unanimously resolved to ask permission to affiliate with your club and I would respectfully ask you to bring the matter up at your next meeting. The following officers were elected for the present year:

President, Spinach Demiuss; Vice-President, Polyarchus Ramo; Secretary and Treasurer, Johannes Thomas Bummereaux; Orator, Cicero Climax; Guard, Amazing Puff

A letter was read from Brother Kellum expressing regret that, owing to a prior engagement at Rockhead, he would be absent from the meeting. The museum committee reported having secured during the past month several valuable acquisitions, among them two anthropelds, a chip taken from the Southern Cross, a copy of a righteous judgement given in the Huckleberry Court (rare) and several other curiosities equally valuable.

After considerable discussion it was decided that "the dude must go," Brothers England and Johnson dissenting. The chimney being reported on fire, the meeting adjourned.

Yours in the bonds of color,
JOHANNES T. BUMMEREAUX.

On motion of Col. Obadiah Smith the report was accepted and filed.

PASSED AWAY.

A communication from Memphis announced the fact that Sir Arthur Bascon, an honorary member of the club, had passed from earth away. His death was produced by lead poisoning, and the said lead was fired into him by a gentleman in the suburbs, who found Sir Arthur trying to unlock his smoke-house door.

Samuel Shin moved that the usual resolution of sympathy for the family of the bereaved be passed and forwarded.

Shindig Watkins objected. If a member of the club fooled with other people's smoke-houses, he must not only take the consequences, but any resolution of sympathy was a hollow mockery.

"De cha'r decides dat Brudder Watkins' pint am well taken," said the President. "While it might be possible dat de late deceased was walkin' in his sleep, or dat he mistook dat smoke-house for an orfan asylum, de chances am dat he had got tired of chicken an' wanted to change fur bacon. We will hang an emblem of mournin' on de doah-knob' fur ten days an' let de case rest right dar'."

REJECTED.

The chairman of the Committee on Applications reported that the following candidates had been rejected for the causes named.

Prof. J. B. Canterback, of Sacramento; did not state in his application that he had served two years in State Prison; probably forgot to.

Elder Moses Standforth, of Indianapolis; concealing the fact that he had a wooden leg; might have overlooked the trifle, but appearances are against him.

January Outcome, of Findlay, O., did not mention his connection with a span of horses which resulted in withdrawing him from public life for five years; considerably troubled with loss of memory.

BOUNCED.

The Chairman of the Committee on Motive Power announced that his committee had wrestled with the following charges, preferred against Cranberry White, an honorary member residing at Greenville, S. C.

1. Denying the fact that Christopher Columbus discovered America.
2. Practicing as a doctor without having received a diploma.
3. Denying that there was a city named Chicago in the United States.
4. Encouraging the sale of bogus hair-dyes.

The committee had given the accused every opportunity to disprove the truth of the charges, but he had failed to do so. He therefore stood convicted, and the committee would recommend that his name be erased from the rolls.

On motion of Lord John Wainwright, the recommendation of the committee was adopted.

DISCHARGED.

Some time since the Committee on Evolution were handed the query: "How long before the colored race will be on top?" and were asked to investigate and report. The Chairman now announced that the query had been struggled with in the most desperate manner, but that this committee had failed to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. They ranged all the way up from fifty to a million years, and one member contended that the period had already arrived. He would ask that they be discharged from further consideration of the subject.

"De request am granted," replied the President, "an' none of de rest of you need worry yerselves to solve de conundrum. When dar' am any prospect of our race holdin' de white man down I'll call a speshal meetin' to announce de fack."

LOST.

Elder John Harrison offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, Dat it am de sentiments of dis club dat de continued coinage of silver must depreciate our finanshul standing as a nashun."

"Brudder Harrison," asked the President, "do you know de amount of silver in circulashun?"

"No, sah."

"Do you know what 'depreciate' means?"

"No, sah."

"Has you had any too much silver dis winter?"

"No, sah."

"Now you drap down on your cheer, an' doan' let me h'ar from you agin fur six weeks! De meetin' stands adjourned fur one week."

The New York Life.

The steady progress of this great company, which is yearly growing greater, is marked by its annual reports at so many milestones in its upward and onward course. Its wonderful career is a further demonstration that "nothing succeeds like success." Its forty-first annual report, just published, tells of tremendous strides made in 1885, placing it in the front rank of the great leading life companies. Only try to fancy the extent of a company's operations extending not only to Canada and Mexico, but also having branches in England, France, Spain, Germany, Russia, China, Australia, etc., with an annual income of over $16,000,000 and a total amount of Insurance in force of nearly $260,000,000, and an interest income largely in excess of its death rate.

During the year 1885, the New York Life issued new policies, $68,521,452, with premium income of $13,517,426, as against $96,011,378 new assurance written by a great rival company, with a premium income of $13,461,679—or $55,747 greater income for $27,489,926 less risk. Comment is unnecessary. During the trying period of depression from 1873 to 1878 it not only held its own but slightly increased its business by $1,559,759—while six great rival companies fell behind over $81,000,000 insurance remaining in force. The mind can scarcely grasp the magnitude of such a business as is represented by the amount paid to beneficiaries by all the Companies doing business in New York State since their organization, namely, over, $900,000,000.

The Cause of Consumption.

Scrofula, manifesting itself in blotches, pimples, eruptions, salt rheum, and other blemishes of the skin, is but too apt by and by to infect the delicate tissues of the lungs also, and result in ulceration thus ending in consumption. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will meet and vanquish the enemy in its stronghold of the blood and cast it out of the system. All druggists.

Opium and Whisky.

There is no curse to the human family as great as the intemperate use of either opium or whisky, nor is there a habit formed as difficult to remove; in fact it cannot be classed as a habit after certain stages, as it then becomes a disease, as marked in its characteristics as the most deadly of maladies. M. V. Lubon, recognizing the ravages that were being made by these destroyers of peace, home and happiness, some years ago commenced to devote his whole study to the peculiarity of the condition of sufferers from these habits, and after much labor made important discoveries that have been the means of ending many cases of drunkenness, opium, morphine, chloral, and kindred habits. He has been philanthropic enough to issue a book upon the subject, which he sends free to all applicants. M. V. Lubon's address is No. 47 Wellington St. East, Toronto, Canada. We have no hesitancy in commending him, as we know him to be an honorable gentleman. Note—Lubon's Medicines or cure for the above habits may be given in tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking them, if so desired. Send your address for book and testimonials from those who have been cured.

CHAPTER XXXVII.—(CONTINUED.)

He guessed that the populace, having by this time accompanied the Khedival cortege as far as the gates of the Ras-el-Tin palace, in other words, as far as they could go, would now be returning into the town, ripe for any species of mischief, and he knew that a considerable portion would come streaming back through the Place.

Well acquainted with every in and out of the city, and consequently with narrow lanes that constituted short cuts by which he would be able to reach the Grand Square in good time that the caleche would take to do so, no matter how fast it was driven, he rushed along as quickly as his bronzed and lean legs (they were very swift ones) could carry him, and directly he gained the square began calling out at the top of a most powerful voice such disjointed sentences as:

"The English fleet is steaming in to take part with the Khedive." "He has come to Alexandria to cast himself on the protection of his friends, the Feringhees and unbelievers." "The filthy swine eaters are coming to carry away our tyrant, and when they have him their ironclads will shell the city and destroy the faithful and the mosques wherein we worship Allah and the one true prophet."

Such utterances as these were calculated to attract immediate attention, as well as to work up the fiercest passions of the mob, by the time the Grand Square was by now at least quarter filled.

The wily eunuch had not, however, yet had his full say. He had secured a hearing and surrounded himself with listeners, and no sooner being gained he at once came out with the pith of that which he had to communicate.

"What think you?" he went on, in accents of fiery scorn. "The Christian dogs are hastening to escape the fate that they have brought down upon the Faithful, who dare not to be fired at with shot and shell only because they want to govern themselves instead of being ruled and robbed by foreigners. They are running as rats run from a burning tower; but they would rob us still, even in their flight, and one will come along here presently, aye, and I see his carriage in the distance even now, who is running away with a beautiful Circassian damsel who is destined for the harem of the chosen ruler of the people, the light of a darkened nation, the regenerator of the faith of Islam, the true Khedive that is to be, the war minister, Osman Agha I am."

He told this lie every bit as coolly as though it had been the truth, and at mention of the audacious insult that had been offered by a Kaffir and an unbeliever to their lord of an hour (the greatest insult that can by possibility be offered to a Mohammedan), his listeners grew as furious as fanatics could grow.

"We will take her from him. We will rescue her for you to take back to your harem. We will kill the Kaffir who has cast the dirt on our beards." These and many similar speeches broke from the lips of those to whom the eunuch had stirred up to be his tools, and whilst they thus expressed themselves they grasped their clubs and looked ominously.

At this juncture an event occurred that was well calculated to increase their fury, the effect which, though trivial in itself, has come to make contemporary history, and is seriously thought by many to have been the circumstance that previously led to the outbreak and the terrible massacres that followed.

Close to the spot where the eunuch was quickening the vilest passions of a small handful of natives for his own and his master's selfish and evil purposes, a drunken British sailor, belonging to one of the ships in harbor, had taken upon himself to scoundrelly pounce a native donkey boy for having overcharged him in giving him his change.

In times of peace and quietude he might have lashed the youngster to his heart's content, and whether he had deserved it or not no notice would have been taken of the matter. Now, however, that the populace were so exasperated against Europeans, and so about in force, some of them very nearly rushed to their countryman's assistance, whereat the Maltese began to lay about him with his stick, calling loudly for help the while, and soon his cries brought (unfortunately) a lot of his fellow countrymen to his assistance, who had also been drinking somewhat heavily in a neighboring cafe.

Finding that they could not bring their countrymen off without having recourse to something more than fists or sticks, these men had instant recourse to knives and clubs.

Half a dozen shots were fired by them, perhaps more to frighten than to hurt, but whatever it may, one, at least, of the natives fell dead, and the first blood being shed of the "tyrant and oppressor," as all Europeans were deemed, the fact had as quick and as deadly an effect as the applying of a lighted match to a train of gunpowder.

As you might have imagined that in a single moment all those Arabs who until then had been crossing the square from one direction or the other, or standing in sullen or excited groups therein, had been changed into furious and malignant fiends.

The native whom the Maltese had killed they held up aloft as a rallying point by six men, who continued to yell out what had been done with him by "the dogs of Kaffirs" in such shrill accents that every word could be heard from one end of the immense square to the other, and the answering shout of "Down! Down!" as every Egyptian flashed his knife or bludgeon, determining to stab or brain all Europeans who came their way.

Well all would it have been for the Frankish sojourners if, once having put up their shutters that morning, they had not taken them down again, under the false impression that the presence of the sovereign of Egypt and some thousands of additional soldiers in the place would frighten the mob into good order.

Into the glittering cafes, the tobacco shops, the hotels, the plate glass windowed emporiums of fashion, the banks, and in short, into every European establishment of this, the very heart of the European quarter, rushed the wild and infuriated fanatics, and their shrieks and groans and piteous cries for help might have been heard from within most of them, and whenever the murderous enthusiasts issued forth again, the clubs of at all events the great majority were bespattered with blood and brains, and in some instances their big sharp knives were bleed dripping as well.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

TORN ASUNDER—THE PRISONER OF THE EUNUCH.

Matters were at this pass when the caleche containing Frank Donelly and his wife, with Pat Monaghan stuck up as stiff as a ramrod on the box behind the driver, entered the square, but they were more than a third of the way through it ere either of them discovered the cause of the confusion and tumult which until then they had imagined to be occasioned by a boisterous rejoicing at the arrival in the town of the popular war minister.

It was Nellie who first exclaimed in terrified accents:

"Oh, Frank, it is murder that is being perpetrated. Those are screams of agony that are mingled with the shouts and cheers. Look! look! on further, over there by the Peninsular and Oriental Hotel, they are running after and braining every European whom they can overtake. There, too, are some people being torn out of a carriage to be butchered. Oh, let us turn back or in another minute their fate will be ours."

Frank Donelly was about to issue the order, but it was already too late, for as he rose in the carriage the myrmidons of Osman Oglon, the Princess Zeeneh's aga, swarmed around it, prompted thereto by such whispered sentences as "That is the Feringhee, though he is disguised as an Egyptain." "A Kaffir sin attempting to escape in the skin of an Egyptian lion." "Have at him in the name of the prophet, and when he and his servant have been dragged out of the carriage, I will get into it and take the girl straight away to the harem of my lord and master, the saviour of Egypt and the chosen of the nation."

Thus up to the very moment of the attack had the wily eunuch worked both upon their anger and their gratitude, so that they surrounded and attacked the carriage with an excess of fury that convinced the young British officer that any attempt to parley with them would be worse than useless, and driven to desperation he tried to get at his revolver, bidding Pat to do the same and the driver to force his way along.

Instead of doing so, however, the Arab Jehu, all his sympathies being with his countrymen, made a clutch at Pat Monaghan's arm in order to prevent his getting at his shooting irons, and though the athletic Irishman would have shaken off his grasp in almost next to no time, he could not do so ere a bludgeon blow over his head knocked him off the box down under the wheels of the carriage, whilst his master, almost at the same instant firing his revolver at his foremost assailants, heard a faint snap, snap snap, without any report, which recalled the fact to his mind (with a thrill of horror at the conviction) that in his hurry he had forgotten to reload his weapon ere leaving the hotel.

It was too late to remedy the omission by drawing his sword, for ere it was half out of its scabbard a dozen swarthy hands had seized upon his arms, and their owners, by sheer force dragging him out of the carriage, would then and there have dispatched him had not a young Egyptian cavalry officer at that instant galloped up to the spot, exclaiming in Arabic:

"Hold, my brother. In killing the Feringhees you are dooming your beautiful city and perhaps your wives and little ones to destruction. His excellency the war minister requires all such for his prisoners, in order that by threatening to hang them in case a hostile shot is fired against the town he may deter the British ironclads from bombarding it. Perhaps in the end he will hang them all the same. We shall see."

Neither Nellie nor Orman Oglon heard half this speech, for the eunuch jumped into the carriage by one door as quickly as Frank Donelly was hauled out of it by the other, and grasping hold of the veiled bride, so that she could not spring from the vehicle to her husband's fate, as it was evidently her half-formed intention to do, he leant forward and said to the driver:

"To the Ras-el-Tin Palace as fast as your horses can tear along, and you shall be paid with much gold—aye, with a purse half full of gold."

Away they then went at a terrific pace, past the circular panel of the fountain, past the flowering carol trees on the one side and the shattered and rifled shops and magazines on the other, where groups of Arabs sat squatted on the broad pavement coolly dividing their spoils, whilst those whom they had butchered lay mangled corpses within the half open doors, and a few young girls even inside the plate glass windows, which they had been redressing (in honor of the court having arrived back) at the moment when the rioters had rushed in, and catching them unawares, beaten out their brains with their clubs.

Such and many another dreadful sight met her gaze, but she saw them all with her outward eye only, and without any terror whatever, for with the eye of the brain she still only beheld poor Pat Monaghan felled from off the box under the wheels and her husband of three hours dragged out of the carriage by a mob of seeming demons, who perhaps ere this had dispatched them both with a score of cruel blows and stabs, for she had been too excited and hysterical to take any comprehending heed of the arrival of the Egyptian cavalry officer upon the scene, or of what he said or did in the matter and even now she was more like a mad girl than a sane one, as well she might be.

Often she attempted to throw herself out of the carriage, not only because she anxiously courted the same fate which she imagined had befallen her husband, but also by reason that even in her present condition she recognized the hideous, insulting countenance of the eunuch plainly enough, and felt vaguely convinced in her heart of hearts that he was conducting her to a fate that to her refined mind and Western prejudices would be infinitely worse than a sudden and agonizing death.

But alas, there were none to help her. Osman Oglon sat grinning maliciously by her side, with one arm thrown around her waist, and a drawn stiletto grasped in his other hand with which he kept vowing he would kill her if she attempted to uncover her face or otherwise attract attention.

There were certainly plenty of Egyptian police about, but when upon passing the open door of a station house she beheld a few Europeans, who had apparently rushed there for safety and protection, being massacred by these men, and their bloody and disfigured corpses flung forth into the street for the wandering dogs to prey upon, she shrank with horror and loathing from such wretches, and felt even in her present condition thankful that she had not ventured to call to them for aid, whilst Osman Oglon seemed to read her thoughts.

But soon the once gay Place Mohemet Ali is left far behind, and then the governor's palace is flashed past on the right, and a momentary glance is caught of the blue Mediterranean and of Fort Pharos, with the tall, white lighthouse, all at the extremity of a narrow point of land that stretched far out into the sea like a tongue.

But it was soon lost sight of again, and then the caleche turning sharply to the left and presently passing the hospital on the one hand and the high walls and huge iron gates of the arsenal on the other, reached those of the Ras-el-Tin Palace.

The well-known form of the gigantic eunuch clad in the gorgeous livery of his agaship (uniform he would doubtless have called it) was so well known to the sentries at the gates that they did not even trouble to challenge the vehicle, but let it pass in without any seeming notice, though doubtless they wondered what female was being brought to the palace in a common hack caleche.

The stolid indifference that was written in the countenances of the soldiery appalled poor Nellie almost as much as the barbarities which she had previously witnessed, it looked to her so much as though they were accustomed to see helpless European girls pounced upon and brought to the palace in this manner, and she did not reflect that (as under momentary fear of Osman Oglon's dagger point) she was sitting quite still and also closely veiled, there was nothing about her to show them whether she was Christian or Moslem, or even whether she was yielding to force and threats or coming there of her own free will.

Neither did she know that ninety-nine out of every hundred Moslem girls would have thought it a great honor to be brought prisoners to the Khedival seraglio by the aga of eunuchs, and as great a disgrace to be taken away therefrom, even to become the one wife of an honest man.

The caleche containing our lovely heroine and newly made bride has now been driven through the winding pathways of a garden wherein the flowers and fruits of every tropical country under the sun bloom luxuriantly, and are interspersed with a hundred different varieties of blossoming trees, which joyously flourish with their roots in the water, their heads to the sun and myriads of singing birds nestling in their branches, until at last pink walls and golden, or at least gilded roofs, in company with windows innumerable, flashed upon her vision from between the green waving boughs of sycamores, acacias, fig, olive, palm, plum and carol trees, and she recognizes at a glance the famous palace of Ras-el-Tin.

But there are many winding and serpentine paths to be traversed still, bordered by beds of moss and pastures of flowers, and everywhere, in and out, about and around them are the little terra cotta channels of murmuring water, without which all their greenness and freshness would soon be scorched and withered; so that at last when the palace is really reached it is neither the front nor one of the side wings thereof that they are opposite to, but a portion thereof where the windows are few and far between, and defended with strong iron cross bars, as though they were those of a prison, whilst deep sunk in the thick wall Nellie observes a low arched door, painted in brilliant colors, and covered all over with deep cut and gilded Arabic characters.

Then, as her eyes rest on windows and on door by turns, she seems to see an imaginary fountain, throwing high into the air amber-hued waters, and the gleaming whiteness of bare necks and shoulders within the darkness of one of the deep-set windows, and Frank Donelly standing beside her in his bright court uniform, with the baleful opal ring glittering on his finger, and lastly her mother coming toward them to tear them asunder, and as this phantasmagoric vision vanished like a dissolving view, the painted door is opened and she sees standing in the aperture an unveiled woman with her face painted like a clown's.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

IN THE POWER OF THE PRINCESS ZEENEH.

The reader will have already recognized in the female who stood awaiting Nellie at the outer door of the Khedival seraglio Elmarr, the buffoon.

Osman Oglon got down out of the caleche, but never let go of Nellie whilst he did so.

No sooner were both his feet planted on the ground than he lifted his captive out of the carriage as easily as though she had been a child, and then flinging to the Arab driver a purse, which from its clink seemed to be tolerably full, he grasped Nellie by an arm again and with gentle force led her in through the open door.

As it closed behind her the legend over the gates of a certain famous prison occurred to the poor girl's mind and she kept murmuring them again and again:

Abandon hope all ye who enter here!

And well might she at all events abandon hope, for the hideous looking female janitor locked the door in their rear with one of the bunch of huge keys that dangled at her girdle, and then seizing her other arm, helped Osman Oglon to lead her along several almost pitch dark passages, and then up a staircase, at the top of which they came into the light again, and our lovely heroine found herself in a kind of spacious vestibule, that was illumined by three windows and thinly scattered with mats and squares of Turkish carpets and piles of cushions.

On some of the mats Nellie saw half-naked black girls lying like nymphs carved out of ebony, for the negresses of the Soudan are of most perfect form in their early youth, though they get gross, sometimes elephantine, with increasing years.

But Nellie only cast a passing glance on these girls, for her attention was almost immediately attracted by the vast and heavy cloth of gold bullion fringed curtain that screened the whole of one side of the seeming vestibule, and by the two gigantic eunuchs with large and brawny limbs, and scarlet and white turbans and body cloths, who stood one on each side thereof, with pistols and daggers in their belts and great broad-bladed and naked scimitars grasped in their monstrous hands.

There was no more expression on their faces than if they had been carved from wood, nor would there have been, even if the most lovely girl in the seraglio had been stripped naked and lashed to death in their presence.

Osman Oglon made to these seeming statues a rapid sign, which remained unanswered. Perhaps, however, in this case as in others, silence and stillness gave consent, for without more ado the aga raised the centre of the curtain and passed thereunder, dragging Nellie after him, and she being closely followed in turn by Elmarr.

They now passed along corridor after corridor, having curtains on brass rods here and there at regular intervals, and which seemed to be the entrances to different chambers, in lieu of doors.

Sometimes a pretty little pair of yellow satin slippers or of red heeled shoes would be lying just outside one of these curtains, and Nellie remembered to have read that this was a sign that the lady within was engaged, and that even the Khedive himself did not dare to intrude upon her privacy in the face of such an intimation.

Behind some of the curtains music and singing could be heard, and in the rear of others voices raised in merriment or anger, but no weeping or other sound of sorrow came from any direction, and Elmarr, the buffoon, drew Nellie's attention to the fact and bluntly told her to make herself happy.

But our heroine made no answer, for she knew that all replies would be equally vain.

At length she reached a curtain of much richer material than the others, and above which were two or three Arabic words engraved in gold, and now Elmarr took the fair captive by a hand and Osman Oglon relinquished his grasp on her arm and raised the curtain for the two to pass under, which doing our unfortunate heroine found herself the next moment in a room that was furnished as usual with carpets and heaps of cushions only, and in the presence of a most beautiful but fierce eyed woman, who was reclining in an attitude full of unstudied grace upon a divan, whilst a little negress, naked to the hips, stood behind her wielding a punkah and a fly flap in one, so that she cooled the air and dispersed the little buzzing tormentors at the same time.

The lady had evidently been smoking, for the little snakelike stem of her chibouque was still coiled around one of her shapely arms, but the pipe was out, or at all events seemed to be.

She threw down the flexible stem as she gazed upon her trembling visitor (prisoner would be the better word, perhaps), and said with lips that quivered with rage the while:

"So you are come. The last time that we met was, I think, in the Cairo theatre when I sent you a note which up to this moment has been unacknowledged, whilst the first time that we ever encountered each other was upon the Choubrah road, one evening after sunset, when you were too intently admiring a ring upon a gentleman's hand, or maybe the gentleman himself, to take much heed of me. Was it not so?"

The taunting speech and the sneer wherewith it was accompanied effected two things, for they aroused the English girl's indignation while they dispelled her fears.

"The gentleman whom I was with was an old friend, a fellow-countryman and my affianced husband. At present he is my husband, for we were married this morning."

The princess's magnificent and starlike eyes actually blazed with wrath at this announcement, but the baleful light seemed somewhat to die out of them as she replied in the French tongue, which she knew that neither Elmarr nor the negress could understand, but which she herself spoke even better than did her prisoner:

WINTER WRINKLES.

A hollow cost—Paying a man for digging a cellar.

Two heads are better than one—On a freak in a dime museum.

The most forward women look the most backward on the street.

"Buffaloes are bred in Kansas," it is said. They are meat elsewhere.

A performance on the slack wire—Counting a billiard game.

A grocer calls his scales "ambush" because they lie in weight.

A photographer should always take the negative side of the question in a debate.

Advertising is a good deal like making love to a widow. It can't be overdone.

Lord Fife has deserted Gladstone, but it doesn't matter. The g. o. m. doesn't need a tooter.

A woman hates to pass a pretty bonnet in a store window, but she is always willing to go buy it.

The only new thing under the sun that we know of, is the blue patch on the seat of his pantaloons.

The selfish may have much wealth; but like the water of the sea, it quenches the thirst of none.

We have just been presented with a large new waste-basket. Now send along your spring poetry.

"Brass bands are on the increase throughout the country." Even the dogs wear them on their necks.

There are two classes who do not bear prosperity—one of them being those who do not get a chance to bear it.

KILLING WOLVES BY HUNDREDS.

Queer Class of Men Who Hunt With Strychnine and Purely for Business.

There is a class of hunters out in the Yellowstone Basin, whose only ammunition is strychnine, and who hunt from November until April without taking a day off. They hunt for the money they can make, and they make a lot of it. If they made ten times as much nobody would begrudge them a cent of it, for the only game they hunt is wolves, and the wolf hasn't got many friends out there. I guess there must be at least 300 professional wolvers that scour the Big Horn country in the Yellowstone Basin above the Bad Lands, and probably as many more work the Mill River region. They are known as wolvers, and they are different from any other class of hunters or trappers.

In the autumn of the year the wolvers begin to gather at the frontier posts where they do their trading. They dispose of all the furs they may have on hand, and then fit themselves out for the winter's campaign against the wolves. They take supplies enough to last them a long time, for they seldom return from the wilderness before spring. The principal item in their outfit is strychnine. The wolvers always travel in parties of half a dozen or so, and before they go into the wilderness they divide up the entire territory into sections, the boundaries of which they know as well as if they were run out and staked by a surveyor. Each party is assigned or draws a section, and on that alone he hunts. One party of wolvers would no more think of working on another party's section than they would think of putting strychnine in a comrade's mess. They are enabled to keep within their bounds by landmarks which years of successive hunting in the same territory have made as familiar as their own names. One party, for that matter, ham't much excuse for getting over on another's territory, for a wolfing section will cover as much ground as the biggest county in Canada.

The first thing a party of wolvers do on reaching their section is to put up their cabin or repair their old one. These cabins are chinked with mud, and their sites are always in the centre of a good 'wooding up' locality, so that there will be no danger of a scarcity of fuel, for one such winter as they have out there can make one good able-bodied fireplace eat up an area of forest that would keep a whole Eastern town in fire wood for a year. Every cabin has a stone fireplace that will take in a log ten feet long, and so you can imagine how much of a fire can be built in one of them. Bonanza Mackay's palace couldn't house a wolfer for the winter more comfortably than one of these mud-daubed cabins in the very heart of the Bad Lands. There is no exclusiveness about these wilderness shelters, either. Every man's cabin is free to his neighbor. It often happens that a wolfer in a day's tramp may find himself at night nearer some other party's cabin than his own, and he seeks its shelter just as freely and with no more hesitation than he would go to his own. But he never asks more than shelter. It is wolfer etiquette to always carry plenty of provisions and to draw on your own store wherever you may be.

A good saddle horse and a pack horse or two goes with every wolfer's outfit. If he does not care to use them for the time, they are turned out on the range, where they know how to provide for themselves, no matter how deep the snow is. A large store of the general provisions of the wolfers of an entire territory is always cached, and the location is known to all. Everything for the welfare and safety of the wolfers having been done, the real business of the winter begins. Each party is provided with hundreds of long, slender pine sticks sharpened at the ends. An elk, or as many as are needed, is killed, and the carcass cut up into small pieces. These are poisoned with strychnine, and each wolfer fills a small sack with them. After each snow fall the wolfers start out. They make a circuit of miles, and at intervals sink one of the pine sticks in the snow, a piece of the poisoned meat being placed on the upper end, so that it is temptingly exposed above the snow. Two days later the wolfers go over the same route again with pack horses, skin the wolf carcasses that they pick up by the hundred, and fetch them into the cabins and prepare them for market. How many thousands of wolves are thus gathered in the Bad Lands by these persistent hunters in the course of a single season it is difficult to estimate, but the wolfers make from $150 to $300 a month apiece in the sale of the pelts they secure. Yet, so rapidly do the wolves increase, there is no perceptible diminution in their numbers.

A wolfer never hunts anything else unless he needs game to supply his cabin. A dozen elk, deer, antelope or any other game animal might pass within gunshot of him every hour and he would pay no more attention to them than if they were so many crows. He is out after wolves, for business. That is all he thinks of, and all he wants.

Service of Song.

If a nation may be made to drift into war by the influence of martial music, why may not the spirit of peace be generated and infused by the influence of sacred music and song?

The poet Lowell says one of His sweetest charities is music.

In our poorhouses there are old men and women, sad, hopeless, weary—long strangers to any gentle ministrations. In our prisons there are dull intellects and hearts hardened against open religious efforts; in our hospitals are suffering ones, so worn with pain, so weak, so near the world for which, alas! they have received no preparation—to all these might be borne, on the wings of song, the words of life from Him who came "to preach the gospel to the poor and heal the broken-hearted, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

A Christian song has this advantage over a sermon—the truth in it touches the heart of the hearer unawares, when he is not on the defensive against the gospel.

Specially successful may the hymn be if some helpful thought is repeated over and over as in the refrains of the choruses. This fastens on many a hearer and sings itself in his mind hours and days after it was heard.

Educate the hearts of the people by sacred music, and the heart will readily educate the head.

MARKDALE MARCH 11 1886

FIRE IN MARKDALE.

Grant & Co's Planing Mill in Ashes.

On Sunday morning, about quarter past three o'clock, the alarm of fire was sounded, when the grater portion of our residents awoke from peaceful slumbers to see the lurid flames leap and play magestically over and about this large building.

The fire must have originated in the second flat, and spread with great rapidity, defying even a hope of staying its progress.

The upper flat was used as a work shop in one end and furniture show room at the other, and there was no possibility of saving anything up stairs, even the tools of Mr. Grant, as also those of Silas Hill were burned. A portion of the machinery on the first flat was saved, and part of a load of furniture which had been brought in a few days previous.

The heat was desperate, endangering J. H. Hull's dwelling, about 80 feet distant, and also Trimble's large stables, across the street, about the same distance, but by a liberal application of water, both were saved.

Grant & Co. are heavy loosers as the insurance was light,only $1,700. The total loss is not less than $4.500, with about $500 worth saved.

The origin of the fire appears a mystery as there was no appearance of fire in the premises at ten o'clock the night previous.

Mr. Grant is a particularly careful man about the factory ; he is also a man without an enemy, so that no person could be suspected of committing the dastardly act.

We are glad to know that the mill is to be rebuilt again at once.

CENTER GREY FARMERS INSTITUTE,

HELD AT THORNBURY THE 24TH AND 25TH FEBRUARY.

We are pleased to see so much interest taken in the various meetings of our Farmers' Institute and have no doubt that the results will be valuable and permanent.

At Thornbury the President, Mr. Gilray, was in his place—and it would be remarkable if he were out of it—Mr. A. Turner of Markdale, the Secretary, was absent through illness, and Mr. S. Goodfellow was chosen to fill his place. The first important question discussed was "Seed Grain." Mr. Thos. Kells read a paper on this great want, which was warmely discussed and strongly favored, as it was also at Markdale, and Owen Sound. At Thornbury, however, Messrs. D. J. Hunter and Thos. Kells were appointed to wait on the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Ontario, which they did the following week. They were received with courtesy, being introduced by a letter from Prof. Brown of the Ontario Experimental Farm, who also strongly favored the scheme. this being the only county which has yet applied for assistance in this respect—though others are preparing to do so—the Minister of Agriculture could not give any encouragement, at least for the present season, though he quite agreed with the reasonableness and importance of the project. The assistance required and asked for, is a grant of say $500 for each riding which would go to pay the freight from place of purchase to two points in the riding for distribution, and to pay the expenses of two persons appointed by the Institute to select the seed, thus enabling farmers to procure a change of seed at a nominal cost or about the home market price. We hope to see the project followed up, and another year crowned with success.

Mr. T. B. White of Collingwood also read a paper on Forestry.

A PUBLIC MEETING was held in the evening, when the program rendered was of a general literary and musical aspect, and was quite enjoyable.

THURSDAY'S SESSION.

The President again took the chair. Mr. Creelman, an ex-student of the Experimental Farm, read paper on manures which was practical and very interesting and valuable.

IN THE AFTERNOON

Mr. Malcolm read a paper on home. We regret not having space to give a full report of the interesting meeting. and the several papers in full. We must however be content, for the present at least, with a brief outline, hoping that these meetings may be continued another season but with even greater interest.

OBITUARY,

Captain John Murdock, a highly respected resident of Euphrasia ; passed away to his reward on the 1st January, 1886. Capt. Murdock was born in the Island of Islay, Scotland, in 1820, emigrated to this country in 1840 and was twenty years sailing on lake Ontario, many years of which he was captain of the City of Toronto. He afterwards removed to Wellington County where he remained until the year 1869, when he again moved to Euphrasia township. Grey Co., where he resided until his demise, he leaves a widow and nine children. a very respectable family, to mourn the loss of a loving husband and kind father.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Independent Newspapers.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Anent this subject, the editor of the Advance is fairly and completely cornered. He cannot deny the facts referred to in my last, because the evidence exists and he knows it. The only loop hole he uses is to refuse to reply to an assumed name. I cannot understand what difference it can make, whether the writer be a good man or a bad one—a wise man or illiterate, as long as the facts—the bare facts be stated! He says to me "let him father his epistle if he dare, and we will cross swords with him, as all honorable men should."

Just listen, "we will cross swords with him." Why, Sir, I flatter myself that I could whittle two such young men, editors, to nothingness before breakfast, and then wouldn't consider, much had been accomplished. Politically—the subject under discussion—he must write more cleverly, and evince some degree of knowledge of the politics of his own country to prove himself to be any thing but a mere nonentity therein.

If words would make him a victor, meaningless and rabid, I admit he would easily carry off the palm. Those are not, however, all ;—consistency and truthfulness are necessary ingredients.

One would suppose that the Advance never groaned under anonymous articles, upon reading the vehement indignation of its editor ? But he hoists himself on his own petard. Who is the Agricultural Editor? who is Muggins? who is Deacon Snuke's? but A. R. Fawcett! When persons or circumstances, are attacked, sometimes very unreasonably, the editorial columns is avoided, and they catch it pell-mell, slap, dash over those assumed names. So that of all men, he has the least to complain of, if facts are stated regarding gross improprieties, of his political course, under an assumed name.

The gain must be but momentary to any man, who has not the fortitude of his own convictions, oscillating and unstable he cannot excel. A dog that is owned by nobody, will be kicked by everybody ; and as a friend and staunch Conservative I advise him, to be at least considerate.

Even last week, his denunciation of Revising Barristers, was at least for him entirely injudicious. He certainly does not understand the Franchise Act ; but, in order to curry favor with a certain class, or some other uninfluential paper which is grieved because no pap comes to its sanctum, the whole thing is bad, and the fable of the fox and the grapes is repeated.

I give every man the utmost freedom in his political creed, but claim that same privilege myself, believing that Conservatives and Conservative papers need be proud of their party and party leaders.

Yours,

CONSERVATIVE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Farmer" anent School Inspectors, evidently piques himself as an authority on this question, and would so impress your readers, if expansion or diffusion could be a factor, but unfortunately for him the depth is not there. A statement is easily made and it is one thing, but its logical accuracy is another and quite a different thing. Notice one or two things. "The Dr. says they, the Inspectors, are mere fossils of a receding age," and then he formulates, "will not this apply to old Doctors, old Lawyers, and others as well old Inspectors?" and after giving this sally, he adds, "but with this we have nothing to do." If Doctors, &c., were salaried officers, there would be some force in the question ; but the one is sustained in position by statute and can only be dismissed by a statutory course. The others, the Doctors, &c., old or young, are employed or rejected at the will of their individual employers. The farmer eager to catch, failed to notice the difference. Then take the sentence of the Minister of Education, "that water cannot rise above its level ;" upon which over forty attenuated lines are written to show that the Minister of Education and myself are wrong in our deduction, for he says, "it is regulated by forced "laws, that it is material, but mind is "immaterial, so to attempt for a moment to compare a material substance "with that which is immaterial, is out "of the question, and no wise man will "ever seek to do it. As is the teacher "so will be the scholar," &c.

This little flourish no doubt tickles our Farmer immensely. To have annihilated the Minister of Education and the Doctor, with one flourish of his pen, is huge, but unfortunately for his logic, it is very bad, and is a sad comment upon his Biblical studies which abound in illustrations, to say nothing about our best scientists, or evidences of every day life.

Comparison and elucidation of immaterial subjects, within the bounds of finite minds must necessarily exist, in use of those things, which are tangible, seen and felt ; they may be approximate, fallacious, specuris or correct, but nevertheless necessary. Our ideas of size, capacity increase, beauty, light or darkness as applied to mind are gathered from the sources named, and by the Farmer's own argument therefore, he cannot be a wise man!

He says, "many of our most learned men never were taught by man." In this statement he evidently gives no credit to eminent teachers who have written their thoughts in books, from which the pap of Farmer's "learned men" has been abundantly drawn and so successfully digested.

It will appear to the most superficial observer, that regarding the quotation of the Minister of Education, Farmer has flounndered in a maze of incomprehensibles, and that it is, after all, logically true.

The careless, impunctual, indifferent, lazy, ignorant Teacher or Inspector, begets to the schools the same habits, and visa versa.

In some other things mentioned by this Farmer, I can very readily agree with him Our whole system needs reformation ; we have too much red-tape-ism. The governing principle is being rapidly taken from the people. The only parties now that can reach the ear of the administration are the Teachers' Associations. The Trustees are merely instruments, through which the behest of the authorities are carried out.

As to the representation of farmers and kindred subjects I leave with him.

I merely adopt the principle, it we must have Inspectors and pay them, let us have the best article, but that their utility is questionable, I admit.

MRS. R...

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Monday last (fair day) was a busy day in Flesherton. The show of cattle was much the best and largest that has been on the market for several months. A large amount of cash changed hands. Business was very brisk throughout the whole day.

A SURPRISE.—On Friday evening last several good sleigh loads of the friends in connection with the Presbyterian church here assembled at the residence of J. R. Anderson, Esq., and for the evening took temporary possession. Every body appeared in the very best of good humor, in fact they could not feel otherwise with the genial presence of Mr. Anderson in their midst, and also his amiable partner and family so kind and attentive to the wants of all. After several hours had been most pleasantly enjoyed and the kind ladies had supplied the wants of the inner man with good things, the Rev. Mr. Wilson called the meeting to order, and after a few brief remarks, Mr. Anderson was presented with the following address accompanied by a well filled purse:

Flesherton, March 5th, 1886.

Mr. J. R. Anderson:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—We have, on several occasions, visited your hospitable home in acceptance of kind invitations, and have pleasant memories of the happy evenings spent in social intercourse with yourself, your family and guests.

To night we come uninvited to invade your home, and take temporary possession.

As a church we seem to have had such a large share of you, that you scarce seem to have considered your time and your talents your own, and while we are sure that anything savoring of flattery would to your nature be anything but pleasing, we think that the expression of our appreciation of your constant self-denying and untiring efforts on our behalf in leading our congregation in the service of song, and also your constant efforts in the same way in behalf of our Sabbath School may help to stimulate and encourage you.

We are not, as a church, unmindful of your valued services as a member of our building committee which your business ability and experience helped to bring to such successful issue.

Your coadjuters in that work felt not only the help of your counsil but the influence of your genial christian courtesy which oftimes turn the dry details of business meetings to seasons of pleasant and profitable social intercourse.

Believing as we do that in all these relations you seek not the honor that cometh from men.

While this address contains our sincere expression of thanks, we feel that the service you have rendered, call for a more tangible evidence of our gratitude, we therefore ask you to accept this Purse in slight token of our appreciation of your kind efforts on behalf of the congregation of Chalmers Church, Flesherton. May it be accepted in the spirit in which it is given, that of true christian esteem and affection.

With the best wishes for the future welfare of yourself, Mrs. Anderson and your family.

Signed on behalf of the congregation,

S. DAMUDE.
J. BLACKBURN.

Mr. Anderson made a very kind and fitting reply. After the singing of a hymn and prayer the happy gathering separated. We might here add that Mr. Anderson has for several years past very acceptably and efficiently filled the position of precentor in the church here, and having a few weeks ago resigned the position, the friends in the above manner assembled to express and show their appreciation of his kind services in the past. Mr. D. S. Munroe of this village has been elected to fill the vacancy, and is now weekly training the young people of the congregation for the service of song.

A social and concert given on Thursday evening last by Mrs. A. Thompson in the Town Hall was but poorly attended; the Rink on that evening appeared to be the centre of attraction. A social was given by the same lady on Saturday evening when there was a better turn out.

Walter's Falls.

From our own correspondent.

'Tis almost an assured coming event that Walter's Falls will be joined to Meaford ere long by means of the telephone.

I hasten to send you the interesting news, as the project when completed and in operation, will be our first direct connection with the outside barbarians.

You may suppose, Sir, that we have great reason for congratulation; still serious thoughts will intrude, resulting in a somewhat nervous apprehension with regard to the future.

The rapid progress made by this place lately, when we take into account its isolation, is simply astonishing, as witness the splendid roller flour mill which has achieved such a marked success under the able superintendence of Mr. Freeman; the magnificent new planing mill and cabinet shop of Mr. R. Olmstead, and the numerous other additions to the village and improvements, described in my former correspondence, taking into consideration therefore, this great advance made without any external assistance, what might be the consequence of our adopting this new scientific means of intercourse with the outer world.

Is there not the risk that the minds of our citizens will be unhinged by its operation, that the pace may become too fast, that a general unsteadiness will at last prevail, ending in great demoralization.

But this is taking only the dark side of things, on the other hand it may be contended that this place is not of mushroom, or fungus growth, that it has taken plenty of time to mature, that the foundations are solid, its denizens sprung from a tough and hardy race, are fully competent to sustain the powerful impetus to affairs that will be given by the wonderful innovation.

To converse with friends without having to surmount the interventions of time and distance, to be able by word of mouth, to transact business miles away, just as if we were present, thus often escaping incalculable personal toil and inconvenience, to whisper words of soft endearment, and run no risk of inhailing the odour of the fragrant onion, these are some of the advantages in store for us, and which we ought surely to be capable of appreciating.

Perhaps mention should be made of a distinguished cabinet maker in our midst who, having borne and braved the brunt of public opinion, has now started for himself, and is probably on the high road to fortune. This gentleman bargained with a storekeeper for a suit of clothes, to be made by a neighboring tailor. While engaged at the suit he (the tailor) ran short of thread, and sent to the store for some. The boy whom he sent, returned without getting any, was sent back again, but with the same result. Upon this the tailor became terribly incensed, sprang from his seat, "his eyes in a fine frenzy rolling," "ran away with the broadcloth under his arm" to the store, where he threw it down, at the same time uttering curses both loud and deep. Is this a case of dangerous lunacy; perhaps so; at any rate the authorities should see to it before any harm is done.

LATER.—Since the foregoing was penned, the gratifying intelligence has reached us that the tailor is restored to his equilibrium, has taken the cloth back again, and the suit is progressing rapidly towards completion.

Holland Centre.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. Wm. Love, a farmer near Berkeley, has been ailing for some time; we understand the trouble arose from the intestines growing to the inside. Dr's Oldham and Sproule recently operated on him and he is now we believe on the mend.

Mrs. Anderson, wife of the late Thos. Anderson, of Holland, died very suddenly last week. They were among the oldest residents of the township. The interment was delayed a week awaiting the arrival of relatives from Manitoba.

Our new harness maker has arrove, and is preparing for business. We wish him success.

Mr. James Williamson has returned to our village, having taken unto himself a partner, a silent one! Well, not exactly silent, but, you know what we mean. He says he is preparing for a large business in wagon making this season.

We understand that Hill Bro's of Markdale are winding up their business here this month. We regret that they did not see their way clear to make this branch a permanent one. We trust, however, that the place will not be long vacant.

Now, Mr. Editor, many persons are pleased to see their name in print, and in order to further encourage them, (as we see you give a list from time to time of all who become subscribers to the STANDARD, or renew their subscription) we will give a free advertisement for one week to each of our citizens whose name we see in that list during the month of March. Don't be borrowing the STANDARD to see Holland Centre news, and all the other interesting news throughout the country. It is the best paper in the County, and only $1 per year. Subscribe at once and secure a free advertisement.

[The above was mailed at Williamsford on Tuesday and came to hand Thursday and was consequently too late for last week.—Ed. S.]

THIS WEEK'S BUDGET.

Mr. E. H. Neelands, carriage maker, of Massie, is moving to this village, and fittin up for the coming season. Wish him success.

STILL ANOTHER.—Wm. Crowther is opening a blacksmith shop, being the third in Holland Centre.

NARROW ESCAPE.—Messrs. Lilburn have attached a steam whistle to their mill and after being quiet all winter, on Monday last the piercing sound was heard for the first time; the section men thinking the train was upon them de railed the laury in double quick time, but to their astonishment the train did not put in an appearence, and nobody was hurt.

REV. D. PERRY is dangerously ill with congestion of the lungs. Rev. Mr. Hawkens, of Owen Sound, occupied his place last Sunday.

We understand the Presbyterians of Berkeley and Williamsford have decided on Rev. Mr. Mann as their Pastor.

Dr. Oldham's horse ran off while in town on Monday. The horse was slightly scratched and the cutter fractured, Mr. Dunbar doctered the latter and the genial Dr. left, thankful it was no worse.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely develop itself into Catarrh when you can be cured for 25 cents. A few application will cure incipient Catarrh. One to two boxes will cure ordinary Catarrh. One to five boxes will cure chronic Catarrh. Dr. Chase's Catarrh cure, Sold by all dealers at 25 cents per box.

Farewell Supper.

We notice that a largely attended farewell supper was given Mr. Richard L. Stephen, in Meaford recently on the event of his departure from that town, to commence business in Markdale.

The following address was read:—

To Mr. Richard L. Stephen, Meaford.

RESPECTED FRIEND AND FELLOW CITIZEN.—We your friends and fellow citizens having learned with deep regret of your intended departure from our midst to engage in business elsewhere feel that we cannot allow such an occasion to pass without in some way expressing the high asteem in which we all hold you, not only as a business man, but also in the social relations of a friend and companion.

As a business man we have always found you prompt and honorable and possessing in an eminent degree those qualities which should always distinguish one in an active discharge of business duties, while your qualities of mind and heart have ever been such as to render you a welcome visitor and a valuable addition to every social gathering.

While we cannot help feeling keen regret at the severance of the happy relations so long existing between you and ourselves, we are confident that those qualities to which your success in the past has been due will likewise render you successful in your new enterprise.

In your departure you will bear away the best wishes of the large circle of friends who have known you intimately during your residence in Meaford and we feel safe in expressing the hope that in your new home where you will speedly form new friends and acquaintances you will still retain in your memory a kind and pleasant thought for the companions of your boyhood and manhood in our fair town.

If at any future time you should revisit Meaford you will afford your many acquaintances that pleasure which always accompanies the meeting of an old and valued friend.

If in future years this gathering shall in any way add to your pleasant memories of Meaford and of your old friends, our object this evening will have been fully attained.

Wishing you every prosperity and happiness in your new home, socially and financially. We subscribe ourselves in behalf of your many friends.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

THERE IS NOTHING LIKE IT.

There is no one remedy offered to suffering humanity whose use is so universally and frequently required as Hagyard's Yellow Oil, for rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, sore throat, deafness, croup, lumbago, and aches, pains, lameness and soreness of all kinds, when internally and externally used.

A Man Cometh.

A MARRIED MAN, OF ARTEMESIA AND A MARRIED WOMAN OF PROTON.

Our readers will remember that some time ago, a man named Smith, from the vicinity of Markdale, who formerly worked on the railway as section-boss here, and in company with a married woman named Mrs. W. Foster, took their departure for parts unknown. We are informed on good authority that the following may be relied on as facts: It seems that Mrs. Smith received information that her husband and Mrs. F. were living at Maberly, on the O. & Q Railway, and last week she went there. On her arrival a person sent for Smith, who not knowing what was wanted, came in. Imagine his consternation, when he found himself face to face with the wife, he had solemnly promised to cleave to, till death did them part, and whom he had so shamefully deserted. It is said he looked as though he could have been drawn through a key-hole. Mrs. Smith asked him to return home, promising to forgive the past, but he positively refused to do so, and after further conversation he left. Sometime after, Mrs. Smith went to the house where the guilty pair were living, to make another effort to induce Smith to return with her. She found Mrs. Foster and the children, there apparently quite comfortable. On enquiring for Mr. Smith, Mrs. F. said that he was gone, but it appears, that he had only gone into one of the rooms, and had locked the door.

The latest report received says, that Mrs. Smith, finding it no use to use mortal suasion, went to Perth, some thirty or forty miles distant to obtain a warrant for her husband's arrest. When she returned the adulterous pair had taken their departure for parts unknown, where they might enjoy their fill of love, without further molestation.

Much sympathy if felt for Mrs. Smith who is well known in Dundalk, but Smith is regarded with nothing but contempt. It is said, that in addition to leaving her to battle with the world alone, he contracted debts before going away, that will add to her difficulties. The unfaithful husband, and equally unfaithful woman, who has taken up her abode with him, should remember, that "The way of transgressors is hard," and that sooner or later retribution will overtake them.—[Herald.

HEALTH.

Food.

Our bodies are made up of what we eat.

An article to be suitable for food must contain at least one of the elementary substances of which the body consists, and this must be capable of a ready separation from all other elements. The latter, if not poisonous, will be rejected from the system without harm.

The best kinds of food are such as contain the most of the bodily elements. Milk contains all, and is hence a perfect food.

A proper diet is such a combination of articles as together furnish all the elements in due proportion, while, at the same time, these articles please the taste and gratify our love of variety. Starvation would result in time if a single one of these elements were lacking. Not only must muscle, bone, etc., be provided for, but still more, brain, nerve and every secretion.

The modern fancy for the whitest bread is at fault, for such bread is deficient in the elements that make brain, nerves and bones. Hence the tendency to nervous diseases, dyspepsia, and decaying teeth. Absence of vegetable food gives rise to scurvy; the too exclusive use of animal food, to gout.

But food must be digested. For this no less than five digestive fluids are secreted by appropriate glands—saliva, for starch and sugar, gastric juice, for flesh, fish, eggs, etc.; bile and pancreatic juice, for fat, the latter also aiding in the digestion of starch; and the intestinal secretions, to complete the process. A deficiency in any one of these results in some form of dyspepsia.

The digested food must pass from the intestines into the circulation. Hence myriads of hungry mouths seize it from the former, and pour it through countless minute vessels, which constantly unite and form larger, into the right side of the heart. Should these vessels be closed up by inflammation, the body would waste away, however good the appetite and vigorous the digestion.

This imperfect blood does not, however, yet go into the full circulation, but passes round through the lungs with the venus blood and then into the left side of the heart, whence it is sent out into the arteries a pure fluid, rich in every element.

But the process of nutrition is not yet finished. Those sleepless workers, the ultimate cells, whether of brain, or bone, or muscle, or membrane, throwing off each moment the waste debris, take from the same arterial fluid each what it needs.

Mortality of Measles.

Measles is one of the most infectious of diseases. It is communicated in all possible ways, including the breath of the patient at a time when nothing but a cold is suspected. This renders it a well-nigh universal disease, a fresh epidemic starting every four or five years among the new-born children and such as had escaped previous attacks.

Now though the relative mortality may not be as large as in some other infectious diseases, yet the absolute mortality is much beyond the popular impression.

The Medical Record recently, in its statement of contagious diseases for five weeks, gave thirty-seven as the number of deaths from scarlet fever in New York City, against eighty-five from measles.

This proportion would not hold for the country through. The total mortality from measles is nearly nine thousand a year, or about the same number as that from scarlet fever.

In the Northern and Northwestern States its mortality is about half that of scarlet fever, while in most of the Southern States it is about twice as great. The New York Medical Record thinks that statistics seem to show that the rate is increasing in some parts of the world. Thus in Paris, during fifteen years ending in 1884, it rose gradually from 3.03 per ten thousand to 8.55, or nearly treble; while in New York City, during ten years ending the same year, it about doubled.

But the direct mortality is not the whole of the evil that follows from its attacks. Among these results are impairment of health; tubercular consumption; pneumonia; chronic laryngitis; chronic bronchitis; ophthalmia; ulcerative and fatal inflammation of the mouth.

The mortality is largely confined to those whose vitality is low,—say from scrofulous and consumptive taints,—or to those whose hygienic surroundings are bad, or to those who are not treated with proper care.

The greatest mortality is during the first five years of life. Hence when children bring home the disease from school, the younger members of the family should be speedily protected.

Sunlight.

No article of furniture that will not stand a sunlight should be put in a room, for every room in a dwelling should have the windows so arranged that some time during the day the sunlight may enter freely into the apartments. The importance of admitting the light of the sun freely to all parts of our dwellings cannot be too highly estimated. Indeed, perfect health is nearly as dependent on pure sunlight as it is on pure air. Sunlight should never be excluded, except when so bright as to be uncomfortable to the eyes. And walking should be in bright sunlight. A sun-bath is of more importance in preserving a healthful condition of the body than is generally understood. It is a well-established fact that the people who live much in the sun are generally stronger and more healthy than those whose occupations deprive them of sunlight.

How Many Hours for Sleep?

There is an old saying that has frightened a great many people from taking the rest that nature demanded for them. "Nine hours are enough for a fool." They may be, and not too many for a wise man who feels that he needs them. Goethe, when performing his most prodigious literary feats, felt that he needed nine hours; what is better he took them. We presume it is conceded by all thoughtful persons that the brain in very young children, say 3 or 4 years of age, requires all of twelve hours in rest or sleep. This period is shortened gradually until at 14 years of age the boy is found to need only ten hours. When full grown and in a healthy condition the man may find a night of eight hours sufficient to repair the exhaustion of the day and new-create him for the morrow. But if he discover that he needs more sleep he should take it. There is surely something wrong about him; perhaps a forgotten waste must be repaired. His sleep, evidently, has not been made up, and until it has and he can spring to his work with an exhilaration for is he should sensibly conclude to let his instinct control him and stay in bed.

MAN HUNTERS.

The Master of the Bloodhounds and his Wonderful Convict Catchers.

"Wynton, allow me to introduce my friend, E. O. Crauswell, who is the keeper of dogs at Pratt Mines, Ala., and who has the only pack of genuine bloodhounds of the South."

The speaker was L. W Johns, the mining engineer. Mr. Crauswell advanced and extended his hand to your correspondent. He was heavily built, six feet eight inches tall, of florid complexion: and wore a wide brim slouch hat. His feet were encased in high-topped boots, in which his pants were stuffed. His coat was wore open in front, showing an immaculate shirt of snowy whiteness, on the bosom of which, half hidden in the ruffles, glittered a large diamond. He had the appearance of a desperado, but he was genial and frank and an interesting talker, with a voice as soft as a woman's, and with actions as timid as a girl's.

This is the man whose daily life is spent with a pack of bloodhounds, the fiercest animals raised South.

"I was born in Pike county, Ala., near Troy, and lived with my parents there until I was 21 years of age. My father was a hunter, and always kept a pack of dogs for hunting deer and catching runaway negroes. When I was 12 years old I remember being with my father in a race after a runaway negro. The negro had gotten about twelve miles the start, and we tracked him up a man s chimney. When I was 16 I took charge of my father's negro dogs and followed them until the close of the war. I have always been fond of the sport of running foxes, and kept it up until four years ago, when I accepted the position of keeper of the dogs at this place."

When a convict escapes a general alarm is sounded, and the dogs are ready. They are taken to the place where the escaped convict was last seen. Crauswell mounts his fast horse, and the dogs are let loose. Each dog circles for a track and begins to hunt. Every one goes to work for the trail, like as many human detectives. When the trail is found the dog who discovers it makes a signal and every other animal follows. Fannie and Bucker always take the lead with any other dog. Crauswell and horse follow at full speed, and the longer the chase the more interesting it grows.

Mr. Crauswell was asked of some of his most remarkable hunts for escaped convicts.

John DuBose was a white convict, sentenced for a long term. He escaped from the prison at the slope February 1883, and went to Clanton, in Chilton county. He had a start of five hours. He was run by the dogs until dark, when they were called in. The next morning he was followed to Clanton. His trail was struck sixteen hours old, and after he had taken the train from Birmingham. When the trail was struck it was followed three miles, and DuBose, with his wife, was found in the woods. He left his wife, and ran on. The dogs gathered around him, and he began to fire at them. When Crauswell came up DuBose swore he would not surrender, and would never be taken alive. He was shot at, and in the exchange his arm was broken. He was captured and taken back to prison.

An interesting chase was had when the outlaw, Renfroe, escaped with three others. Crauswell said: "At three o'clock A M. I was sent for to go to the shaft, a distance of over two miles. The prisoners had gone three hours when I took the track, and they had taken the railroad for Birmingham. The dogs followed the trail to the city through the main streets until the track branched of on the Alabama and Great Southern Railroad, on which they went several miles, and then went to the mountains and divided. The dogs separated, which was an unusual thing to do. Mr. Justice Collins, the manager of the convicts at the mines, took one pack of them, and Mr. J. G. Moore, the prison warden, took the other dogs. Moore caught his man after a seven-mile trail. Collins and I ran our man twenty hours before we caught him. We then returned to where we had divided on the mountain, and the dogs soon caught the trail of the third man. He had twenty-six hours' start of us, and we caught him. The dogs could never secure the track of Renfroe, and I do not believe he ever left Birmingham. It is very easy to catch a man, even if he gets an eight hours start. It is a picnic for the dogs when he only gets from two to five hours' start, and he had as well make a circle and come back to the prison, for the dog never fails."

The longest trail this man and his man hunters ever had was in march, 1884, when a negro escaped from the shaft prison. He had gone forty miles and had been away twenty-eight hours. The dogs had trouble to catch his scent after such a time. The negro took an astonishing run and went ten miles through water. He was found at last on top of a old house on top of a mountain near Warrior River. He was half starved when captured.

Crauswell was asked to speak of some of the characteristics of his dogs. "I am convinced," said he, "beyond the shadow of a doubt, that a bloodhound has more than mere instinct. I believe that they think and reason like human beings. I know that Fannie and Bucker do. The dogs are docile in camp and very vicious on a trail. Their sense follows the movements of men. There is no trouble to get them to take the track when they find it.

"After a convict is captured the dogs return satisfied and as happy as if they had caught a rabbit. When they return to the prison they become perfectly docile; when called out again they grow very excited. The affection of the dogs for me is more like that of a child to its father than anything else I can describe. I feed them myself and they have great confidence in me. I have five fine puppies, four months old, that have run on them like sheep, which are now ready to trace a man to the depths of hell, if he could travel there, and as for hiding a trail, it is an impossibility. I can running them like mad, and I guarantee them to find a trail thirty-six hours' old."

Manitoulin Island.

BY W. L. SMITH.

A good deal has been written of late in the daily papers concerning Northern Ontario; but in all these writings one very important section of the northern portion of this Province has been overlooked. And yet the section I refer to—the Island of Manitoulin—is, deserving of more than passing notice, alike on account of its extent, present development, and future possibilities.

This Island is 95 miles long, with an average breadth of 25. It contains numerous streams and lakes, one of which, Lake Manitou, is 20 miles in length; and all these inland waters are plentifully supplied with fish.

There are eight organized municipalities on Manitoulin, thirty-five schools, some twenty churches and about the same number of post offices. The population of the Island is in the neighborhood of 8,000; there are about 10,000 horned cattle, 4,500 sheep, 5,000 hogs, and the assured value of property is about $1,000,000.

During the last season of navigation there was shipped from Manitowaning alone nearly 1,000 head of live stock (chiefly cattle), seven and a half tons hides, one ton of sheep-skins, one and three quarter tons mutton, seven and a half tons dressed beef, ten tons of butter, eleven tons pork, ninety tons of flour and feed, 3,000 dozen eggs, a large quantity of fish and other products.

Notwithstanding the present development which these facts indicate this is but a promise of what our Island home is capable of. Wheat has been grown here which compares favorably both in quantity and quality with any raised in Ontario. Our soil, however, is more particularly adapted to coarse grains and roots, Manitoulin potatoes being ahead of anything in this line I have ever seen.

As a field for stock raising this Island cannot be excelled. The rock is all limestone, and the grass, which grows abundantly on this formation, is unsurpassed for richness. This is shown by the fact that Manitoulin butter, when properly made and packed, always commands the highest market price; and by the further fact that grass-fed cattle are ready for the butcher a month earlier here than elsewhere.

A creamery or cheese factory established at Manitowaning would have the most promising future before it of any similar institution in Canada.

Young farmers with a capital of from one to three thousand dollars can start here under more favorable auspices than anywhere else in Ontario. Improved farms, with large clearance, and fair buildings, can be had for $10 to $15 per acre.

The Island is within twenty-four hours' run of Toronto by rail and steamer in summer; and on the completion of the Algoma Mills branch of the C. P. R., which it is expected will be an accomplished fact next summer, we will have equally favorable connection with the outside world in winter.

Manitoulin offers an excellent opportunity to young farmers of moderate means, who wish to establish a home for themselves; it affords excellent openings for parties wishing to establish creameries or cheese factories; it guarantees excellent fishing, an unusually bracing atmosphere, and magnificent scenery for numerous visitors.

In conclusion, I have only to add that I will be most happy to furnish all possible information and assistance to any of these classes who wish it.

MANITOWANING, ONT.

A Strange Beast.

The Havre aquarium has just put on exhibition one of the most curious, and especially one of the rarest of animals—the prehensile tailed coendon (Synethere prehenzilis).

It was brought from Venezuela by Mr. Equidaza, the commissary of the steamer Colombie. Brehm says that never but two have been seen—one of them at Hamburg Zoological Garden and the other at London. The one under consideration, then, would be the third specimen that has been brought alive to Europe.

This animal, which is allied to the porcupines, is about three and a half feet long. The tail alone is one and a half feet in length. The entire body, save the belly and paws, is covered up with quills, which absolutely hide the fur. Upon the back, where these quills are longest (about four inches), they are strong, cylindrical, shining, sharp-pointed, white at the tip and base, and blackish brown in the middle. The animal, in addition, has long and strong mustaches. The paws, anterior and posterior, have four fingers armed with strong nails, which are curved and nearly cylindrical at the base.

Very little is known about the habits of the animal. All that we do know is, that it passes the day in slumber at the top of a tree and that it prowls about at night, its food consisting chiefly of leaves of all kinds. When it wishes to descend from one branch to another, it suspends itself by the tail and lets go of the first only when it has a firmhold of the other.

One peculiarity is that the extremity of the dorsal part of the tail is prehensile. This part is deprived of quills for a length of about six inches. The coendon does not like to be disturbed. When it does, it advances toward the intruder and endeavors to frighten him by raising its quills all over its body.

The natives of Central America eat its flesh and employ its quills for various domestic purposes. The animal is quite extensively distributed throughout South America. It is found in Brazil, Venezuela, Columbia, Guiana, and in some of the Lesser Antilles, such as Trinidad, Barbadoes, Saint Lucia, etc.

The old man seemed to look away through vacancy upon some bright vision, his lips apart and his finger extended. I involuntarily turned in the direction where it pointed, dreading to see some shadow invoked by its magic.

"I once had a mother; with her old heart crushed with sorrow, she went down to the grave. I once had a wife—as fair an angel as ever smiled in an earthly home. Her eyes were as mild as a summer's sky, and her heart as faithful and true as ever guarded and cherished a husband's love. Her blue eye grew dim as the floods of sorrow washed away the brightness, and the loving heart was wrung until it was broken. I once had a noble, beautiful boy, but he was driven out from the ruins of his home, and my old heart yearns to know if he is yet living. I once had a babe, a sweet, tender blossom, but these hands destroyed it, and it liveth with the One who loveth children. Do not be startled, friends, I am not a murderer in the common acceptance of the term. Yet there is light in my evening sky. A spirit-mother rejoices over the return of her prodigal son. The wife smiles on him who turns back to virtue and honor. The angel-child visits me at nights to fall, and I feel the hallowed touch of a tiny palm upon my cheek. My boy, if he yet lives, would forgive the sorrowing old man for the treatment which sent him out in the world, and the blow which maimed him for life. God forgive me the ruin which I have brought on me and mine."

He again wiped a tear from his eyes. My father watched him with a strange intensity, and a countenance unusually pale and excited by some strange emotion. But the old man went on:

"I was once a lunatic, and madly followed the malign light which led me to ruin. I was a fanatic when I sacrificed children, happiness and home to the accursed demon of the bowl. I once adored the gentle being whom I so deeply wronged. I was a drunkard; from respectability and influence I plunged into degradation and poverty. I dragged my family down with me. For years I saw her cheeks grow pale and her step weary. I left her alone amid the wrecks of her home-idols and rioted at the tavern. She never complained, yet she and her children often went hungry. One New Year's night I returned to the hut where charity had given us a roof. She was up shivering over the coals. I demanded food, but she burst into tears and told me there was none. I fiercely told her to go and get some. She turned her eyes upon me, and tears fast falling down her pale cheeks; at this moment the child in the cradle awoke and set up a famished wail, startling the despairing mother like a serpent's sting. 'We have no food, James—I have had none for two days. I have nothing for the babe. My once kind husband, must we starve?' That sad, pleading face, and those sad streaming eyes, and the feeble wail of the child maddened me, and I—yes, I struck her a fierce blow in the face, and she fell forward on the hearth. The furies of hell boiled in my bosom, and with deep intensity, as I felt I had committed a wrong. I had never struck Mary before, but now some terrible impulse bore me on, and I stooped down, as well as I could in my drunken state, and clinched both hands in her hair. 'God of mercy!' exclaimed my wife, as she looked up in my fiendish countenance, 'you will not kill us, you will not harm Willie?' As she sprang to the cradle to grasp him in her embrace, I caught her again by the hair and dragged her to the door, and as I lifted the latch the wind burst in with a cloud of snow. With a wild laugh, I closed the door and turned the button, her pleading moan ringing with the blast, and the sharp cry of her baby. But my work was not complete. I turned to the little bed where lay my eldest son, and snatched him from his slumbers, and against his half awakening struggles, opened the door and threw him out. In agony of fear he called me by a name I was not fit to bear, and locked his little fingers in my side pocket. I could not wrench the frenzied grasp away, and with the coolness of a devil, as I was, I shut the door upon his arm, and with my knife severed the wrist."

The speaker ceased a moment and buried his face in his hands as if to shut out some fearful dream, and his deep chest heaved like a storm-swept sea. My father had risen from his seat and was leaning forward, his countenance bloodless, and the large drops standing out upon his brow. Chills crept back to my heart, and I wished I was at home. The old man looked up; I have never since beheld such mortal agony pictured upon a human face. He continued:

"It was morning when I woke, and the storm had ceased, and the cold was intense. I first secured a drink of water, and then I looked in the accustomed place for Mary. As I missed her, for the first time a shadowy sense of some horrible nightmare began to dawn upon my wondering mind. I thought I had dreamed a fearful dream, but involuntarily opened the outside door with a shuddering dread. As the door opened the snow burst in, followed by a fall of something across the threshold, scattering the cold snow and striking the floor with a hard, sharp sound. My blood shot like red hot arrows through my veins, and I rubbed my eyes to keep out the sight. It was—it—oh! God, how horrible! it was my own injured Mary and her babe, frozen to ice! The ever true mother had bowed herself over the child to shield it, and wrapped all her own clothing around it, leaving her person stark and bare. She had placed her hair over the face of the child, and the sleet had frozen it to to the white cheek. The frost was white in its half open eyes, and upon its tiny fingers. I know not what became of my brave boy."

Again the old man bowed his head and wept, and all that were in the house wept with him. In tones of low, heart-broken pathos, the old man concluded:

"I was arrested, and for long months raved in delirium. I awoke; was sentenced to prison for ten years; but no tortures could equal those of my own bosom. O, God, no! I am not a fanatic; I wish to injure no one. But while I live, let me strive to warn others not to enter a path which has been so dark and fearful for me."

The old man sat down, but a spell as deep and strange as that wrought by some wizard's breath rested upon the audience. Hearts could have been heard in their beating.

The old man then asked the people to sign the pledge. My father leaped from his seat and snatched at it eagerly. I had followed him as he hesitated a moment with his pen in the ink. A tear fell from the old man's eye upon the paper.

"Sign it! I would write my name 10,000 times in blood, if it would bring back my loved ones!'

My father wrote his name—Mortimer Hudson.

The old man looked, wiped his tearful eyes, and looked again. his countenance alternately flushed with red and death-like paleness.

"It is—no, it cannot be; yet how strange," muttered the old man. "Pardon me, sir, but this is the name of my brave boy."

My father trembled and held up his left arm, from which the hand had been severed. They looked for a moment in each other's eyes, both reeled and exclaimed:

"My own injured boy!"

"My father!"

They fell upon each other, till it seemed their souls would grow and mingle into one.

There was weeping in that church, and I turned bewildered upon the streaming eyes around me.

"Let us thank God for this great blessing, which has gladdened my guilt-burdened soul," exclaimed the old man, and, kneeling down he poured out his heart in one of the most melting prayers I ever heard.

The spell was broken, and all eagerly signed the pledge, slowly going to their homes, as if loth to leave the spot.

The old man is dead, but the lesson he taught the grandchild on his knee, as the evening sun went down without a cloud, will never be forgotten. His fanaticism has lost none of its fire in my manhood's heart.

CAUGHT IN SNOW SLIDES.

The Wild Experiences of Letter Carriers in Western Mountains.

Mail carrying in the mountains is an occupation which men are not struggling very hard to obtain these days, and the postal authorities care little what politics a man is so long as he manifests a willingness to brave the terrors of the season. The avalanches of last few days have been more destructive than any known in recent years, and mail carriers, as well as freighters, miners, and prospectors, have become so thoroughly alarmed that it is with difficulty that they can be induced to take the risks of travel at all. Almost all of the mail carriers arriving here within the past week have had slides down the mountain sides that might rejoice the heart of a tobogganer, but which will answer for a life time so far as the actual victims are concerned.

A new man named Cherry was put on one of the routes lately in place of a carrier who had been injured by falling about 3,000 feet, with 200 or 400 tons of snow and ice, and as nothing was seen or heard of him it was supposed he had gone through. The other day a party of men who went out in search of some miners who were supposed to be in danger, saw an object up the mountain side, and after deciding that it was a man they undertook to get near him. As they came within hailing distance they saw that it was the mail carrier. He had secured a lodgment in the branches of a tree and was hanging on for dear life, although at that time he was nearly exhausted. One of the party asked:

"Are you hurt?"

"No," was the response.

"Then what's the matter?"

"Nothing, only I've got an almighty big scare on."

"What for?"

"Because I can't move without starting an avalanche. I've tried it forty times, and she begins to slip every time I move."

The men laughed a little at the comical features of the fellow's situation, but knowing too well the dangers of the snow, they tried to coax him down from the tree.

"It's no use," he said; "the moment I move I start a slide. More'n twenty of them have gone whooping by here in the last forty-eight hours. I never saw things hung on a hair trigger like this before. Don't you go to shaking anything now, or we'll all go down."

In reference to a question as to what he intended to do the carrier said he didn't know, but he knew that he was not going to try to crawl out of that. "I ain't no cat," he continued, "and I tell you that a butterfly could do more mischief here now than a train of cars could anywhere else."

After a short consultation the men determined to get him, and one of them volunteered to creep down to him and give him a rope which was to be held by the others. Picking his way slowly over the snow, all the time warned by the mail carrier that he was bound to get the whole party murdered, the rescuer finally reached the trees, and after a good deal of persuasion induced the man to come down and make an effort to escape. The journey back was safely accomplished, and the postman, overjoyed at his good fortune, set out for Silverton with the determination of throwing up his job.

The mail carrier between Silverton and Ouray, Lum Patterson, arrived the other night, looking as though he had been used as a snow plough on a locomotive. He had been out in the whole of the last storm, during which more than five feet of snow fell in three days. He lost one of his shoes in a slide which came very near being his last, and would have been unable to proceed at all if he had not found a board from a wrecked shanty, with which he had improvised a very respectable snow shoe.

"I never saw the snow so touchy," he said, after he had been thawed out and had realized that the assembled crowd were anxious to hear some particulars of his trip. "I started half a dozen slides myself, and that's something that I don't often do. Besides these I saw and heard plenty of others. I'll bet a man who could yell loud could have brought down half the snow on the mountains. It seemed to hang just right, and the least movement would set it going. I got out of the way of a slide one afternoon in a pretty slick way. I heard it coming, and my first thought was that I was a goner, but just then it occurred to me that if I skipped straight ahead at right angles with the coming sweep I'd have a chance of getting out of its reach. It was all done in a minute. I gave a jump and another and another, and almost before I could breathe she came crashing by me. I believe it took the buttons off my coat tails, but if it didn't it was a great oversight. Nothing of that kind had ever happened to me before, and as soon as I could get my nerves settled I jumped up to take my bearings, when blamed if I didn't start another one which tangled me up in great shape, but which didn't last long or amount to much, as it soon run into the course of the other and let me out without doing much damage. It was in that one, though, that I lost my shoe."

Speaking about the miners who are passing the winter in their cabins along his trail Patterson said: "A good many of them are down at the bottom, I'm afraid, but I found one outfit who thought they had themselves insured against slides. They are in a very exposed place, and if they ever get ageing they'll think there's no end to it. When I came along the other day I stopped in a while to rest and ask the boys if they wan't afraid of the slides. They just got up and took me up the mountain a ways, and pointed out a barricade that they had made. It consisted of logs well anchored, and about six feet high, joined in the shape of a V with the point up, and it's a pretty sharp point, too. 'Now,' says one of the boys, 'if a slide ever starts up above she's bound to go to pieces the minute she strikes this fortification and pass by on both sides of us.' I asked them if they had ever run foul of a snow slide, and they said no, and then I said I thought so, too. I guess I worried them a little, but they are satisfied, and I can't help it. But let me tell you, if a slide ever strikes that heap of timber it'll go end for end as quick as a wink, and the miners wont be a second behind the logs in getting to the bottom."

One of the mail carriers in the San Miguel district, George Winders, had a remarkable experience last week. He had been out in the great storm, and as nothing had been heard of him he was given up as lost. He got to Telluride the other night in a sadly disabled condition, made his report and said:

"I've got another mail carrier out here."

"Out where?" asked the Postmaster.

"Out in the sleigh that I came in with from Haskett's. Come and see him. Perhaps you know him."

Going out to the sleigh, the mail carrier threw off a blanket that covered the box, and there lay the skelton of a man with a mail sack strapped to it, the bones and the sack being covered with ice and snow. A large crowd assembled, and in response to their inquiries, Winders said:

"Just the other side of Haskett's I was struck by the edge of a tremendous avalanche and carried down with it. As soon as I could realize what had happened to me I found myself covered with snow, but, as luck would have it, I was able to fight my way out. When I had freed myself I saw what I supposed was my sack lying near me, and started to pick it up, when I found that it was frozen hard, and that something was attached to it. Just then I saw my own sack, and for a moment I was more dumfounded than I had been when the avalanche struck me. I got my own bag, and then I examined the other. As I pulled it out I found this skeleton, and that's all I know about it. It must have come down from above."

Nobody in the vicinity could recall the disappearance of a mail carrier, but it was decided that the remains were those of some poor fellow who must have met death in the line of duty during the great storms of two years ago. The sack, still intact, was sent to Denver.

GOLDEN NUGGETS.

Religion is a man's disposition toward his spiritual surrounding.

Wouldst thou know where I found the Supreme? One step beyond myself. Behind the veil of self shines unseen the beauty of the loved one.

Knowledge must be made vital in the heart before it can blossom into conduct; and the continual passing of right feeling into right action alone can form a worthy character.

We ought not to judge other people by their beliefs, because we do not know how they have been brought about; but we may justly apply the crucial test to our own views, and honour or dishonour them accordingly.

What is difficulty? Only a word indicating the degree of strength requisite for accomplishing particular objects; a mere notice for the necessity of exertion; a bugbear to children and to fools; but often stimulus to men.

If we are to act rightly, we must know what right is; and to this end the mind must be informed, the judgment exercised, the reason strengthened, the intellect cultivated. Every battle against ignorance, every effort to expound the laws of our being and to show how the truest happiness and the highest duty are always consonant, is a direct help to the cause of right-doing.

Our honest convictions may be very wise, but it is the occasion and method of our utterance of them which best prove our wisdom. If there is any worthy object in three utterance, it is the enlightenment of others; and this will be best secured in proportion as we have their ear and confidence. He who carries his varying heart upon his sleeve and utters all his mind commands but small respect; and small is his influence.

Driving With One Hand.

Hear the sleigh bells how she chatters
With her beau!
How she chatters, chatters, chatters,
Of innumerable matters
While the horse's heel bespatters
Her with snow!

See the sleigh bells with her lover!
How they feel
Like a pair of colts in clover,
This sweet sleigh bells and her lover,
Underneath the dainty cover
Of the seal!

See the people stand and stare
At the belle,
As, with loosely flowing hair,
And a smile beyond compare,
She is speeding through the air
With a swell.

Oh! such weather suits for riding,
Though 'tis rough,
And the sleigh bells loves the gliding,
And such merry, merry sliding,
With her fifteen fingers hiding
In her muff!

When a young lady tells a young fellow that she will not have him, does it tie him up in a beau not, as it were?

THE FARM.

Weaning Calves.

Every animal upon the farm should be subjected to a course of training as soon as it makes its appearance. This is desirable, and, indeed, indispensable for the best results, with all live stock, from the chickens to the colts. Docility involves ease of management in every way, and this saves labor and increases the profits from the use of the animals. In a dairy, docility is one of the most important characteristics of the cows, and the dairyman who has experienced the advantage of it, will always give his most careful attention to the training of the calves. Weaning is the first lesson to be given. A calf should never be permitted to suck the cow. This enforced habit changes—in time—the disposition of these young cows, which never having suckled a calf, and never having been nursed by a dam themselves, make no trouble over the removal of a calf. They never hold up their milk, and are rarely troubled with garget, or have the common vices of cows which grow out of their natural affection for the calf, after they have been habituated to its company, and have nursed it. My practice has always been to remove the calf as soon as it is dropped, watching the cow until she has been safely delivered. The calf is taken to a pen provided for it at a distance from the cow stable where it is out of sight and hearing. The calf is rubbed dry, and is comfortably bedded in this sheltered pen. The cow is tied in the stable and given a mess of warm bran and linseed meal slop and is milked. The milk is then given to the calf, which is taught to drink by giving it two fingers, separated, about an inch, through which the milk is easily sucked. Three meals a day are given. This is continued until the fourth day, when the milk is fit for use in the dairy. After this skimmed milk warmed to ninety degrees is given three times a day, and no more than three quarts at a meal during the first month. The calves are kept alone; a small bundle of clean, fine hay may be hung in the pen, and they will soon begin to eat it. By perseverance in thus weaning a calf, not only from its dam, but from its natural inclination to suck, much future trouble will be avoided.

Care of Sitting Hens.

March is the month to set the hens, for the earlier after this they are set, the better the chicks will prove. Of course every hen has been set that would stick to her nest during the past month, but as hens must lay out their clutches before the sitting fever takes possession of them, the larger number will not be ready for the nest before this month. Do not sell any eggs now, but crowd the hens by setting all that can be relied upon. When it comes to finding them all nests, much discretion is needed, that confusion does not cause trouble and loss. Of course, the simplest way to set them is in rows in the hen-house, but the hens will not all remember their own nests, and will crowd two or three on one nest, leaving their own eggs to become cold and perish. It is advisable to set the hens in different rooms and apart from one another, but if the nest rows must be used, then there must be careful watchfulness. A good rule is to keep the windows well darkened, so that the hens will not be tempted to leave their nests until noon. When you give the other chickens their noonday meal; and while they are feeding, go into the hen-house, take all the setting hens off the nests, and make them go out to feed. While they are out, clear the nest of broken eggs, dirt and feathers, loosen up the straw a little, and dust Persian insect powder over the eggs. Now comes the critical time. Do not forget what you have done, and do not trust the hens, but within half an hour be sure to return, and see that each is on her own proper nest, or you will have trouble every time they come off. Hens are creatures of habit, and a little training goes a great way with them. If they can be made to keep the same nest three or four days, there will be little danger that they will make any mistakes about it for the remainder of the time. That will save you the trouble of moving them, but not the responsibility of seeing that they return promptly to their nests after feeding. When all is right, darken the sitting-room again and leave them until the next day at feeding time.

Light Brahma Fowls.

The Light Brahma fowl, from the time of its first introduction to Canadian poultry breeders, has been held in the highest esteem. Other varieties have come up, the Plymouth Rock and Wyandottes as market birds, and Leghorns in variety as egg-producers, still the Light Brahma has held its own as a family fowl among the lovers of choice poultry. Although quiet and unassuming in style, it has great dignity of carriage, and is really a majestic fowl. In excellent qualities for family use, it is hardly approached by any other. Its flesh is juicy and tender, and as it puts on flesh very fast it remains a "chicken" until fully grown. The excellence of the hens as layers depends greatly on how they were bred, for some families are extraordinary egg-producers, taken in comparison with other large bodied fowls. They are layers of large buff-colored eggs, which are very rich, and great favorites in the market. In disposition they are very kind and quiet. An ordinary picket fence, three feet high, will restrain them, and if handled gently, they can be picked up at any time. The plumage is white with black points. The tail is black, as are also the flight feathers of the wings, which are not discernible when the wings are folded. There is also a fine penciling of black in the neck. It has a "pea," or triple comb, which being small and set close to the head, is proof against all ordinary frost. They are easy to rear, very hardy, quick growers, and make very heavy fowls. On a well kept lawn, there is nothing handsomer than a flock of Light Brahmas.

NEW PAPER.—A copy of "The Creemore Advertiser" Vol. 1, No. 1, is to hand and presents a very healthy appearance. It is Independent in politics presents a creditable appearance generally, and starts out with an excellent advertising patronage. We wish Mr. Ball, the proprietor every success.

The latest swindle on a small scale is carried out as follows:—A man in reply to a "catch" advertisement in one of the daily papers, sent twenty-five cents to learn how to make $50 a week at his home, working on a capital of $1. In reply he received the following instructions on a slip of paper:—"Fish for fools as I do."

THE STANDARD to any address the balance of 1886 for 75 cents, half cash and half money. We trust every subscriber to this paper will look to the address label, and if the date thereon is some time past, to have it changed to some time in future by renewing. It dosen't take much to keep us, but sakes alive, we can't live on nothing exctly.

EDUCATIONAL.—We have received from the Minister of Education, a pamphlet of 135 pages on School Architecture and Hygene. It is gotten up with great care and contains a vast amount of information especially valuable to trustees in selecting sites, and building school houses, giving plans, &c., for the proper draining of grounds, and heating and ventilation of buildings.

THE following is a list in order of merit of the names of those who obtained 60 per cent or over at the monthly examinations for the month just ended: Class V.—Geo. Bowes, Herby Brown, Peter Thibaudeau, John Thibaudeau, Harry Large. Class IV. Sen.—Pythagoras Thibaudeau, Willie McFarland, Elijah Jones, Herbert Hull, John Dundas, Johnson Wilson. Class III.—Ada Reynolds, Percilla Dormer, Johnny Knapp, Thomas Noble, Bessie Moffatt.

DISCHARGING A MORTGAGE.—Our Horning's Mills correspondent and the Markdale STANDARD were wrong in stating that there was a mortgage of $1000 on the woollen mill at Traverston belonging to Mr. Kennedy and recently destroyed by fire. Mr. Kennedy, sr., has informed us that there was no mortgage on the place. The Kennedys have purchased and will operate a mill at Sullivan. The Messrs. Kennedy seem to be men who come up smilingly even after the roughest kind of treatment. We wish them success in their new factory. —[Shelburne Economist. (The above is quite refreshing; we were led to believe Mr. Kennedy was a heavy looser, and left in streightened circumstances and gave cheerfuly to his charity fund. We also notice his little printing account is yet unpaid.—Ed. S.)

The virtue of Carbolic Asid for healing cleansing and purifiyng is well known; but from the many modes of applying it, the public is uncertain how best to use it. To meet that want, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate is prepared, and may be used with confidence. Do not be misled. Take only McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold at Hill Bro's. 4

Mrs. Robert Hooper, of Kinloss, county of Bruce, in a letter, says: "I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints for a number of years, and am glad to say to the public as well as friends that McGregor's Speedy Cure brought me around, and I am now all right, thanks to McGregor's Speedy Cure. Hundreds of like testimonials are frequently received, and are daily proving that this is truly a wonderful remedy, curing Sluggish Liver, Bilious Headache and Costiveness, where all else fails. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 4

Fluid Lightning does not take a day or an hour to remove Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, Lumbago or Rheumatism, but will do it instantly, and without carrying your head in a poultice for a day or using greasy liniment. Try a 25c. bottle from Hill Bro's. 4

IT is surely refreshing to hear of a man who does not care for money, and wants only a very little of it. Sam Jones, the southern revivalist, who is now trying to convert the Chicago people, claims to be that kind of a man. Committees are importuning him on every hand to make lecture engagements, but he is positively not in the lecture field He is very earnest on this point. He is not working for money. "I have no use whatever for money; I have all the money I want. My needs are supplied bountifully. I get plenty to eat plenty to wear. My family is comfortable and happy, and I can't see what on earth I would do with money if I had it. Why, money is a detestable nuisance; it is always in the way, and I don't want it. A couple of hundred dollars in the bank is an abundance, and is all I have. As long as a man has plenty for his wife and children and himself he ought to be contented. As far as money is concerned, I wouldn't be bothered with it. I don't think the Lord sent me out into the world to make money, but he did send me out into the world to do good, and I am going to work for him until I die. As far as my wife is concerned, my life is insured for $12,000 the interest on which, when I am gone, will be enough to keep her; and as for my children, I don't want to leave them $1. If they are of any account they won't need it; if they are no good money would be a curse to them. "That is my doctrine.—[World.

RAPID WORK.

"For two years I was troubled with dyspepsia—could neither labor nor find relief. Less than one bottle of B. B. B. relieved me—3 bottles cured me." So says John A. Rappell, of Farmerville. Burdock Blood Bitters cures dyspepsia, liver and kidney complaints, and all impurities of the system.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Dability and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, Frence or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

AN OLD TIME FAVORITE.

There is no other remedy that has stood the test of time so long as has Hagyard's Yellow Oil for rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, pains in the chest, colds, croup, sore throat, deafness, and most painful affections.

THE WORLD'S BEST.

It is certainly remarkable the wonderful cures effected by West's World's Wonder or Family Liniment. This remedy has not an equal in the world for the speedy cure of Rheumatism, Sprains, Cuts, Bruises and all diseases requiring external application. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Mar.

Why suffer from that annoyiny Cough when it can be perfectly cured with West's Cough Syrup. Do not hesitate, as it is exceedingly dangerous as it may prove the forerunner of a sever Lung complaint. It will cure Asthma, Bronchitis, and all threat and all Throat and Lung complaints. Price 25c. 50c. and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Druggists. Mar. 18

SURE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.

If the system is properly cleansed by some medicine that acts upon the bowels, kidneys and skin, such as Burdock Blood Bitters, and the sufferer will use Hagyard's Yellow Oil according to directions, there are few cases of rheumatism, however bad, but will yield promptly to the treatment.

TOWNSEND'S LAKE.—The tea-meeting held in the Methodist church on Monday evening, 15th inst., was a decided success and proved to be one of the most interesting and pleasant social gatherings ever held in this place. The ladies of the congregation assisted by others who are not members of the church, provided a very bountiful and palatable tea. Charles Moffat, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, was elected to the chair and for wit and efficency in that position is not surpassed by any man in the County of Grey. Several recitations and readings were given in a pleasing way. Wm. Brown, Esq., of Markdale, gave an excellent address on Patriotism, and Rev. C. V. Lake of Durham, gave the audience his views on the Irish question and home rule which was well received, G. Lamb, C. Boyle and others were called on to addressed the meeting which they did in a few appropriate words. The singing by the choir of the Zion appointment of the Durham circut was good and added much to the enjoyment of the meeting. The Solos by Mr. and Mrs. Bliss and also by Mrs. Cook and Mr. Bliss were well rendered, in fact Mr. Bliss is a host in himself. The Rev. Thos. Grandy, Pastor of the church, made a few remarks and the meeting was brought to a close in the usual way. Proceeds $20.50.

THE FARM.

The Seed Potato Puzzle.

Of all the various causes which conspire to make the average yield of the potato crop so ridiculously low—eighty-five bushels per acre, or thereabout—none has seemed to me more potent than the prevailing practice of light seeding, as advocated by many prominent agricultural writers. For a number of years I have made this matter a subject of often repeated tests, and tried by the publication of their results to persuade farmers to adopt a common-sense method of seeding. It pleases me to see so many coming to the support of the new method, among them also the New York Experiment Station (see "Whole Potatoes Best for Seed" in Tribune, January 20.) Doubtless, however, many advocates of heavy seeding may lead their followers into grave mistakes. The advice to plant whole or half potatoes must be hedged in by several "ifs." The would-be teachers either have not detected, or fail to point out, the decided difference, in the behaviour of dwarf (synonymous with early) and tall (synonymous with late) varieties. The all-sweeping claim that whole tubers are the best seed is all wrong.

"With early varieties," to quote from my little work on potatoes, written somewhat over a year ago, "we can hardly conceive of any combination of circumstances which might prevent a corresponding increase of yield from heavier seeding." In all my tests I have never found the yield of single eyes of dwarf potatoes, like Early Rose, Early Ohio, Early Sunrise, etc., to exceed 43 per cent. of the yield from good-sized tubers, except during last season, when a patch of Early Sunrise, planted six inches in the row with rows three feet apart, yielded at the following rate per acre: Single-eye planting, 250 bushels; whole tubers, 540 bushels; and this in spite of the fact that rich and well-tilled soil, a moist season and all other circumstances were particularly favorable to single eye planting. Many farmers, no doubt, will call a yield of 540 bushels of early potatoes per acre a very large yield. I considered it in some sense a failure and attributed it to late planting. Had the patch been planted two weeks earlier, that is, at our usual planting time, the yield would probably have been much larger.

Let me say now, most emphatically, that maximum crops of early patotoes can only be grown from full seeding, a whole large tuber being better than a small one, and this better than a still smaller piece. The heaviest seeding invariably gives the largest yield. With late, that is, tall-growing varieties, the matter assumes an altogether different aspect. An over-dose in seeding here may result in utter failure of crop. The use of whole large tubers for seed is safe only when planted on light, thin soils and in check rows. The richer the soil and the more vigorous (taller) the variety, the less seed must be used. Closer planting also requires smaller seed pieces. To regulate the proper quantity of seed, which will give the best results, is no easy matter and often may puzzle the expert, as the reason itself, which nobody thus far has been able to foretell, has a very decided influence upon the comparative yields from lighter or heavier seeding. For common farm soils, upon which the majority of our growers raise their crops of late potatoes, I should recommend to plant, as a minimum, one piece of fair sized tuber, which has been quartered lenghtwise, by cutting square through the seed end.

The quarters, weighing not more that one and one-half ounces each, are to be planted eighteen inches apart in rows three feet distant. If planted in check rows, three by three, twice that quantity of seed per hill is not too much. When American farmers generally adopt the common-sense system of planting a sufficiency of seed, as suggested by these remarks, the average yield of the crop—even without any other change in many of the antiquated or indifferent methods still so generally in vogue—will largely and certainly increase to the amounts approaching the capabilities of the soil. At present these yields are much less than the soil is able to produce. People who plant single-eye pieces have occasionally grown crops of 300 or 400 bushels to the acre. They report their "remarkable success" to the agricultural papers and speak enthusiastically of the single-eye planting. Had they planted half or whole potatoes instead of single-eyes, they would (as I infer from my experience) have had to report yields of 500 or 600 bushels and upward per acre. All tests should be comparative; if not, they are of no value.—[T. Greener.

Agricultural Items.

One spoonful coal-tar to a peck of seed corn will prevent crows from pulling up the corn.

A crop of mangels yielding forty-two tons of top and roots, thirty-three tons of the latter, has been grown at a cost of $1.60 per ton.

Children leave the farm, says Mr. J. J. Thomas, because it is not attractive. He suggests that less money be spent on buildings and more on grounds.

All experience goes to show that the farmer who has smooth land which can be cultivated by horse-power, and neglects to raise a root crop, fails to live up to his privileges.

A "root market" is a feature of many English market towns. Roots are brought in and sold in loads just as hay is brought into our markets. The annual root crop of England is enormous. It is a great help to her cattle interests.

Truck farmers near Savannah say that there will not be any early vegetables this year. Everything is or will be late. The January freeze and the subsequent cold snaps killed all of the vegetables that were growing and set the season back.

The partridges suffered severely in the recent sleet storm in Maine. Lumbermen and wood-choppers frequently come across the feathers of these birds beside the holes in the snow from which the foxes and other animals have dug them out to eat them.

Bisulphide of carbon is, in the opinion of M. Pasteur, the most efficacious of all antiseptics. It is also the cheapest, and, although offensive in point of odor, is capable of complete purification. Large quantities are used to check the ravages of phylloxera.

The chances for success in life are much greater for the boy who has grown up on the farm, and the industrious habits formed and the fact that his evenings were spent at home are what gives him the stamina which enables him to win in the battle of life.

According to a recent discussion, a grass in order to be most valuable for pasture must possess the following characteristics: Be well suited to the locality, both as to soil and climate; nutritious; palatable; capable of growing continuously, so as to constantly renew its foliage when cropped; endure the tramping of animals; be easily propagated.

SCIENCE AND ART.

Flint-bricks are made of the waste sand of glass factories. They are strong and durable, resisting action of the sun, rain and acids.

It is said that glycerine in its pure state should not be used for chapped hands, as it absorbs moisture from the skin, thus leaving it dry and liable to crack. When moderately diluted with water, however, glycerine is an excellent application.

The British experiments to test the relative merits of oil, gas and electricity for lighthouse illumination have resulted in demonstrating the superiority of electricity over all other lights, even, as has been generally doubted, in dense fogs.

Copper-lined tanks are often known to trouble by leaking, after a few years, much of which arises from the manner of soldering. Most plumbers use common solder, made of lead and tin. For this kind of work pure tin should be used, and the laps thoroughly sweated through. The nails should also be of copper.

The metric system of weights and measures was adopted enthusiastically in many laboratories when first introduced, but it is now said to be rapidly losing ground. The fact that the misplacement of a little dot will turn a comparatively harmless dose of medicine into one having a deadly poisoning power bears strongly against it.

A scientific journal gives an account of a pianoforte made in Paris in which paper was made to take the place of wood, the whole case being made from paper so compressed that it was enabled to receive a hard surface, which took a perfect polish. The color was cream white. The tone of the instrument is reported to be not loud, but very sweet.

Experiments on an extensive scale have been made in Germany to ascertain the relative strength of iron and steel girders. The soft-steel girders proved to be twenty-two per cent. and hard steel girders sixty-six per cent. stronger than the iron girders; and it is remarked that it seemed pretty well established that the strength of steel girders is about the same for the two flanges, if made alike, in sections.

A mixture of zinc white with zinc chloride is found to furnish a paint of great value both for wood and metals, as it becomes very hard, and can be washed and brushed without injury, which qualities are, of course, of prime importance. An essential precaution, however, to be observed in regard to this paint is not to apply in rainy or frosty weather, as it then becomes mealy and scales off.

It is sometimes said that the term horse-power is incorrect, because it does not express the actual power of an average, or even an exceptional, horse. This really makes no difference. The animal should be entirely eliminated from the mind, and the term taken at its exact meaning, viz.: the raising of 33,000 pounds one foot high in one minute of time. A horse would fall short of doing this for ten hours a day; a steam engine will do it for twenty-four hours.

In recent electric-lighting experiments, it has been attempted to give each lamp its own battery. Perfect success is reported, and portability has been gained by the use of a battery of great power and small size. The elements are a small packet of chloride of silver and two plates of zinc, which are placed in the cell with a weak solution of caustic potash, forming what is known as the Skrivanoff primary battery. After a time the chloride of silver is reduced to metallic silver, when it is easily restored by washing in a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acids. With each renewal, a small battery will feed a glow lamp twelve hours.

It is reported that a steam engine in which the dead centre point is obviated has been invented by a German engineer. In this engine a block constructed with a slot through which the crank-pin passes is fastened to the piston-rod. This slot is diagonal, and has concave edges facing each other; at each end of it is at a recess. The slide-valve has attachment with a rod furnished at its lower ends with tappets, against which the ends of the sliding-blocks strike, thus reciprocating the slide-valve rod. The necessary expansion is imparted by spring-arms attached to the levers from which the rods are suspended.

Then and Now.

"The golden age of great Elizabeth" appears but bare and poor when contrasted with our own. Women servants were paid about three dollars a year, besides one dollar for clothing, and meat and drink. Most of the gentry gave their servants but one substantial meal each day.

The houses of farmers and mechanics were still, for the most part, huts, without chimneys; the smoke escaped by doors and windows, after it had well-nigh blinded the inmates. Even the great palaces, as the French ambassador reported, were without carpets, "the floors being strewed with rushes, which remain for months, receiving mud, bones and grease from the table, and filth of every kind, until the stench and vermin in these great houses are insupportable." The plague which raged in England in those days was due to the uncleanly condition of the houses.

Strada gives an account of the wedding of the son of Archbishop Parker to the daughter of the Bishop of Chichester, which contrasts oddly with the magnificence and cost of a marriage now in wealthy families in this country.

"The bride had with her as dower a gelding; for her apparel, ten pounds; of her own stock, twelve pounds; and of table-linen, one damask cloth and one towel, two pillow-bears, two long cushions, one silver salt and standing cup, and, when they rode to visit her mother, ten pounds in money."

Napkins and table-cloths were seldom used; forks were almost unknown. Even the dainty Lady Jane Gray made her breakfast on "swine-flesh and ale," cutting and tearing the meat by the aid of a knife and her fingers.

When we contrast this bare, life with the luxury of our own days, the countless appliances which science, art and wealth have brought from every quarter of the globe into a Canadian home, we are apt hastily to call ours the age of civilization.

Yet the genius of Shakespeare and the wisdom of Bacon grew out of that poor outward life; the finest flower of English literature blossomed in it; and men and women found in it a faith which sustained them triumphant at the stake.

"A man's life," says Holy Writ, "consisteth not in the abundance of things he possesseth." Boys or girls whose poverty in 1886 makes their life as bare as if they had been born in the age of Elizabeth, must keep in mind that decorated houses, soft clothing and dainty fare were not needed in those days to nurse poets, heroes, or martyrs into life.

Flowers that Bloom.

BY ANNIE L. JACK.

Just now the windows where the geraniums grow and flourish should be bright with these gay and beautiful blossoms, for they revel in the sunshine that comes to our clear Canadian climate in early March.

It is a plant adapted for window gardening or for out door culture, and will start easily in a moist warm atmosphere from very tiny cuttings. These cuttings must have two joints, and are less likely to damp off if laid aside before planting for a few days, as the broken end heals over and prevents the sap escaping. If stuck around the rim of the pot they will often root if one does not want many plants, as the heat from the pot gives the added warmth. To make large plants give plentiful bloom in winter, it is necessary to keep them from blooming much during the summer season. This can only be done by keeping them potted and giving but a scanty supply of water. There is a great difference in the length of time a floret of geranium remains in bloom. Some of them, particularly the single white, hardly hold a day, while others, as the single rose pink, retain the floret on the stem for three, and even four weeks. They require a rich, loamy soil, and a bed of the gay scarlet, or crimson flowers massed together and edged with some of the silver leaved centaureas, is a dazzling sight at midsummer. As a flower to wear it seems too large, and the trusses are often clumsy and awkward. But there are some delicate varieties that are suited for a gentleman's button hole adornment—and there is a cheerful, not easily faded appearance about them that recommends them in whatever situation they are placed.

In the language of flowers the geranium signifies "confidence," or "trust," and of it the poet has sung in tender verse:

"Emblem of that true steadfast mind
Which, through the varying scenes of life,
By genuine piety refined
Holds on its way midst noise and strife."

A Chinaman walked into the public school at Ellensburg, Oregon, the other day, with books and slate, and wished to be enrolled as a student. The teacher permitted him to stay until noon, and then the directors told him that the Chinese must go.

GOOD ADVICE.

Mamma: IT IS VERY WRONG IN YOU, JOHNNY, TO QUARREL IN THIS WAY.

Johnny (who has just had a fight with his brother Tom): WELL, I GOT MAD AND HAD TO DO SOMETHING.

Mamma: BUT YOU SHOULD NOT LET YOUR TEMPER CARRY YOU AWAY IN THAT MANNER. I WILL TELL YOU A GOOD RULE: WHEN YOU ARE ANGRY ALWAYS COUNT TWENTY, BEFORE YOU STRIKE.

Tommy (the victor in the recent unpleasantness): YES, AND HE'D BETTER COUNT FORTY, BEFORE HE STRIKES A FELLOW THAT CAN LICK HIM.

YOUNG FOLKS.

What Every Boy Should Learn.

Every boy should know how to tie a square knot. To tie a square—and not a granny knot," every time, without stopping to think how it is done, is an important part of a boy's education. But there are many other things a boy should learn early in life, as by so doing he will save himself much mortification when he becomes a young man. Nothing so troubles a young man when he goes among people of his own age, as to feel that he is considered "green." He should early learn to control himself, and stand still. Many boys, without being conscious of it, are constantly wriggling. They fidget, when standing, and do not know what to do with their hands. When sitting, the trouble is with their feet, and they with unconsciously cross their legs, one over another. Let every boy who reads this, train himself like a soldier, to "stand at ease," and also to sit at ease.

Every boy should recollect that the mouth has its proper uses, but these are not to look with, or to see with. When you are listening to something that interests you, keep your mouth shut. In seeing anything, no matter how strange, do not open the mouth, as if that would help take in the sight. Keep the mouth shut when not eating or talking. Personal cleanliness and tidiness, should become a habit early in life. Do not be afraid of any work, however it may soil the hands, but when through for the day, be sure to have the hands in proper order. If the hands are browned from exposure, or stained by the work, do not mind them, but let them be as clean as soap and water will make them. After washing the hands, clean the nails, and if need be, trim them. Never go to the table at home, with the nails "in mourning," and you will be sure not to do so elsewhere. It hardly needs to be suggested that the hair should be in order for each meal. Some one has said, that "a bad set of teeth, is an American Coat of Arms." We hope such does not apply to Canadians. It is true, however, whatever may be the cause, that bad teeth, or bad teeth, are more frequent in America than any other country. Every boy, after he gets his second, or permanent set of teeth, should begin the daily use of a brush and water. The brush need be but moderately soft. If water alone does not keep the teeth clean, rub the brush upon a piece of white soap before using. A boy should early acquire the habit of removing his hat whenever he enters the house. If he observes this for his own house, he will be sure to do so on entering all other houses. The other extremity, the feet, should not be forgotten. No farmer's boy should not take his working shoes (or boots), into the house with him, on account of their adhering soil. At the back stoop, or other convenient place, change these for slippers, or a pair of old, but clean shoes, kept for the purpose. Whatever be the foot gear, when not at work, if not polished, let it be at least always clean and neat,

Many boys have an expression, or a set of expressions, which they use on all occasions. When told of something, they say: "How you talk!" or "Well, I never!" "You don't say so!"—when the other has just said so Still worse is it to express, "I swan!" or "Jerusalem crickets!" "Gosh all January!" or any such vulgar phrases, some of which are but poorly concealed profanity. When told something new, how much better it would be to say; "I am surprised," or "This is new to me, and I thank you." The use of slang phrases, as they deserve to be called, is not confined to young people, who should not use them, were it not for the example of older persons, who should know better than to use such is a mark of limited intelligence.

Accustom yourself, in asking a favor, to say "if you please," and in accepting one, however slight; always add, "I thank you," instead of "thanks."

In observance of the points above given, will prepare a boy to go anywhere, without fear that he is looked upon as green and awkward. These we regard as necessary for every boy to observe, but though these remarks are addressed to the boys, their sisters, the girls of the family, may find in them some points which they may observe with benefit.

The Wife That Didn't Say a Word Against Her Husband's Late Hours.

A party of gentlemen were discussing domestic subjects. One of them said: "Oh, gentlemen, when a man marries he may naturally expect to surrender many of his liberties. He cannot stay out late at night, even he go to so many places of amusement as he could previous to marriage. I suppose there ever was a woman so even tempered that she refrained from scolding her husband for staying out late at night."

"You are wrong," some one else remarked. "No matter how late I stay out, my wife does not scold me."

"She may not scold you, but she shows by the tones of voice, if not by her words, that she does not like to be left alone."

"No, sir. The other night I stayed out until twelve o'clock, and when I went home my wife did'n't say a word."

"Didn't she ask you where you had been?"

"No, I tell you she didn't say a word."

"There must be a very remarkable person."

"Yes, no, nothing remarkable about her, only she possesses no peculiarities, only that she is deaf and dumb."

A Novel Weapon.

A few nights ago a gentleman was aroused from his slumbers by hearing a noise at the window. He immediately concluded that he was about to be treated to a robbery. Not having a pistol or gun he had none, but he was determined to defend his little property with the bottle. Looking around he found a bottle of ginger ale. A happy thought struck him. Just as the burglar's head came through the window, he pushed the bottle close to his head, cut the string and bang went the cork, followed by a sluice of ale into the face of the man. He fell back yelling, and the gentleman ran out to find a companion who, belated, had gone around to spend the remainder of the night, and thought he would enter without disturbing his friend. They were in secrecy, but the tale was too good to keep, and we give it to the public, without giving the names.

Winter in Canada.

BY JOHN WADDELL.

Many of the inhabitants of Great Britain imagine that the Dominion of Canada resembles the countries which border on the Arctic circle. That as a people our lot, compared with theirs, seems to be much less happy. They believe that Canada, taken as a whole, is almost entirely formed of mountains perpetually capped with snow and ice; that winter reigns during the greater part of the year; that the Canadians live in houses which have neither door nor chimney; that the fire is in the centre, and the smoke escapes through an aperture in front, by which they creep into the house upon their hands and knees; and, confined to their houses, hear nothing around them but the whistling of the wind, the roaring of the tempest, and the fierce howling of the wolves, driven by hunger to prowl for their prey near the habitation of man.

It is to be presumed that old country people are very thankful that they do not live in such a climate, where, as far as the eye can reach, extends one vast chain of icy mountains and immense deserts, covered with snow. Where, as they think, the cold is intense and the habitations miserable. Doubtless they appreciate the value of their own sea-girt isle and climate, where they fancy their condition is so much superior. Unquestionably their definition is not descriptive of either a Canadian home or a Canadian winter; however applicable it may be to countries near the Arctic circle. I think that the press, the nobility, and the commonalty of England may fairly be freed from the imputation of ignorance relative to their knowledge of our salubrious climate and resources, when the heir apparent to the throne of the British Empire is only able to recognize the Prime Minister of a great country like the Dominion of Canada by the appelation of Sir Thomas McDonald.

During the winter days in Canada we experience a continual succession of vicissitudes, flakes of snow, showers of rain, clouds and sunshine, storms and calms, quickly follow each other. Scarcely has the snow enveloped nature, when it vanishes from our view; and scarcely does the sun reveal his splendour, when he becomes obscured by dark clouds. During winter many days are dark, gloomy, and dull; but I presume storms and darkness are necessary, and comfortable to the laws of nature. For even the people of England cannot prevent the day from being darkened by clouds, or their happiness from being the sport of contingencies. When clouds have gathered thick in this Province, when the storm and the tempest have threatened, how rapidly has light been restored to the heavens, and gladness again smiled on the earth.

Though winter in Canada is apparently destitute of charms, we still have something to interest the feelings. How beautiful are the tops of the trees, hoary with frost! The hills and the valleys, reflecting the sunbeams, assume various tints, and delight the traveller with their novel appearance. How beautiful to see the white hills, the forest, and the groves all sparkling! What a delightful combination these objects present! Just look at the lofty trees bending beneath the dazzling burden! The surface of the earth appears one vast plain mantled in glittering white array.

Although we have lost the variety of charms which beautified the earth's surface in the fall of the year; here and there plants are seen to bear the rigours of a Canadian winter, and by their verdure relieve the sterility of the scene. The verdant evergreens form a dark shade; and the creeping ivy still winds round the mouldering battlements of the dilapidated Parliament buildings of Ontario, and defies the whistling wind and the storm's loud roar; it is only when dynamite cartridges are deposited under the pile, or when a supposed infernal machine finds its way into the interior apartments that the antiquated barracks exhibit signs of trepidation. The laurel blooms here as in other climes with verdure undiminished; and the lowly box looks green above the snow.

We often murmur at the rigours of our winters in Ontario, and envy those who know no vicissitude of season, but the keen air of winter, perhaps, renders our climate the most salubrious of any in the world. Contrast the languid appearance of the inhabitants living beneath a cloudless sun; the indolence which they necessarily endure; and how different is our lot from that of the shivering natives near the north pole! Here in winter the rays of the sun enliven our days and incite universal gayety. There the winter day is as dreary as the night, because the sun gives it no light. In this Province there is perfect security in cities, and highly cultivated agricultural districts, or in the backwoods of Canada; whether reposing in bed in a shanty, mansion or palace, or indulging over a blazing log fire, or a coal hearth, we defy the rigours of the season; the charms of society also tend to soften its asperities, and the constant succession of day and night cheers and revives; but in the frozen regions the miserable huts form a poor shelter from the pitiless storm, and the wild savages of the woods and deserts keep the starved inhabitants in a state of constant alarm by the frequency of their horrific cries! and with them a perpetual winter reigns. Whilst we, particularly in Ontario, after a few stormy months, are visited by a season whose charms console us for for all that we have suffered, and amid the joy and harmony inspired by a vernal sun we forget the name of winter. Because the varied artificial flowers, portrayed by frost on the glass, has been effaced by the noon-day sun; and the spring becomes rich with flowers, which causes the seeds to expand, the herbs to bud, the trees to look lovely with foliage, beautiful with blossoms, and to pour forth their riches in fruit of every kind to please the eye and gratify the taste, and clothes Canada in verdure which presents to the eye a beautiful field of attraction.

Ethelberta—I want a pair of slippers for pa. Number tens, please, and—squeaky.

Genial Shoemaker—Squeaky miss? I'm afraid we haven't any of that kind.

Ethelberta—I am so sorry. Couldn't you make him a squeaky pair? There is a certain young gentleman who visits me frequently, and—and it would be very convenient for him to know just when pa is coming.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Hints.

A good mixture for chapped hands is composed of carbolic acid, fifteen grains; the yelk of one egg; glycerine, three drams. A little of this is to be rubbed into the hands several times a day if the skin is not broken.

Wash the nickel trimmings of your stove in strong soda water and wipe them off with a dry flannel or a newspaper; then wash the zinc with the same water.

Before sweeping a carpet sprinkle it with bran dampened with water. This absorbs the dust better than anything I ever tried.

Permanganate of potash is not only a good disinfectant, but a small quantity of it mixed with the water for watering roses or other plants in pots or vases promotes luxuriance and health. Sprinkling the foliage with the same mixture drives away the green fly and keeps off mildew.

One word as to the healthfulness of dish-washing. There is no such certain cure for a poor circulation, the constant and varied exercise with hands in hot water, sending the blood to the extremities swiftly and freely, and neuralgia will fly before it. A young lady who is an enthusiastic pianist tells me her fingers are never so supple as on Monday morning when she has a pan of hot water brought into the sunny breakfast room and "takes Katie's place washing up the breakfast things." Do not be afraid of it, only let your dish-washing be done decently and in order.

Choice Receipts.

FRIED BEETS.—Peel two or three beets. Grease your frying-pan, slice the beets very thin into it. Add a teacup of water, let it cook out, then fry them a little. They are very nice.

BROWN BREAD (very good).—Two cups of graham flour, one cup of wheat flour, one pinch of salt; two cups of sour or butter milk, one and one-half teaspoons of soda or saleratus. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour. It is very, very good. Sweeten with sugar or molasses, if liked.

BOILED BISCUITS.—Put a quart of good dried-apple sauce, prune sauce, or almost any dried-fruit sauce into a kettle and add two quarts of water. Drop into this a tinful of light bread biscuit and boil one hour. Serve hot with sugar and cream. Or you can spread a white cloth on the top of the sauce and lay the biscuit on it to boil.

BREAKFAST HASH.—Hash made of two parts potato, one part corn-beef, and one part beets is an appetizing dish for breakfast. The potatoes and beets should be boiled the day before, as it spoils their flavour to be chopped warm. Chop them and the beef fine; season with butter, pepper and salt, and some hot vinegar and mustard may be added if you choose.

BEEFSTEAK CAKE.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, whites of three eggs, three and one-half cups of flour, one cup sweet milk, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake two-thirds of the mixture on two round tins, and to the remainder add three yelks, three tablespoons of molasses, one cup of raisins, half a cup of flour, and all kinds of spices. Bake in one cake and place between the other two with jelly between. This is very nice.

BOSS BUNS.—Two cups of water, two cups of sugar, one cup of yeast, one cup of butter. Mix yeast and water with flour to make a thin batter at night, and let rise until morning; then add butter, sugar, currants, and any flavour you like, and sufficient flour to make a thick dough; let rise until light; then knead and roll in a sheet a little thinner than for biscuit, cut round or in squares, place in tins, and rise again. Bake in a moderate oven to a light brown.

SOFT GINGERBREAD.—Into four cups of flour put one teaspoonful of ginger, one of cinnamon, and a little salt. Heat one pint of molasses to the boiling point, and in it melt one scant cup of butter. Pour the mixture upon the flour and stir it well. Add one cup of sour milk in which is dissolved two teaspoonfuls of soda. Add two well-beaten eggs, mix all thoroughly, and put into the oven as soon as possible. It may be baked in ordinary cake pans, but is rather better suited for the very small tins, such as "hearts and rounds."

POTATO BISCUIT.—Eight potatoes of medium size mashed very fine, four tablespoonfuls of butter melted, two cups of milk lukewarm, one cup of yeast, flour to make a thin batter, two tablespoonfuls of white sugar; stir all the above ingredients together except the butter, and set the sponge until light; four or five hours will be required; then add the melted butter, with a little salt and flour enough to make a soft dough, set this aside for four hours longer, roll out in a sheet three-quarters of an inch thick, cut into cakes; let them rise one hour and bake.

BREAD JELLY.—Bread jelly is a simple delicacy which comes under the head of cookery for invalids, and is thus prepared: Take a French roll, cut it into thin slices and toast them on both sides to a golden brown, then put them into a saucepan with a quart of water (spring water, if it can be had) and simmer over a fire until they become a sort of a jelly. To tell when this stage is reached take up a little on a spoon and allow it to cool. When done strain it through a thin cloth and flavour with a little lemon juice and sugar. A little sherry may be added if liked.

BEEF CAKES.—Take some rare-cooked, cold roast beef and mince it very fine; then boil and mash some white potatoes and add them to the meat, making the mixture three-fourths meat and one-fourth potatoes. Now add a couple of sprigs of parsley, minced fine, mix all well together, and bind it with the beaten yelk of an egg. Form the mixture into cakes about half an inch thick and about as big round as a teacup, dredge them with flour, and fry until nicely browned in hot beef-drippings. When done serve garnished with fried parsley.

"A coat of paint," cried Mr. Dauber jocularly, speaking from the ladder, "is the only coat you can put on without buttons." "Yaas," replied the householder, dubiously, as he examined the work on the side of the house, "but I reckon you'll have to put the buttons on this one if you want it to stay on after it dries."

WINTER WRINKLES.

A friend indeed—The real estate agent.

Proper costumes for an elopement.—A cutaway jacket.

There is many a silent, throbbing corn beats beneath a nice dress boot.

A husband should never judge the warmth of his wife's love by the coldness of her feet.

The "wife" was once the "weaver" of the family. She doesn't loom up in that way much nowadays.

It used to be, "See that my grave's kept green." The new and popular version is: "Oh, keep my ashes bottled, love."

A Tennessee boy has been born with his hands behind back. His mother will no doubt keep the pantry locked just the same.

Bertie (on the way to the station)—"Mamma, I want to sneeze." Mamma—"Bertie, we're late now. You'll have to wait until we get on the cars."

Dude—"Excuse me, Miss Sharp; I had quite forgotten you. I am so absent-minded, don't cher know." Miss Sharp—"Yes, I have noticed the absence of mind."

Can anybody tell why a woman always laughs when she is being weighed, while a man, during the same performance, has a serious, if not anxious, countenance?

"Does your son affect any particular school of art?' asked the visitor. "No—yes—well; he's painting a Belladonna for the religious art gallery," replied the fond mother.

But, Marie, I thought you despised Mr. Simpson." "So I do." "Then what did you marry him for?" "So that he would stay down town evenings and not hang around me all the time."

"Have you heard Miss Simpson sing since she returned from France?" "Several times." "Do you think she has improved?" "Very much." "In what particular?" "She does not sing as much as she used to."

"Do you ever sweep under the bed?" inquired the head of a family of her young domestic while examining the spare room. "Oh, yes, often. It's so much easier than a dustpan, you know," replied the servant.

"I didn't say, your honor," replied the witness, "that the minister was intoxicated; no, not by any means; but this I will say, when last I saw him he was washing his face in a mud-puddle and drying it with a door mat.

"Your little boy seems to be very intelligent," said a grocer to a customer whose eighteen months old child, had in pointing, said, "jug jug." "Oh, yes," said the customer, "he knows what a jug is. He was born in a prohibition town."

We find in a recent poem that "she fell, alas! and hundreds wept." We don't believe it. If she fell, which looks reasonable enough, and there were hundreds standing around, which we have no cause to doubt, we'll wager that every mother's son of them laughed.

Overheard at a fashionable ball—"I do think my new dressmaker is just too perfect for anything." "But I fancied the old one fitted you pretty well, my dear." "She did nothing of the kind. Why this one can cut a corsage three inches lower and do entirely without sleeves."

A boy placed a big apple on the front steps, and went across the street to see who would take it. A gentleman who had observed the action, said: "You shouldn't do that, my son. Some poor boy may be tempted to steal it." "That's what I'm fishing for, sir. I've hollered out the inside and filled it with mustard."

A boy was asked which was the greater evil, hurting another's feelings or his finger. "The feelings," he said. "Right, my dear child," said the questioner. "And why is it worse to hurt the feelings?" "Because you can't tie a rag around them," answered the child.

Angry Land Purchaser (to real estate agent): "You told me that the temperature in this part of the country would average about 50° the year around, and here the thermometer is down to zero." Real Estate Agent: "Yes sir, zero in the winter and 100° in the shade in the summer. That makes the 50° average all right."

A certain divine who had wandered in the course of his travels beyond the conveniences of the railroad was obliged to take to a horse. Being unaccustomed to riding, he said to his host: "I hope you are not so unregenerate in these parts that you would give me a horse who would throw a good Presbyterian minister?" "Well, I dunno," was the reply, "we believe in spreadin' the gospel!"

One day a publisher's errand boy brought up from the cellar a trap containing a large rat, just as a well-known society belle, wishing to look at one of Lytton's most popular novels, said to the new shopman, "I want to see 'What Will He Do With It?'" "Very well, miss," was the reply: "If you will walk to the back part of the shop and look out of the window you will see him drown it."

A well-known Baptist minister of a Western city relates that some time ago a convert was made of a somewhat ignorant girl, and at a prayer meeting subsequently he asked her what she would do if she heard another girl reviling the Lord Jesus. Straightening herself up, she said: "If she was larger nor me I would tell her to shut up; but if she was smaller I would slap her right across the mouth."

Col. Sumpter McBride while in the city on a visit, read the advertisement of a clairvoyant in a morning paper. He went to the female fortune-teller to have his horoscope cast. She cast horoscopes with a dirty pack of cards, which she spread out on the table. "You will marry an unusually wealthy lady, and be very happy. Everything in your past, present, and future is an open book to me." I suppose you know everything about my future?" said Colonel. "Not only about your future, but about your past and present." "It's wonderful, incomprehensible. Good morning, madame." "Hold on there. A dollar, if you please," said the female wizard, holding out her hand. "Well, that's strange. You know everything about my past, present, and future, and you didn't know I left all my money with the clerk of the hotel before I started out to have my fortune told. It's wonderful, incomprehensible!" remarked the Colonel, as he passed out.

A Peddler Who Became a Prince.

The history of Prince Torlonia, whose death was announced, is a series of surprises. The family were of French origin, and came from Auvergne, the original name being not Torlonia, but Tourlogne. The founder of the great banking family was servant to Cardinal Aquaviva, who in his will left him a provision for the rest of his life.

The valet invested the money in lace and needles, and did a good trade with these small wares, and was able to educate and push forward his son, who early showed decided ability for finance. He was patronised by Pius VI., and employed by him to carry out a series of monetary operations, all of which were brilliantly successful. The name of Tourlogne was now abandoned, and Giovanni Torlonia founded a bank, and money multiplied with him.

On his death in 1829 he left his son Alexander Torlonia, a fortune of 40 millions. Alexander inherited not only his father's wealth but also his capacity for business. The 40 millions invested in the purchase of a monopoly of tobacco, stretching over thirty years, increased enormously, and Prince Torlonia found that while the other Roman nobles were growing yearly more impoverished money was fructifying in his coffers. He employed it in princely hospitality and in ventures of enormous magnitude, and both methods of investment were prosperous. The draining of the lake Fucino, a work which several of the Roman emperors had commenced and abandoned, was successfully carried out at a cost of 36 millions, and Victor-Emmanuel celebrated this great engineering achievement by presenting the prince with a gold medal specially struck for the occasion. The prince's enormous wealth passes to his daughter, married to one of the Borghese family, who takes the name and title of Torlonia.

GASTRONOMIC GOSSIP.

Oysters were never better or more palatable than at the present time.

The consumption of buckwheat cakes is now said to be confined to the rural districts.

Southern shad has come to market, but it does not amount to much in the eyes of the epicure.

The Hotel Mail says that frozen fish or game is about as fit to eat as stewed shingles with shaving sauce.

Finely chopped celery with French dressing is what they hold in Baltimore to be the salad to eat with small game.

They understand the art of cooking terrapin better in Philadelphia than anywhere else, and Baltimore comes next.

Cheese and lettuce forms a distinct course now at some of the most elegant and notable private dinner parties of the season.

Rotten cheese, says Kitchner, the culinary authority, toasted, is the ne plus ultra of haut gout, and only eatable by the thoroughbred gourmand in the most inverted state of his jaded appetite.

Dio Lewis says an Englishman, without observing the laws of exercise or sleep, will digest an enormous dinner and preserve his stomach because of his two hours' chat and good fellowship afterwards.

TEMPERANCE THOUGHTS.

I expect to my dying day to fight the drink with every lawful weapon.—[Gough.

Every man who becomes a drunkard becomes so in trying to be a moderate drinker.—[Gough.

There are broken hearts, blighted hopes, blackened characters, crushed intellects as the result of strong drink.—[Gough.

Prevention is better than cure. It is worth a life effort to lift a man from degradation. But to prevent his fall is far better.—[Gough.

I advocate total abstinence from alcholic poisons as a duty towards our God, a duty to ourselves and a duty to our tempted and suffering fellow creatures.—[Cuyler.

Tons of arguments and appeals have been printed on this vital question, "How to save young men from strong drink?" but they may be all condensed into one line—stop before you begin.—[Cuyler.

The one momentous truth that must be instilled into the minds and consciences of the young is, that nobody can safely tamper with an intoxicating beverage. On the bed-rock of entire abstinence alone are they safe.—[Cuyler.

To tell young and excitable persons that they may drink intoxicating liquor, if they are only careful to stop before becoming drunkards, is as absurd as to tell them that they may bathe in the Rapids of Niagara, but keep out of the cataract—[Cuyler.

Looking Backward.

BY LUELLA CLARK.

Look not back, but straight ahead;
Seek the living, not the dead;
Yesterday is thine no more,
Give regretful grievings o'er.

Greet to-day with purpose new;
Now—to-day—be good and true;
Linger not in fond delay
O'er the joys of yesterday.

Weep not o'er its follies past,
Only let them be thy last;
Learn the lesson that they teach,
And to tasks more worthy reach.

Let each failure, each mistake
Spur anew thy power to make
Failure victory; no regret
Ever gained a triumph yet.

Forward, hopeful, turn thy face;
Steps which thou canst not retrace
Leave behind, and choose to-day
For thy feet the better way.

Let thy life each moment be
So unselfish, sweet, and free,
That no haunting shade shall lie
On the thoughts of days gone by.

So Close Together That They Broke the Vase.

"Who broke this vase?" asked Miss Fussin feather's father, as he entered the parlor one morning and found his daughter gathering up the pieces of a majolica vase.

"George and I broke it between us last night," was the maiden's innocent reply.

"Broke it between you, did you? Well, next time he calls you better not sit so close."

And he left his daughter to ponder on what he meant.

OUR ROLLER MILLS.

About eighteen months ago our citizens were somewhat suspicious of the new process, or, Roller Flour—some thought it would not be wholesome, while others, not understanding how to treat it in baking—were not at first favorably impressed, however such objections have ceased, and all who have given it a fair test, will now have no other.

The proprietors are both, men of honor, and rare business tact; besides thoroughly industrious and enterprising, so that we cannot single out one man, or either mill, as deserving of special mention. Their business tells for itself, as may be seen by the fact that a person dealing in flour in any of the surrounding villages, have only to let their customers know they have Roller Flour from one of the Markdale Roller Mills for sale, in order to do a rushing business. Messrs. J. W. Ford and Angus Plewes richly deserve the great success which has attended their enterprise and heavy expenditure in establishing two of the best full line Roller Mills in the Province. An idea of the business they do may be had from the fact that the past three weeks they have taken in an average of 3,000 bushels per week of gristing. It is quite a common thing to see farmers drive twenty miles to the Markdale Roller Mills, and then there is no waiting or second trip, as they are supplied on the spot. The village has also been largely benefitted by the greatly increased trade, as a natural result of farmers from a distance, killing two birds with one stone as-it-ware; doing their trading while out to mill, while they in return have found it profitable to trade in Markdale.

TOWN IMPROVEMENTS.

Thos. McNae is building a planing factory 48 x 50 feet, which will be in operation as early in the spring as it is possible.

Irwin & McCay, have the timber on the ground for an addition to their tannery.

Wm. Mason is preparing to build a brick residence.

Geo. Walker is going to have his residence vaneered with brick.

Isaac Stinson is preparing to build himself a brick house.

Thos. Mathews is getting material on the ground for a brick block on the old burnt stand.

Mrs. Caswell is preparing to vaneer her house with brick.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Euphrasia, March 8th, 1886.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Be so kind as to allow me a little space in your paper, to make known to the public a few facts about School matters in School Section No. 18, Euphrasia. First, we had a non-resident trustee that thought he was the only one that could understand the School Act; and for some reason, unknown to me, he thought to act the snake in the grass with the peoples' auditor, by trying to get me to appoint another; and when I would not, he wrote to the Inspector and got one out of another township appointed; but I knew too much for him, and got the books audited by the proper person; then he and some others circulated all sorts of false reports about the way I used the school funds; and now I do as I have done before, that is, I challenge any party to show that there was one cent but is satisfactorily accounted for, or that I stated one thing at the several school meetings but what is true. Some of the ratepayers determined to get rid of such a nuisance, and requested me to ask Mr. Samuel Douglas to resign, which he did, but his party choosed as mean a man as they had to fill his place, in the person of J. Lee, and the night of the election they packed the house with voters from Markdale, Artemesia and all ever, but they had no opposition and got their man, who was called on to make a speech, which he did in those words:

Gentlemen, I want you to take notice that Mr. Stinson was the man that moved Mr. Douglas for trustee, and now he put him out.

This statement was false, and Mr. Lee had to take it back afterward; then Bedad Sam. rose in his dignity to enlighten the ratepayers that I was disqualified to act as trustee, and used some threatenings as to what he would do. Well, this was true as he stated that I was a contractor with the Board of Trustees, of which I was a part, and received pay for painting blackboards. I handed in my resignation in hope that I would be let retire; but the ratepayers desired otherwise, and came to the conclusion that good and true men would not be trampled on by such men as Douglas, Walker and Lee; but this trio thought they would not be beat, and started another current of falsehoods as base as the first, and canvassed the section, choosed their man, and came to the meeting confident of success. Mr. R. Stonell was their man, and was also chosen chairman. The show of hands was taken, when I had the majority, but Samuel Walker was ignorant enough to insist that the chairman had a vote, and was backed by S. Douglas; then, through the inability of the chairman who did not decide for over ten minutes after, but waited till a voter from the States and another old batchelor came in and made it a tie; then Mr. Lee stated that the highest ratepayer of the trustees had the casting vote, which would have given him the privilege of voting twice; then a poll was demanded which resulted in my election, although Mr. Lee went to two strange men that did not know me, and told them that I was not worth $100.00, and that if I was elected I would put the teacher out; but this was checked at once by John Abercrombie, and so his labor was in vain; and I here state that I have always paid one hundred cents on the dollar, which I defy him or any one to deny. They then called on me for a speech and would not let me off till I stated a few facts that made Mr. Walker desire to pull me down, but he dare not, and Mr. Douglas took him by the coat-tail and pulled him to his seat, which was not hard to do. Mr. Lee wished to call me to order, and Mr. Douglas beat a hasty retreat. I might here remark that the Clerk sent for the voters' list that belonged to the school, and when it came Mr. Douglas took possession of it and refused to let the poll clerk have it, stating that it was private property, and by such mean acts done his best to gain the day. Hoping that I have not trespassed too much on your time, and that this will set right the many false statements that were set afloat,

I remain yours,
R. H. STINSON.

[WE would much prefer such neighborhood or School Section difficulties as above did not appear in our columns, but when the publication of such is pressed upon us, and the party willing to sign his name, it is very difficult to refuse.—Ed. S.]

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely develop itself into Catarrh when you can be cured for 25 cents. A few application will cure incipient Catarrh. One to two boxes will cure ordinary Catarrh. One to five boxes will cure chronic Catarrh. Dr. Chase's Catarrh cure, Sold by all dealers at 25 cents per box.

Artemesia, 16th March, 1886.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—My article of last issue of the STANDARD, written in answer to remarks of editor Advance, on "Military Discipline" in former issue of Advance, has again brought the editor of this sheet to the front, in his second version of "Military Discipline," one of the most absurd and lying articles which has appeared in his useless and scandalizing sheet of trash for some time. Now, Mr. Editor, this surly coxcomb, in the first of said articles. No. 2. says, that it is peculiar when the editor of any paper speaks through its columns disparagingly of any person, said person generally dubs paper in which it appears dirty sheet, &c. Well, Mr. Editor, I never thought much of the Advance, on account of the many scandalizing items which appears in its columns from time to time, and I intended to stop my subscription as soon as out, and would never have taken it at all had Fawcett not came out to me here and induced me to take it. Now, Sir, he says nine-tenths of his readers cares nothing for me, or what he is pleased to term my silly twaddle; well, I think he could safely turn that part visa versa to suit himself, as I fancy I am as well and favorably known as the Agricultural Editor of the Advance, and it is also a known fact that the Advance is rapidly decreasing in value and increasing in trash. Now, the editor of Advance says, that he fearlessly sustains the Advance motto, viz. "Truth before favor,"—"Principles, not men." Now, I as fearlessly brand this as lie No. 1, if upholding his motto of truth why does he say I lifted several copies of Advance without first ascertaining the truth of his assertion; well, I or one of my household have not lifted one copy since Jan. 1st, and I left orders in Maxwell P. O. for to give the Advance to no person for me as I was not going to take it again. Now, Mr. Editor, I would like to know how several copies of Advance, issued weekly, could appear in a month. Fawcett also says a faithful and true account of my trial before Squires Richardson and Armstrong appeared in Advance; well, if so, I never saw it. The first I saw of the matter was "Military Discipline" No. 1, as appeared in Advance of 18th Feb. So if I had been lifting papers I would have seen it. One thing, I never went to the office especially for Advance, without other business, as I never thought it worth going after. The Advance man says he never forced his paper on any man. Well, we know he could not do that; but it looked pretty like forcing when he came out here to my farm and induced me to take it, by giving a big reduction, and then it was too dear. I am glad the Advance man has been the gainer by several through my case, but I rather doubt the assertion. The Agricultural Editor would like to know why I agreed to settle my case if I had as good a case as I maintained I had. Well, the principal reason I settled it was, the case did not appear to be half through on that day and I did not want bringing my witnesses back again, so therefore I agreed to settle it, and I offered settlement on morning of trial, which was refused. After all the evidence being heard on the complainant's side, and I suppose when they heard their own evidence they thought half loaf better than no bread and accepted the terms which they refused in the morning. The editor of the Advance says I paid all costs in the matter. Well, all the costs I paid was $12.55, which I think would go a short way in clearing A. Campbell's expenses and providing J. Field with price of barrel of flour, &c. How does Fawcett know I got Advance containing notice of annual drill, and if so, whether I read it or not. He also says the less I say of the matter the better or I will or has placed myself in a very unenviable light before the public. Well I am sure I would not wish myself to appear as he does in the eyes of a truth loving people who would like to see more sense and less nonsense in the columns of the Advance, when it would become more worthy public patronage. As regards the statements made by me and termed false by the Agricultural Editor, I do not see in what particular the false statements lies, as it is a known fact that the drill shed is flooded every winter (regardless of timber rotting) for skating purposes, and as regard bank water-egg process referred to in the Advance, I don't imagine little Fawcett or J. Fields will try that game on me, and I think it mean (as all the rest of editors advices generally are) to advise what he is afraid to attempt himself; and now, in conclusion, I would say my character will bear searching or investigating as closely as either Fawcett or Felds' will do, and as regards the way I earn my living, I have got to work hard, and till my farm for my living; it is not by walking about and rotting government buildings. So, Mr. Editor. I would advise the Advance man to give more truthful statements when he attempts to injure my character in future.

Hoping you will excuse me trespassing on your valuable space,

I am, Mr. Editor,
Yours truly,
WM. C. HANLEY.

A COMPLETE BREAKDOWN.

"For ten years," says Jannie M. Harrett, of Wallaceburg, Ont., "I did not see a well day—was all broken down with dyspepsia, liver complain, catarrh and debility. Three doctors abandoned hope for me, when Burdock Blood Bitters came to my rescue. It is the best medicine I have ever taken. I say this for the benefit of all suffering as I did."

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. William Gillert has been laid up for some time and unable to work. He was chopping wood, and while doing so a chip struck him in the right eye completely destroying the sight of it.

Mr. James Sparling came near having a pair of broken legs. He was attending to the engine with which he is running a lath machine when one of the pullies burst, a part of the broken pullie striking him on the legs below the knees inflicting some severe bruises.

Miss Minnie Hutchinson is home again. She has been away for some time visiting her friends in the old settlements.

Mr. Robert Kells was to start on Monday for the Great Lone Land, where he has made his home.

Flesherton Cheese Factory.

On the 8th inst. the patrons of the above cheese factory met in the Town Hall, Flesherton, to elect officers for the season of 1886, with the following result:

President, George Stewart;
Secretary, James Brodie.

DIRECTORS:

Rout No. 1, W. W. Wright.
" " 2, W. Hill.
" " 3, W. Pickle.
" " 4, W. Wilcock.
" " 5, T. Wright.
" " 6, H. Meldrum.
" " 7, D. McMullen.

Auditors—W. Wilcock and W. Harrison.

It was also intended to let the milk drawing on the various routs at this meeting, but owing to certain proposed changes in some of the routs, this matter was left over until the 5th of April.

There was also considerable discussion about the patrons forming a joint stock company and buying the factory from Mr. Garrett, but no definite action was taken in the matter.

COM.

WILL TAKE OATH TO THE FACT.

Edward Cousins, of Ranson, declares he was at one time nearly dead form the effects of a terrible cold and cough. He tried many remedies but Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam was what cured him. He speaks in highes praises of it in other cases, and adds that he is willing to take oath to his statements.

MARRIAGES.

NICKLESS—MCNAIR—On the 12th inst., by the Rev. Philip Sparling, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. James Nickless, late of Naples, Italy, to Miss Margret Ellen McNair, eldest daughter of Mr. John McNair, all of Lindsay, Co. of Bruce.

DEATHS.

PICKETT—In Berkeley, on the 10th inst., T. J., youngest son of Mr. John Pickett, aged 2 years 4 months.

Spring Assizes.

From the C. S. Times.

The Spring Assizes for this County opened at the Court House on Tuesday morning last, Hon. Justice Armour presiding. Mr. A. Frost was Crown prosecutor. The following gentlemen composed the grand jury: James Clarke, foreman; Jas. E. Thos. B. White, Alex. McGregor, Jr., Geo Ledingham, Robert Kendall, Jas. McGirr, jr., John Robinson, Wm. Watson, Thos. Hutchinson, Solomon Damude, Jas. Young, John McNicol, John Proctor, Jos. Morden, Henry Hurd, Robt. McFarland. The following cases were disposed of:

GARDNER vs. CLŒPHER.—Action brought by plaintiff as assignee of estate of McKinnon & Co. against Clœpher, a creditor, who, after assenting to assignment was appointed one of the trustees, issued execution and seized. The question as to right to seize having been tried in an interpleader suit and being against defendant, the question in this suit was, How much damage did plaintiff sustain? The jury found $100 damage. John Creasor, Q. C., and J. S. Wilson for plaintiff; B. B. Osler, Q. C., and Mr. Ceffee for defendant.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against Philip Roy for murder.

ROSS vs. WILSON, ET AL.—This was an action brought by Wm. Ross against defendants for removing the shop furniture from the drug store of J. S. Moffett, under chattel mortgage, Ross claiming that the same were his property. The evidence showed that Ross bought the drug business and shop furniture from A. B. Lang in 1882 and put Moffet in to give him a start. Ross gave his notes for purchase money, which notes were paid principally by Moffett out the business; but about $500 was from time to time advanced by Ross to make up what Moffat was short, for which he took Moffett's I.O.U. It was contended by the defendents that the taking of the I.O.U.'s in effect made the goods Moffett's and that Ross' only claim was on them against Moffett. The question was left to the jury to say whether at the time of the making of the chattel mortgage by Moffett to the defendants the goods were Moffett's or Ross' The jury found the goods were Moffett's and judgment directed for defendant. J. Masson, Q. C., for plaintiff; B. B. Osler, Q. C., and Mr. Scott, of Hamilton, for defendants.

LANG vs. WILSON, ET AL.—This was an action for fraudulent misrepresentation—the goods of J. S. Moffett having been removed after dark to satisfy chattel mortgage of defendant, after the plaintiff had been induced to delay seizure for rent on representations that his claim would be arranged for. The judge held that no legal fraud was established; but, as defendants had been guilty of sharp practice, he would not allow them costs. J. Masson, Q. C., for plaintiff; and B. B. Osler, Q. C., and Mr. Scott for defendants.

HAGGART vs. Myles.—Action for replevin of a threshing machine. Defendant consented to judgment for plaintiff. Masson & Massen for plaintiff; Wilson & Evans for defendant.

HISCOCK vs. WIGLEY.—Action of ejectment. Consent minutes being put in, judgment was given for plaintiff without costs. J. Masson, Q. C., for plaintiff; J. Creasor, Q. C., for defendant.

ST. VINCENT vs. GREENFIELD.—Action brought by Township against Greenfield for closing a road which the defendant claimed had never been properly opened and for which he had never received compensation and that the fence put up by defendants did not encroach on the alleged road. A great number of witnesses were examined, including four surveyers. Judgment reserved. Jno. Creasor, Q. C., for plaintiff; A. Frost for defendant.

GREIG vs. GALLOWAY.—Action on mortgage. Judgment by consent for foreclosing, defendant having a year to redeem. J. M. Kilbourn for plaintiff; J. Masson, Q. C., for defendant.

BLANKER vs. JOHNSON.—Seduction suit, undefended; judgment for plaintiff, $150. J. M. Kilbourn for plaintiff.

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE Co. vs. PATERSON.—Judgment by concent, $150. J. M. Kilbourn for defendant.

QUEEN vs. PHILIP ROY.—Murder. The evidence in this case was very similar to that given at the Coroner's inquest of which we give a full report. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter. Prisoner sentenced to 10 years in penitentiary. A. Frost for Crown, J. Creasor, Q. C., for prisoner.

QUEEN vs. MASON.—Larceny. Verdict, guilty; sentenced to six months in Centaral prison. A. Frost for Crown; J. W. Frost for prisoner.

QUEEN vs. GILLILAND.—The defendant was charged with having sworn to misstatements in an affidavit to be used in Crown Land office, thereby committing perjury. Jury returned verdict of not guilty. A. Frost for Crown; J. Masson, Q. C., for defendant.

This case (tried this Thursday evening) concluded the business of the court.

Artemesia Council.

Owen Sound.

HOTELKEEPERS FINED FOR SELLING LIQUOR ON SATURDAY NIGHT AND SUNDAY.

Owen Sound, March 13.—The following hotelkeepers were to-day brought before the Police Magistrate charged by License Inspector Pearce with selling liquor during prohibited hours:—Mrs. Holmes, for selling on Sunday, fined $25 and costs; Robert McKinney, same charge, $25 and costs; David Comely, selling on Saturday night, fined $20 and costs; Thomas Grimes, selling on Sunday, second offence, fined $40 and costs; Hy. Crozier, selling on Sunday, second offence, fined $40 and costs; Jesse Gibbons and Chas. Leamon, adjourned till Tuesday next at the request of the prosecutor.

The License Inspector appears determined to enforce the whole law, and has published a card offering to pay liberally for information that will lead to a conviction of a violation of any of the provisions of the License Acts and to keep the source of his information a profound secret. This seems to strike the liquor sellers in a tender spot.

Sealed Orders.

BY HELEN CHAUNCEY.

Out she swung from her moorings,
And over the harbor bar,
As the moon was slowly rising,
She faded from sight afar—
And we traced her gleaming canvas
By the twinkling evening star.

None knew the port she sailed for,
Nor whither her cruise would be;
Her future course was shrouded
In silence and mystery;
She was sailing beneath "sealed orders"
To be opened out at sea.

Some souls, cut off from moorings,
Go drifting into the night,
Darkness before and around them,
With scarce a glimmer of light;
They are acting beneath "sealed orders"
And sailing by faith, not sight.

Keeping the line of duty,
Through evil and good report,
They shall ride the storms out safely,
Be the voyage long or short,
For the ship that carries God's orders
Shall anchor at last in port.

Our Baby and Temperance.

BY MRS. JULIA M'NAIR WRIGHT.

In the discussion of great questions it is well to begin at the beginning, at fundamental facts and propositions. Temperance is one of the most important factors in our physical, financial and moral problems. In discussing the temperance question, if we begin at the baby we shall begin pretty well at the beginning. But what has the baby to do with temperance? While the baby is really a baby one can not create in it either temperance principles or prejudices. Let us look at the converse statement: One can create in the baby intemperate tastes and habits. We propose to show that before the baby's mind can receive any impression in regard to temperance, its body can receive a strong bias toward alcoholism. And this bias is often given ignorantly, no doubt, in temperance families. We desire here to make a plain, clear presentation of daily facts. We call in no aid of rhetoric or special pleading to re-enforce our case—the baby vs. alcohol. We are counsel for the plaintiff, and we rest the strength of our case on clear testimony.

Said a young mother to me one day, "I have just been to a lecture on 'The Care of Infants,' and I am frightened, horrified at my own practices."

"What is alarming in your practices?"

"The lecturer warned especially against the use of any alcoholic stimulants about the child, either externally. We were told that by administering alcohol to infants a tendency toward alcoholization could be produced. Now, my baby has always had alcohol in the water in which he was bathed, and every night he had a sling' before I put him to bed."

"And what induced you to begin such practices?"

"I knew nothing about babies. I had no mother to advise me. My monthly nurse began that way with baby. I supposed she knew what was exactly right, and I went on as she began. She is called very skillful. But from this day on, I shall banish all alcohols from the nursery. I suppose if I had mentioned my methods to other mothers, either they would have approved, as doing the same thing themselves, or they would have been silent, as not wishing to interfere with my affairs. In six months I may have seriously injured my child."

Careful investigation proves to me that especially in cities, the monthly nurse makes large use of alcohol in treating the baby. Let me take the case of one whom, mea culpa, I engaged for a young relative.

This nurse put a liberal portion of whisky into the water of the child's bath, "to keep the infant from taking cold." She wet the babe's flannel bandage with brandy, "to strengthen its stomach," and if it cried; she prepared a gin sling "to raise the wind." Each night she gave the little one a strong sling "to make it sleep." She did not think that the stipend of twelve dollars weekly paid her for being disturbed at night, and, in plain speech, she put the nursling asleep drunk every night. The consequence was that it was too heavily asleep to be roused to nurse, and the young mother, having a large supply of natural food for her babe, was at first incommoded, and then, after several nights, when her child could not be awakened to take its food, the consequence to the mother was seven weeks in bed with a "milk-leg." During this time the nurse got her eighty-four dollars, and continued to alcoholize the child. The infant became stupid, irritable while awake, and as its food did not digest, was troubled with wind and grew thin. Why did not the food digest? The stomach of the infant is so delicate that undiluted cow's milk is too strong for it, and if cow's milk is given, it must be prepared by water and sugar for the capacity of the sensitive organ which is to receive it. Into this delicate stomach, incapable of using clear milk, the nurse recklessly poured alcohol, if in varied strength and quantity but still alcohol; and as alcohol, poured on an oyster or an egg, will cook that oyster or egg, making it a hard mass, is it to be wondered at that it inflamed the baby's stomach and rendered it incapable of digesting food? This child's life was saved by putting it into the hands of a nurse who abolished the alcohol system in its behalf.

The giving of gin sling or whisky sling to infants for "colic" is very common. The immediate effect may be to dislodge a portion of wind from the stomach, but at the same time it provokes inflammation and indigestion, and creates flatulency. Instead of administering alcoholic remedies, the child should be relieved by rubbing, or by a careful use of mild, warm tea or sage, mint or other herb.

An infant who is dosed with alcohol soon shows a decided taste for the stimulant, relishes it, cries after it; is restless when deprived of its dram. Thus, in children, a fatal thirst for strong drink may be early developed. But not only may the alcohol mania be induced in our baby by feeding it with alcoholic potions, and by using alcohols for baths or compresses, but even much more dangerously by the medium of the mother or wet-nurse. Many women who are nursing an infant imagine that they must "keep up their strength and increase the flow of lacteal fluid by frequent use of beer, porter, ale, wine or toddy." Statistics of reformatories and homes for dipsomaniacs show that as high as half the cases of drunkenness among women arise from this baneful practice of nursing mothers. It is well known that the food and drink of the nurse pass quickly into the milk, so that medicines or unhealthy articles of diet have an effect on the nursling, even before the nurse is affected. When nurses use salt, alcoholic or fermented liquors these enter very quickly into the system of the child. The babe partaking of alcoholized milk falls heavily asleep—in other words, is drunk—and its health, its perspiration, its symptoms, indicate drunkenness. From the constant presence of this destructive, unnatural element in its food, the child of the drinking mother has not over three or four chances out of ten for its life. There is an enormous percentage of infant mortality among babes nursed by persons who use alcohol or malted liquors. Not only this, but, as has been amply proved, the vitiated milk awakes an abnormal craving in the infant. It shows a horrible preference for the alcoholic sustenance, receives it with avidity, and rejects with cries the heart that offers unadulterated natural food. Shocking as it appears, it is a plain statement of facts.

When a mother is so unfortunate as to be obliged to seek a wet-nurse for the baby, she should remember that a love of drink, dipsomania, is even more likely to be transmitted to the child by the nurse, than a tendency to scrofula, cancer or other physical diseases. From the drink-loving nurse the fatal inheritance of inebriety can come to the child of temperate parents. Among the most heartrending spectacles I have witnessed were the struggles, remorse, falls, shames, of a gifted young physician, child of a rigidly temperate family, who had unhappily committed his infancy to a drunken wet nurse. The love of liquor grew with his years; it maddened him; he was at war with himself; from his parents he had received temperate principles, and temperate examples and training; he loathed and despised alcoholization; from his nurse he had received a craving for drink and early habituation to alcohol; he longed for it; the alcohol taste was a consuming fire within him, and in the frenzy of this state he was often on the verge of suicide.

The baby should have a Nazarite babyhood. Wine and strong drink should not come near the child, and its mother or nurse should also be Nazarite on the wine and liquor question as Menoah's wife was warned to be. This segregating of the infant Israelite life, from all wine and strong drink in his babyhood, and also the observance of this law by his mother, is pertinent to this theme. The child was mercifully saved inherited tendencies or early habits drawing it to the foresworn strong drink. There was a time when physiologists would have said, "The liquor passes quickly and entirely out of the system; it can be used with impunity by the child before the time when its moral nature can be perverted by drink. The danger to the child is moral, not physical." This can no longer be pleaded. The danger to our baby is physical. True, the alcohol goes out of the system, but it leaves open doors behind it. While it is in the system it makes potent, lasting, disastrous changes. Banish, then, from the nursery every form or use of alcohol. The baby can not protest in its own behalf, but let the prescient heart of the mother protest for her little one, and let her use her instant, earnest endeavors to save herself from the woe of drunken children, by guarding her child from all contact with alcohol, not only while it lies in its cradle, but before she has seen its face.

THE ROGUES' RETREAT.

Judge Yates, the Peoria Absconder, and his Lady Love Stopping in Montreal.

A dispatch from Montreal says: The scandalous behavior of Judge Yates, of Peoria, Ill., who acted as curator to a rich widow of that place, has not been forgotten. A few weeks ago it transpired that he had squandered her fortune of $1,500,000 and absconded with all the cash he could lay his hands on, deserting his wife and family at Peoria. Since his absconding it has been discovered that he has also ruined a young lady of fortune of that place, who since his departure has not been seen and is supposed to have run away with the unrighteous Judge. Both of the runaways have been traced to this city. The young lady, who is described as being a fascinating creature, arrived here on Monday last on the train from the West. She traveled by herself, and informed those who spoke to her that she expected to meet a friend at the St. Lawrence Hall. When she arrived there with her baggage she was nervous and agitated to find that her friend was not there. She, however, took a room and registered as "Miss C——l, Chicago." After remaining there a few days she said she had succeeded in discovering her friend at the Windsor Hotel, to which she immediately removed, and where she has been residing for the last ten days. The Judge, from the description given, was also a guest at the same house until a few days ago, when he suddenly disappeared, probably owing to the presence in the city of several American detectives. The lady is well provided with funds and is richly and tastefully dressed. She knows no one in the city, and does not appear to care about making acquaintances. She says she is waiting the return of a friend.

Times Have Changed, but Young Men Haven't.

"Now, Mary, I want you to stop keeping company with any young man. Why goodness sakes! jist think of the idee of a young girl only sixteen years old a keepin' company! I'll not have it; and ye needn't set up a bawlin' about it."

"Well, mother," said Mary, between sobs, "I think that's pretty hard on me, when I heard you telling Mrs. Combs that you run off and got married when you was sixteen."

"Yes, but times then wasn't like they be nowadays. Them was romantic times, and it was the fashion them days to run off and get married young. People in high society like me nearly all done that then; but now things is changed altogether, and the young men nowadays hain't a bit better than they was when I was a girl."

HERE AND THERE.

Mrs. Langtry is busy storing away her wealth in N. Y. She has gradually been adding to her investments in mortgages until she now holds over $150,000.

A Tennessee court has closed a term in which six murderers escaped conviction, by sending a hungry woman to prison for two years for stealing a quart of buttermilk.

Harry Adams of Chicago had in his stable a fine harness and wolf robe, and a valuable bull-dog to guard them. Mike Welch broke in and stole harness, robe, and dog.

Dr. Hamilton Griffin, Mary Anderson's vigilant stepfather, says that at the close of the present season the Kentucky actress will retire for two years to gain much needed rest.

The Mormons are still picking up proselytes among the poor whites of the South. Elder Morgan has just taken thirty pretty tough-looking converts from Tennessee and Alabama.

Some of the money made in Northern cities by electric Lulu Hurst went to buy Jersey cattle for Father Hurst's farm, and now he is selling Georgians an excellent quality of butter.

At a recent temperance meeting in Youngstown, Ohio, Mrs. Knight, a saloon keeper, signed the pledge, and at once put her faith into works by turning her saloon into a coffee house.

A young woman of Jefferson county, Indiana, advertised for a husband. A Kansas man answered the advertisement. She agreed to marry him, and when he sent her $25 started to meet him.

Capt. George Bliss of Attlebore, Mass., who is nearly 80 years old, walked all the way to Reboboth on one of the windiest of the recent windy nights, that he might take part in the town meeting.

Dr. Farrand of Charleston, W. Va., was 100 years old on the first day of March. He is a hale old man, walks about the city alone, and reads without glasses. He was once a very well-known Philadelphia physician.

Georgians point with pride to David Sagent of Hall county. He is a vigorous native of 95 years, and walked twenty-two miles the other day, and said he could just as well as not have walked ten miles further.

The citizens of that part of St. Louis known as Kerry patch, not believing that a dog pound should be permitted, assembled last Sunday, men, women, and children, marched upon the pound, over-powered the watchman, and let loose over 200 dogs.

T. C. Dutro, a wealthy citizen of St. Louis, went to Leadville recently with the idea of investing largely in the mines there. While looking through the "Colonel Sellers" Mine he stumbled and fell into a shallow pit. He did not think he was hurt, but he died in four days from the effects of the fall.

A Columbus, W. T., man and wife drove several miles to a grist mill carrying with them several sacks of corn and their child, which had a bad case of whooping cough. While the corn was being ground the child was kept in the hopper until the grain all ran out. They had heard that such treatment would cure whooping-cough.

A Victoria, B. C., merchant was so pleased with the photograph of a young woman living in Nova Scotia, that he struck up a correspondence with her, and then invited her to join him and be his wife. She made the long journey, and when he saw her, and found that she wasn't nearly as good looking as her portrait, he refused to marry her. She is suing him for $5,000.

Pling Martindale of Kirkland, O., is a well-to-do, but apparently very lazy, not to say heartless farmer. He had 300 sheep when winter set in, and plenty of grain and fodder, but the other day an agent for the Humane Society found 71 of the sheep dead, 40 being piled in the basement of one barn, and 23 in another, and others scattered about the place. They had all starved to death.

A Boston drummer ordered a plate of hix native fodder in Brandon, V., the other day, and was charged twenty-five cents. He objected to paying fifteen cents more than the Boston price, but without avail. The next day the bean seller received a telegram saying: "Don't you think that was too much for those beans?" The restaurant man paid twenty-five cents for the message and swore.

Wong Ah Wong, said in the Shanghai newspapers to be one of the Chinese students who were educated in this country, has been arrested for getting money on a forged order. He got only about $2. In court he pleaded for mercy on the ground that his relations had disowned him, that his wife had been taken from him, and that he was without home and money. He was sentenced to one month's imprisonment and to receive 200 blows.

One of the workmen in the bluestone quarries on the Lackawaxen River keeps his family well supplied with duck meat. He sets ordinary steel rat traps baited with fish, whenever he finds an open shallow spot in the ice bound river. The ducks go there to swim and hunt for food, see the fish under the water, dive for it, and get caught by the head, and a series of duck tails sticking out of the water mark the spots where they died.

In the cemetery at Crawfordville, Ga., a stone has just been placed over the grave of Harry Stevens, who died in 1881. It bears these words: "He was for many years the faithful, trusted, and beloved body servant of Alexander H. Stephens. Like him he was distinguished for kindness, uprightness, and benevolence. As a man he was honest and true. As a Christian he was humble and trusting." The grave of the master is still unmarked by monument or stone.

A rhyming signal service officer has formulated the flag code for weather predictions in the following easily memorized lines:

A sun of red is weather warm,
A sun of blue is general storm,
A crescent red is weather cold,
A crescent blue is fair foretold,
A star of red no change implies,
A blue star local stormy skies,
A square of black on flag of white,
A cold wave comes in all its might.

An exhibition of live fish, and all apparatus of fish catching and fish culture, will be made in Chicago in April under the charge of the American Fisheries Society.

Edison's patents have now become so numerous that they have a special series of index or reference numbers in the Patent Office—the only case in which such separation from the general index has been thought necessary.

PAID THE LAST PENALTY.

A Laborer Hanged for Deliberately Drowning his Child.

At Cardiff, Thomas Nash, a laborer, 39 years of age, paid the last penalty of the law for the murder of his child, Mary Ann Nash, 6 years of age, on the 4th of last December. The prisoner was a widower with two children, but upon marrying for the second time, about eight months ago, he placed his daughter Mary in charge of Mrs. Goodwin, who lived in a suburb of Swansea. As he failed to pay for the child's keep Mrs. Goodwin sent for Nash to take her away, and on the 4th of December he called for his child and subsequently was seen walking down the Swansea extension pier, a structure two thousand feet long running into the sea. Over this the surf was breaking at the time, and no one was on the pier except the prisoner and his daughter. Having reached the end of the structure he was seen by some sailors in a boat a few hundred yards from shore to deliberately throw his child into the water and watch until she was dashed to pieces against the rocks. The sailors gave the alarm and the man was arrested. At his trial on the Welsh circuit, before the Lord Chief Justice, the prisoner said that he put the child upon a rail to take her on his back to carry her to town, when she slipped and the wind blew her into the sea, but as this explanation was directly contrary to the testimony of the sailors, the man was found guilty and sentenced to death. Prior to his execution he confessed his guilt, and said that his second wife would only live with him on condition that she was not to be "bothered" with any stepchildren, and as he could not pay for the child's keep, he determined upon getting rid of her.

"Indade an oi will not, an' oi will have yez up fer kapin' dangerious wepins! Oi will!"

"Shut up in there!" shouted the ambulance surgeon, and then all was quiet on the Potomac.

A Waif's View of Wealth.

A little street waif was once at the house of a great lady, and the childish eyes that had to look so sharply after daily bread, were dazzled by the signs of splendor on every hand.

"Can you get everything you want?" the child asked the mistress of the mansion.

"Yes, I think so," was the reply.

"Can you buy anything that you'd like to have?"

The lady answered,

"Yes."

The child, who was of a meditative turn of mind, looked at her half-pityingly, and said, wonderingly:

"Don't you find it dull?"

To the keen little mind, accustomed to live bird-like from day to day, and to rejoice over a little supply with the delight born of rarity, the aspect of continual plenty, and desires all gratified by possession, contained an idea of monotony that seemed almost wearisome.

Many an owner of a well-filled purse, has found life "dull," and pronounced in the midst of luxury that all things are vanity. But the hand that knows how wisely to distribute and scatter abroad the bounty possessed, will never be without interest in life, will never miss the sunshine that abides for kind and unselfish hearts.

The rumor that "the world moves" because it is cheaper to move than to pay rent is denied.

A MURDER MYSTERY.

Texas Officials Alleged to be Implicated. Newspaper's Startling Story.

A despatch from San Antonio says: Apropos of the brutal murder at Austin of Mrs. Eula Phillips, on Christmas Eve, for the commission of which her husband, James W. Phillips, who was found unconscious in bed from a horrible wound received at the same time, has been committed on preliminary examination to jail without bail, the Figaro of this city has produced a profound sensation by publishing the statement of a prominent citizen of San Antonio to the effect that a gentleman who accompanied Mrs. Phillips in a carriage from a certain house at which she met her horrible death is a prominent official in Governor Ireland's [illegible] and aspires to become Governor of the State. The gentleman making the statement says:

"Detectives engaged on the case discovered the infidelities of Mrs. Phillips with a lady friend and that their partners were important officers of the State [illegible] both married men. One of these is the head of an important State department, the other is a clerk in that department. The candidate for a State at the next election. As soon as it was discovered that these officers were implicated the large reward for the apprehension of the murderer was withdrawn and a police officer was detailed to the principal witness to bribe her to leave the State; but the detectives kept her movements and compelled her to testify. She was extremely cautious in her testimony; and, though she partly let the secret out, she artfully concealed the names of the principals. The State's Attorney refrained from cross-examining her as he was the partner of the murdered man and did not call on such partner to testify although he knew he could give important evidence. If the witness could have been kept out of sight Phillips, the husband, would have been discharged and the whole scandal suppressed. But now it is done. While every effort is being made to shield these State officers, I hope they will work out."

The Figaro editorially denounces the important officials, and demands the exposure of their gross immorality, so that they may be driven from their positions of trust and trust by the condemnation of the outraged public. The publication is the talk of the town to-day, and may lead to startling developments at Austin.

A MASSACRE OF YEARS AGO.

The Guilt of an Awful Tragedy Traced Home at Last.

Advices from British Columbia state that after fourteen years' waiting, the authorities believe they have discovered and have in custody one of the participants in the massacre of the passengers and crew of the steamship G. S. Wright, which was lost on the down trip from Alaska in 1872. The authentic details of the casualty ere the fate of the unfortunate passengers and crew were ever known, as no white man lived to tell the tale. Authentic rumors, however, were subsequently confirmed, were based on circulation sometime after the catastrophe of the escape of a number of whites from the wreck and of their subsequent massacre by the Indians on the coast where they landed. The supposition was that the ill-fated vessel, during a snow storm, struck a reef when entering Queen Charlotte Sound, at the northern end of the island, the entrance to the Sound being dangerous in thick weather on account of the number of treacherous reefs. One of the officers of the George S. Wright was an Indian, who escaped with others from a watery grave and then assisted his brother redskins to massacre the unfortunate officers and passengers who escaped with him. It is now believed beyond doubt, that an Indian named [illegible], who is held in custody at Victoria, B. C., for having stolen liquor in his possession, is none other than the fireman of the ill-fated vessel who took part in, if he did not actively instigate, the murder of the passengers and crew. The authorities are now working up the case, and from the evidence against several Indians from the vicinity of the wreck there is every probability that the guilt, at least of the guilty parties will be brought to justice, although fourteen years have gone by since the terrible deed was committed.

Asphyxia in the Mont Cenis Tunnel.

Paris despatch:—The supporters of the St. Gothard Tunnel are now taking advantage of some petty accidents to begin a bitter war against the defenders of the Mont Cenis Tunnel, and we meet here, as elsewhere, the everlasting struggle between nations destined to oppose each other in every field. The truth is that the Fell Railway Company is not bound to the Mont Cenis. Its engines stop at Modane, and it is Italy which is bound by international treaties to work the railway between Bardonnechia and Modane.

Now, as for some time asphyxia has been spoken of under Mont Cenis have been spoken of, we have made careful inquiries. The Fell company has employed, in fact, two sets of engines and a well-known fuel for their trains. Now these remain a long while in the tunnel, and it has twice happened that the railway officials accompanying the trains have suffered from serious symptoms of asphyxia in consequence of the exhaustion of the engines and the fuel used, and also in consequence of the casual state of the atmosphere, but the two sufferers promptly recovered on getting out of the tunnel. Immediate complaints, however, were made by the French company, and the Fell company changed both engine and fuel. Since this was done no inconvenience has been reported.

It should be added that these accidents have not occurred to the passenger trains. I have, during the last few days, spoken to a dozen travellers who had just traversed Mont Cenis, and all of them stated that except the nervousness a few of them experienced in passing through a tunnel of such length, nothing occurred which could give rise to the slightest discomfort.

"Why are the works of a watch like flowers that bloom in spring?" "Because they've nothing to do with the case."

Nellie would have made some answer to speech, but the princess was in no hu- to listen to one.

With these words she gave Nellie a shove sent her reeling into a corner, and then ng the little chamber she looked and the door thereof in her rear.

CHAPTER XL.

DONELLY BEARDS THE WAR MINISTER.

alone in her chamber, or rather her cell, poor Nellie gave way unre- edly to her grief, and for a long while felt as if she was positively going mad. had come to the very natural conclu- that her young and gallant husband been butchered by the mob, even as had been butchered, his faithful ser- sharing his fate; thus she felt that was widowed, indeed—friendless, and captive of one who hated her with a malignity and gloated over the time they would be the wife and mistress man, and she (the princess) would be ded, through her higher position, with power to persecute and torture her.

Nellie knew instinctively who that man , for the princess had spoken so plainly she felt that she could guess correctly. was Arabi Pasha, the war minister, then it came upon her like a conviction the wicked princess, failing through ge to obtain her daring wish of eman- ion from Mohammedan thraldom, and zzling with her beauty the fashionable of Paris and London, had resolved at all events she would be the fore- woman in her native land; and, in or- to become a Khedive's wife, had con- ed against her own brother.

Nellie felt, deep down in her heart, that war minister loved her and only her, she knew also that he loved his down- country more, and she thought it ible that he would make any sacrifice cession for its sake, took it even the of a marriage with the present Kha- 's sister and the installing her as the of his harem.

, on the other hand, she could not as much as hope that he would relinquish his claim over her, especially that he was now the de facto ruler of Egypt and could defy both European protest and interference.

Yet, if Providence did not especially interfere in her behalf she was convinced that she would shortly be the war minister's slave, or at the best his third wife, whilst the princess, who hated her so much, would be his Valide Khanom, and as such be in a position to tyrannize over, insult and even punish her, from hour to hour and from day to day as long as she lived,

Nellie pondered, mourned and fretted over all these several things whilst seated on a pile of cushions at the little crossbarred window looking out at the blue and tranquil sea, whose waves lapped the base of the wall that constituted that side of her prison cell, and upon the three enormous ironclads, flying the bright Union Jack of old England, which lay some little distance off, but with steam up and the gaping mouths of her huge cannon to all appearances pointed directly at the palace.

So near were they that she could even read the great gold letters upon their prows and make them out to be the Alexandra, the Sultan and the Superb, and whilst she continued to gaze a band of music struck up aboard one of them, and the strains, mellowed by being borne across water, reached her with wondrous distinctness, but with the result of drawing another flood of tears from her eyes, for the air was "Home, Sweet Home," and of all airs, that was the one least adapted to cheer or comfort her on an occasion like the present.

So distressing, indeed, was its effect upon her over-excited nerves that she threw herself down upon the floor, buried her face in the pile of velvet, gold-embroidered cushions and pushed her fingers into her ears, so that not a single note of the well-remembered and beloved strain should reach her, and thus and there we will leave the lonely and unfortunate girl, in the throes of her mental but silent agony, in order to return to the fortunes of her husband and his faithful dependent.

* * * * * * *

The speech of the cavalry officer stayed the murderous hands of the mob, and it is likely that its conclusion, which was to the effect that "in the end the two Europeans would in all probability be hanged whether or no," had more weight with them than either the beginning or the middle of the harangue.

Be that as it may, however, Captain Donelly, who had been felled to the ground, was raised to his feet again, whilst Pat Monaghan was also picked up and restored to his senses by a few hearty cuffs, and then the cavalry officer called up a few infantry soldiers who were lounging about doing nothing (they had shortly before been amongst the most active of the rioters), and intrusting his two prisoners to their care, ordered them to be marched at once to the arsenal, whither he accompanied them.

Perhaps had he not done so, by some mischance they would never have arrived at their destination.

They were not suffered to speak to each other on the road, and a buffet rewarded every attempt to do so. At last, however, after following exactly the same route as Nellie and the eunuch aga had done in the caleche, and after witnessing very similar sights on the way (though now cavalry officers were galloping in all directions and apparently doing their utmost to save life and restore order), they arrived at the great gates of the arsenal, where artillery soldiers stood on guard, passing whom and being conducted across a paved court to a large and barrack-like building they were admitted thereinto, and presently found themselves in a bare, black looking room, as destitute of furniture as an empty barn, and where they saw many other Europeans in as evil care as themselves.

Ere Captain Donelly could hold converse or compare notes with any of them the door they had entered (the room had two) was again opened to give admission to the war minister, closely followed by two armed orderlies.

Arabi Pasha walked silently to and fro amongst the prisoners, as though looking for some one whom he expected to see there, and no sooner did his gaze rest on Captain Donelly than, walking up to him, he said anxiously:

"How is it that you are alone? What has become of your companion, Miss Trezarr?"

"You had best ask your eunuch aga that question, since 'twas at his instigation that our carriage was attacked, and 'twas he also who made away with her therein."

And here it may be observed that Frank labored under this misconception because that he had heard Osman Ogbon declare to the mob as they were attacking the carriage that his master was "the Saviour of Egypt and the Chosen of the Nation."

This answer to the war minister's question seemed, however, to puzzle that exalted personage immensely.

"Come with me into the next room," said he. "This is a matter that requires looking into, and the sooner that we understand each other the better, perhaps, for all parties."

With these enigmatical words he strode on in front, and turning a deaf ear to the many who would fain have held speech with him, he entered the inner room, closely followed by Frank Donelly, who put constraint on his feelings because he had no sword to vent them with.

He now looked round upon a room furnished in Egyptian official fashion, but hardly had he taken note of the many models of ships upon the walls when the war minister, who had thrown himself into a chair, said in cold, stern tones:

"You told me just now that Miss Trezarr had been carried off by my aga, but that cannot be, because my aga and my entire harem remain at Cairo. How was this aga dressed?"

"Such was the tumult and confusion that I had to keep my eyes on those who were actively assailing us. Still my ears were at leisure, and I heard him declare that he was your aga."

"The rascal lied. But have you no idea whatever of his general appearance?"

"I caught a momentary glimpse of a huge head and a showy dress of scarlet and white."

"Maloom! Maloom! then is she by this time in the power of Princess Zeneb."

The war minister ejaculated the words more as though he was communing with himself than addressing Frank, and there was an expression of such keen anxiety upon his face that our hero, who had been sufficiently alarmed by his words, grew still more so by reason of his look, and impatiently broke forth with:

"In the power of that cruel and vindictive woman? As God is my judge, I would rather of the two that she was in yours. I must go to her brother the Khedive at once. You dare not detain me," and the young officer moved toward the door as he spoke.

"It is locked by now on the other side and guarded as well," said the war minister coldly. "Besides," he added, "I can serve Miss Trezarr better than you can, and as she is my affianced wife, it is more fitting that I should move in the matter. Had you not induced her to elope with you this misfortune would not have happened, and at this moment she would have been safe with her parents in my palace at Cairo."

"Her parents had no right to sell her to you against her natural inclinations, as though she was a mere bale of merchandise. We had loved each other for months, we were all in all to each other, we felt that death would be a hundred times better than separation, and for these reasons, rather than remain at Cairo and be coerced by her parents into marrying you, she dared a thousand perils to escape with me."

"The blood of youth is hot and the brain of youth is weak, on which account I forgive both of you," replied the war minister with a sneer. "But," he added, "I far from resign my claim to Miss Trezarr, for it is a child's duty to obey her parents in all things, and in that point your Bible and our Khoran are at all events agreed. That you have done wrong in this affair can therefore be proved out of your own Scriptures, and a few weeks of solitary confinement will give you an opportunity of studying the question therein and of convincing yourself that I am right. When at the proper hour I have the privilege of setting you free Miss Trezarr will have become my wife and the most lovely inmate of my harem, and thus the matter will have been finally decided. For the present I go to set her free."

"Dare to move from that chair and I will strangle you. The lady of whom you speak is Miss Trezarr no longer, but my lawful wedded wife, and I demand to be at once allowed to go to the Khedive so that he may force his sister to deliver her up to me."

CHAPTER XLI,

IN WHICH MR. DONELLY IN TURN IS PLACED UNDER LOCK AND KEY.

Captain Donelly's outburst of passion met with a similar one on the part of the war minister.

"Slave—infidel—unclean Kaffir," he exclaimed, foaming at the mouth with rage the while. "So you have dared to do this wrong to the girl in defiance of her parents and myself combined? You have taught me to regret the saving of your worthless life."

"The saving of my life? Your saving of my life? Your excellency is pleased to be facetious," retorted the dragoon officer, in accents of fiery scorn, and then he quickly added: "It seems to please you also to make a merit of that which a dire necessity has driven you unto, the securing of a few Christian prisoners, so that the threat of hanging them in case the British fleets should open fire upon your forts may deter it from knocking them to pieces."

"By Allah and the prophet you either intentionally or through ignorance wrong me, you Kaffir dog, for far from being afraid of the British fleet, or what it can do unto us, unless it shortly withdraws and permits Egypt to settle her own private business in the way best pleasing to the vast majority of her inhabitants, I shall open fire upon it from our forts, and I firmly believe sink the huge ironclads at the moorings, and swear unto you that my sole object in troubling myself to make prisoners was to attempt to save as many of your unfortunate countrymen's lives as possible. To do this I had to win an excuse that would induce the enraged populace to spare them, and I could think of none better than the one which I used and that you now fling back in my face."

"If I have wronged your excellency I apologize, and if I owe my life unto your excellency I return you my best thanks for the saving of it, and, having done so, all my thoughts revert again to my sweet girl wife, whom I believe to be in the power of a female fiend who thirsts to execute some dreadful vengeance upon her."

"Why should she wish to be avenged on her? Perhaps I know, but how do you guess it?"

"That I may not tell your excellency, for whilst it is possible that I may misjudge another, it would be dishonorable to betray that other's confidence," answered Frank Donelly.

"It is well said of you, and I stand reproved," rejoined Arabi Pasha, with a stately bow. Then, after a moment's thought, he continued: "I trust, Captain Donelly, that your captivity will be a short one, but, however short it may be, you may depend that it will be the saving of your life, and that many stirring events will happen during its continuance. I shall now go to the rescue of my affianced wife, and I still use that term because I regard the ceremony that has been performed between you two as a mere farce, inasmuch as there was no consent of parents, which is a chief essential of Egyptian law, and since yester morn all who are abiding in Egypt have become subject to the laws of Egypt, even as all foreigners abiding in England are subject to the laws of England. You cannot call this injustice, because, if it be so, why would similar treatment be meted out to us in your land?"

"I cannot argue such matters with a shrewd diplomatist. I am a blunt soldier and, like the conquerors of this land, am accustomed to cut knotty problems with my sword, instead of attempting to untie them with my tongue. If your excellency will, therefore, be good enough to order my sword to be returned to me, I will willingly leave to the test of cold steel the subject of our discussion."

"Young man, as I said to you once before, I dare not cross swords with you, because I am the property of the nation; and I do not think I flatter myself when I add invaluable to the nation as well. It would be, therefore, criminal on my part to risk in a private quarrel a life that is devoted to the public good. I shall certainly not, however, yield my affianced bride up to you, but rather place you for a while where you can neither disarrange my plans nor do either of us any injury;" and as he concluded he struck a gong that stood on a table in front of him, and in immediate answer to the summons the look was heard to turn and the two orderlies entered the room, carefully locking the door again behind them.

As both men were armed to the teeth, and he had not a weapon of any kind about him, Frank Donelly saw that to offer resistance would be little short of madness—in fact, a direct invitation to the Egyptians to murder him, and perhaps his faithful follower, Pat Monaghan, as well.

In the untoward dilemma in which he found himself he remembered the fable of the sapling that yielded to the blast and so escaped destruction, whilst the sturdy oak which tried to resist it was torn up by the roots, and bending in like manner to the inevitable, he said in accents of subdued but bitter contempt:

"I will leave my country to avenge me. There is an inner something which tells me that when we again meet I shall have a sword in my hand, and that instead of being the idol of this misguided nation you will be considered by all men as its bitter curse. Perhaps in that hour I may repay the good turn which you declare you have done me by saving you with my good steel the disgrace of swinging by a hempen rope."

Arabi spat upon the floor to avert any evil omen that these words might contain, and then replied quite calmly:

"The dog who cannot bite is always prone to bark. Inshallah, be it as God wills; for we are all in the hands of Allah."

The Egyptian orderlies would now have proceeded to drag the young Islshman along, had he not saved them the trouble by moving in the direction indicated of his own free will.

He found that this was not to be the way in which he had come, but straight across the large bare-looking room to a door that was exactly opposite to the other one.

It gave admission to a damp stone passage that seemed to gradually trend downward, and they had not proceeded along it very far when they came to what looked like cell doors on either side, all of which were closed, as though the interiors were occupied.

At last, however, they arrived at one which stood ajar, and Frank was silently informed that he had reached his own domicile through being introduced thereto by a sudden and unexpected shove, which propelled him into its furthermost corner, and ere he could turn round the door was locked and bolted upon him, and he could hear the Egyptian soldiers laughing at what was doubtless to them a very good joke as they walked away.

Frank Donelly set himself to a vigilant investigation of his prison chamber, which, however, did not take him very long, for it was about twelve feet square, with stone walls, a stone floor, a slightly vaulted roof, a door that looked as massive as though it was that of a banker's strong room and which had a little half window about a foot square let into it (for the passing in and out of food, as Frank supposed), while exactly opposite thereto was the window proper, which was of about the same dimensions and defended with stout iron bars.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Wealthy Chinaman.

Hu-Tow-Tai, a great Chinese speculator, and probably the richest merchant in the empire, died recently at Hong Chow. His progress through life may have been as prosy and uninteresting as that of any other common millionaire, but his funeral was the longest and one of the grandest on record. At the head of the procession a number of coolies trudged along carrying little scraps of paper upon which short sentences full of wisdom and sound advice were traced in pencil. Then followed a crowd of lantern bearers, the lanterns fastened at the end of long bamboo canes. After them came a small army of musicians with gongs, symbols, and trumpets making a noise enough to scare the sulphur and the brimstone out of all the wicked spirits within range. Next came a few hundred little boys, each holding in his hand some weapon of strange form intended for the slaughter of evil-disposed devils. The bearers of the family tablets with the names of the ancestors of the deceased marched after the boys. Next in the procession, altars on wheels appeared loaded with choice fruit, the last one bearing the portrait of the deceased. After these altars, two groups of priests presented themselves, the first dressed in white robes richly embroidered, and the second in scarlet and yellow. Between these two groups there was a crowd bearing lanterns, flags, parasols, and fans, together with all sorts of queer things. The master of ceremonies rode on horseback, and was dressed from head to foot in white, the Chinese mourning. Behind him was a large white tent carried along by strong men, and in this the relatives concealed their woe. At last the coffin came in sight mounted on a magnificent hearse ornamented in the most gorgeous style, and borne along on the shoulders of twenty five men. A large number of mandarins, dressed in their official robes, and carried in Japanese chairs, closed the procession.

Opium and Whisky.

There is no curse to the human family as great as the intemperate use of either opium or whisky, nor is there a habit formed as difficult to remove; in fact it cannot be classed as a habit after certain stages, as it then becomes a disease, as marked in its characteristics as the most deadly of maladies. M. V. Lubon, recognizing the ravages that were being made by these destroyers of peace, home and happiness, some years ago commenced to devote his whole study to the peculiarity of the condition of sufferers from these habits, and after much labor made important discoveries that have been the means of curing many cases of drunkenness, opium, morphine, chloral, and kindred habits. He has been philanthropic enough to issue a book upon the subject, which he sends free to all applicants. M. V. Lubon's address is No. 47 Wellington St. East, Toronto, Canada. Worthless is the soule that is void of push and enterprise. Live, honest men are always a valuable accession to any community. John E. Richards, for the past seven years a trusted employee in the well known establishment of W. J. McFarland of this place, leaves this week for Rocklyn, where he is about to launch his new craft on the broad billows of that fertile commercial sea. A second general store has long been needed in Rocklyn, and Mr. Richards is just the man to fill the bill. Mr. Richards has been with us so long, and his conduct both in his social and business relations has been so fair and unclouded that we are truly sorry that he is to leave Markdale. But our loss will be Rocklyn's gain and our best wishes go with him. When a young man like this strikes out for himself in business he is eminently worthy of the best support that can be accorded him; and we do not hesitate to say that Mr. Richards, endowed as he is with abundance of affability, gentlemanly courteousness and genuine integrity of character, will merit the patronage of all.

THE WORLD'S BEST.

Miss Maud Richardson is in Toronto making selections of Millinery for spring opening. Ladies' "Wait for the wagon" loads of pretty things this season, at Richardson & Co's, Flesherton.

How is it that Haskett Bro's can sell building hardware the cheapest of any house in the county? Simply because they purchase in large quantities for spot cash, thereby securing two discounts, one for extensive purchases and one for "Kash," which is "King."

The person who took a horse blanket during the entertainment at Ebenezer church, town line, tea-meeting on the evening of the 17th inst., from the church enclosure will greatly oblige by leaving it at this office and save trouble.

Just arrived a large variety of carriage gears, consisting of the Atkinson, Buffalo Road Wagon, Marten Platform, also the celebrated Dexter and champion buggie gears. Call and see them and leave your order for one at Wm. Mason's carriage works Markdale.

Mr. John McNeely of this place has bought this season, for C. J. Smith, wood and coal dealer of Toronto, 17,000 cords of wood between Shelburne and Chatsworth Stations. This would run a train of 9 cars, 247 days, the freight of which would, at $15 per car, come to $32,390, or the amount paid to farmers for wood, at $1.50 per cord would net $25,500.

RAPID WORK.

"For two years I was troubled with dyspepsia—could neither labor nor find relief. Less than one bottle of B. B. B. relieved me—3 bottles cured me." So says John A. Rappell, of Farmerville. Burdock Blood Bitters cures dyspepsia, liver and kidney complaints, and all impurities of the system.

The Massey Manufacturing Co. of Toronto have made arrangements for their season's supply of maple 132,000 ft. from Armstromg Bro's of this place, which has left a quantity of cash through the county for maple logs. This district abounds with first class maple, and Armstrong's have their order about complete, as to stock of logs.

There has been a great deal said in favor of "Permanent Pasture," at the meetings of Farmers' Institute during the past winter. The great advantage derived therefrom, as shown by Prof. Brown of the Government Experimental Farm, are surprising, and yet quite reasonable, and if the results should prove one half as satisfactory as the Professor represented, it would be well worth testing. Every farmer should fix up at least one acre the coming season.

Thornbury post office has been removed to new premises.

Mrs. Clement is teaching the art of cutting and fitting, all kinds of ladies' and childrens' apparel. Her system is said to be "perfection."

Have been to Toronto and made arrangements with a music dealer so that I can get any class of music, or musical instruction books, at close prices. Leave your order from catalogue with W. A. Brown, jeweller.

The immense trade now done in China and Glassware by Richardson & Co's show that it only needed enterprise in this line to secure reward, their prices cannot be beat; at Flesherton, remember.

Manitoulin Weather.—The Manitoulin Expositor says the weather this winter has been all that could be desired, sufficient snow to make good sleighing and not so much but what the roads have been kept open for travel with ease.

Wm. Mason, Markdale Carriage Works, has a large stock of excellent and thoroughly seasoned material on hand, and is manufacturing a large quantity of buggies democrats, &c., &c. Call and give him your order so that you may be suited in style. Prices right and quality of work unsurpassed.

Municipal councils should see the steel road scraper made by A. McGill of Chatsworth, before purchasing. They are without exception the best in the market. Patent applied for. Wm. Jackson, Markdale, agent for this district.

G. W. Boggs, Deputy Postmaster at St. Thomas was arrested on a charge of stealing registered letters from the P. O. After being closely cornered, he pleaded guilty and confessed taking at various times sums which amounted in all to $331.35. He was sentenced to 5 years in penitentiary.

Farewell.—The members of L. O. L. No. ——, met at their hall, Meaford Road, on Tuesday evening last, with their wives and sisters, to give a farewell supper to Messrs. Jas. Mercer and Robt. McLaughry, two of their brethren, on the occasion of their departure for the far west. After partaking of a sumptuous repast prepared by the ladies, Mr. Kells, master of the lodge, took the chair, which he filled in his usual genial manner. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were responded to by the different members present. The meeting broke up at 12 o'clock by singing the National Anthum.

"WHAT SAY YOU TO A PIECE OF ROAST BEEF AND MUSTARD?"

Well, there is much to be said. The question being asked of the banqueter at the average boarding house, calls up reminiscences of close contiguity to the horns, and beefsteak three cuts south thereof. He, of course, will pass unless it occurs to him that he needs a hinge for his trunk. Should there be any suffering, the effects of an indulgence in sanguinuous fare, use McGregor's Speedy Cure, a sure and effectual remedy for Dyspepsia, Constipation and all affections of the stomach and liver. SURE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.

If the system is properly cleansed by some medicine that acts upon the bowels, kidneys and skin, such as Burdock Blood Bitters, and the sufferer will use Hagyard's Yellow Oil according to directions, there are few cases of rheumatism, however bad but will yield promptly to the treatment.

YOUNG FOLKS.

A Spelling Lesson.

People, as a rule, are particular about having their names spelled correctly, and they are not to be blamed for their preference. You may make the aristocratic Smythe a life-long enemy by writing his in the plebeian fashion—Smith. Here is a post-master who was extremely anxious to have the name of his city spelled properly:

The post-master at Buffalo, in making up the mail for Binghamton, persisted in inserting the "p" in addressing the package, though the Binghamton post-master had written to him on the subject, explained that the "p" should be omitted, and asked that the correction be made. The Buffalo post-master paid no attention to the request, continuing to address the packages as before, and finally the Binghamton man, a somewhat peppery individual, got mad. He had to address a mail package to Buffalo daily, and, after making it up, he wrote upon the outside in big letters the word "Buffalop," adding beneath it the message:

"There! How do you like to have the name of your old town spelled with a 'p,' oo?"

It is said that this reformed the Buffalo official.

Steering by Mother's Light.

He put his hands to his mouth as if he had placed a speaking-trumpet there, and then shouted through them.

"Hul—lo! Hul—lo—o—o!"

There was no answer save that of the heavy swash of the sea at his feet. Neither was there anything to be seen, only a vast thick curtain of gray mist falling everywhere over the sea.

He made another speaking-trumpet with his hands and shouted again, but there was no response. Neither did the fog break before his piercing cry. Sullen and gray it hung down over the sea.

"I don't see," said Pierre, "where the fishing boats are. And, of course, it don't do any good to call, but then, when one don't know what to do, why—why he will try anything. Guess I will go into the house and see mother."

He walked up the hard sandy beach, climbed the hummocks in the rear, and then dropped down into a cosy valley that several aged willows overshadowed. Under one of these trees was Pierre's home.

"Any word from the boats?" asked a musical voice.

"That is mother," thought Pierre.

She was stooping over the fire of driftwood that she had begun to make on the broad and blackened hearth.

"Any news from the boats?" she asked again. "It is time for the fishermen to be at home."

"Nothing," he said.

"Three boats went out, Pierre—I saw them go—your father's, your uncle Louis' and your uncle Pierre's."

Yes, three boats had gone to the fishing grounds just off a rough, rocky point—three boats rocking on the restless, surging sea.

"Four of the neighbors went with your uncle Louis."

"I know it, mother. All men in that boat."

"And Cosette went in your father's."

"Yes, and she is as good as a man in a boat."

"Good as a man!" Cosette, Pierre's big sister, could manage a boat better than some men.

Besides Cosette, two others of the family were in that boat—Clem and Victor, Pierre's big brothers, strong and muscular.

"I saw the boats off the point, mother, two hours ago, and I could see Cosette standing in the stern of father's boat. Uncle Pierre's was farther out, its sail set, and the boat was skipping away."

"God keep them!" murmured the mother. "I don't like to have them late when the sea is rough. God keep them!"

"I will go out and see how things look now."

He soon came back and reported that the fog seemed to be scattering and the wind rising.

"Could you hear the waves off the Big Rock?"

"Yes, I could hear them."

The mother sighed again and again. The waves off "Big Rock" meant the surf around a lofty shore-ledge at high-tide; and when a storm was approaching, the agitation of the sea about this ledge was very violent and noisy. She went to the door, listened, and then slowly climbed the worn stairway leading to her little chamber under the roof.

"I think I will go up stairs," she murmured.

"It won't do any good, mother," cried Pierre, who knew what she proposed to do.

"I wish you only thought it would, Pierre."

She lighted a lamp, set it in the narrow window and then bowed her head in prayer. It was her habit on stormy nights and Pierre had carelessly joked about it, and yet it was only talk on the surface. The terrible wrath of the sea awed him; and if his pride had not prevented, he would have declared his purpose to look to that God who holds wind and wave alike in his grasp.

While a mother at home was praying by the lighted lamp souls at sea were watching it. The three boats had been bewildered in the fog. Two of them had stumbled on a little island, in one of whose coves they sought shelter for the night. The boat belonging to Pierre's father had not been so fortunate. When the wind rose and the fog scattered, Cosette's keen eyes were turned in every direction, searching for some ray from a guiding light.

"Oh, there! See!" she cried, pointing toward a dim flash of gold off on the water's edge.

"Make for that," replied her father.

The bow of the boat was pointed toward that golden spark. Slowly but steadily they advanced through the rough waters, and the boat was beached in a little sheltered nook not far from the home under the willows.

"Here we are!" shouted Victor, at the door of the house.

"Oh, thank God!" cried the mother, coming down the stairway, her lamp in her hand. "Oh, how did you get here?"

"We steered by mother's light," said Cosette. "We saw it in the window, though we did not know what it was out there."

"Ah!" thought Pierre, "it is time I were steering by mother's light." When he lay down that night, he first knelt and asked God to guide him over life's rough sea.

The months went rapidly by. The cold, hard blasts of winter drove across the sea, and like plows they turned up the dark waters. Then came spring, with its softer airs, and the longer days kindled in the sky that longer light in which the sea rolled and flashed like a vast crystal. Spring, though, did not soften the cough that had attacked Pierre and with which he vainly wrestled.

"He can't live long," said the old doctor of the family; "he may go any day."

One stormy night the boy lay dying; father, mother, Cosette, Victor, Clementine, gathered in tears about his bed. Pierre was wandering in his thoughts; he fancied he was far off on the sea. The waves, he said, were running high.

"Don't you be afraid for me," he said, in low tones, looking round on those who wept at his side. "I shall—make—harbor; I'm steering by mother's—light;" and guided by prayer, steering by a mother's light, the fisher-boy quickly reached heaven and home.

HACKED TO DEATH.

An Express Messenger Murdered in His Car.

The express car of the Rock Island train which leaves Chicago at 11 p. m. was boarded by robbers at Joliet at 1 o'clock the other morning. Kellogg Nichols, express messenger of the United States Express Company, was killed, and money and jewelry valued at about $35,000 were stolen. Nichols attended to his duties at Joliet, but when the train arrived at Morris, twenty miles beyond Joliet, he did not open the door of the car.

The local agent at Morris forced open the door, and found Nichols lying dead on the floor of the car, with his throat cut from ear to ear and his head horribly cut and crushed. The baggageman was found bound and gagged in the next car. The safe was broken open and its contents gone. As the train does not stop between Joliet and Morris it is approximately certain that the robbers boarded the cars at the former place.

The facts of the express robbery as learned from the baggageman are that, shortly after the train left Joliet at 12 45 a. m., he heard a rap at the baggage car door. Thinking it was the express messenger he opened the door and was confronted by masked robbers, who covered him with revolvers and forced him to give up the key to the express car. The baggageman was guarded by one of the robbers, while the balance turned their attention to the express car.

It is supposed they obtained entrance to the express car by rapping and explaining that the baggageman wanted to get in. At any rate the express car door was opened and the desperadoes entered; and then ensued a battle for life and the property entrusted to his charge on the part of the express messenger.

The interior of the car shows that he fought the robbers from one end to the other, but at last the blows that they rained on his head with an iron poker forced him to succumb, and he was left dead in the car. The thieves rifled his pockets of the keys of the safe, which they robbed of all its contents, variously estimated at from $20,000 to $25,000. Checks and valuable packages not containing money they left scattered on the floor. In one hand the dead man clutched a lock of dark hair, which must have been torn from the head of one of the assassins. Sheriff Rietz and Chief of Police Murray have organized a posse and are scouring the country in pursuit of the robbers.

The Rock Island Railway will offer a reward of $10,000 for the capture of the men who committed the express robbery, and $5,000 for the arrest of any of them.

The baggageman has been arrested on suspicion of being implicated.

"Do You Mean Me?"

"An unprecedented affair (writes a correspondent) happened at a little country church on a recent Sunday evening. A young man, accompanied by a female, attended service there, as they had frequently done before. It appears that the young man, either for convenience (the pew being crowded) or from force of habit, placed his arm on the top of the seat behind his companion. Judge his surprise, and that of the congregation also, when the minister, having offered up the prayer, exclaimed, 'Take your arm from that woman's waist, will you?' Of course, at this there was a general look to discover the guilty one, the young man himself being unable to realize his position. Giving another look at the minister, he was met with the words, 'You, I mean; don't you hear!' As there could be no mistake this time, the young man answered, 'Do you mean me?' The minister said, 'Yes take your arm from that woman's waist!—'I beg your pardon, sir, replied the young man; my arm is not round her waist.' —'Don't answer me in church,' said the rev. gentleman. 'Very well,' replied the young man, 'I will leave your church;' and picking up his hat, he did so."

A Ghastly Token.

Sadie Hayes, the colored woman under sentence of death for the murder of Police Sergeant Jenks, at St. Louis, has a lover named Wm. Lacey, who is as black as she is. She wanted some tangible proof of his love, and said that if he really loved her as he professed, he would, before their final separation, present her with a ring he wore, with the finger on which it was worn. The other day he was to be taken to the penitentiary, having been sentenced to a term of three years for burglary. The same evening his sweetheart received the desired proof of his love—the little finger of his right hand adorned with the ring. Lacey had actually sawed or cut off his little finger at the joint with a steel shank taken from his shoe and sharpened on the iron bars of his cell. He wrapped the bleeding stump of the finger in his handkerchief, and later it was amputated and dressed by a surgeon.

A drunken Louisvillian went into a broker's office where there were three boys employed. He ordered them to "fall in" at the point of his pistol, marched them to a back room, and there, under threats of immediate death, forced them to drink wine until they were all drunk and very sick.

Police Justice George A. Meech of Chicago, who has brought a libel suit against the Rev. Dr. Kittredge, is a son of the officer who in the War of 1812 commanded the privateer "General Armstrong," and through his mother a descendant of William Brewster, who was one of the company of the Mayflower.

Miss Cleveland has adopted for use in her correspondence a crest which is a copy of the new seal recently provided for the President, and shows the bald-headed eagle, not with wings outstretched as formerly, but with his wearied pinions at rest; upon the breast of the eagle rests the familiar shield, with its thirteen stripes and thirteen stars. The crest is printed in dead gold and below it appear the words, "The President's House."

The Queen has taken the recent lecture of the Standard to heart and is emerging from her long seclusion. Being in town for the drawing-room this week she drove three separate days in the park. She has further promised to attend public conventions in the city, and if she will consent to ante-date her jubilee, that celebration may take place this summer. It is hoped that she will undertake royal progress through the great towns.

Sir Henry James, London Truth says, is the victim of a smart repartee. His opponent at Bury said that he so greatly respected Lord Salisbury, that if he were to propose Home Rule, he should vote in favor of it. Sir Henry replied that he respected Mr. Gladstone quite as much, but that if a hundred Gladstones were to propose Home Rule, he should vote against it. Sir Henry wrote to the chairman of his committee to ask him whether, under the present circumstances, this utterance precluded him from joining Mr. Gladstone's administration. The chairman replied that it did.

Prince Krapotkine, the learned and famous anarchist, recently released from a French prison, has decided to make his home in Hampstead, Eng., and expects to spend there in peace and quietude the closing years of his adventurous and troubled life. He intends, however, before resuming his duties, to make a tour of England and America for the purpose of delivering a series of lectures, in which he will define his own views upon socialism and describe the present aspect of the revolutionary movement throughout the world as viewed from the inside.

Prince Pascal de Bourbonn, brother of the ex-king of Naples, has just figured in a police court, being charged with fraud in giving a mortgage for $150,000 upon his villa which he had already mortgaged to its full value of $39,000. The Prince set up a defence that he received no money consideration for the mortgage, but wine which he sold and only realized $10,000. The mortgagors tried to sell the villa and extort the full amount of the mortgage, but the prince was acquitted on the ground that no intention to commit fraud had been proven.

Lord Wolseley's refusal to pay fees to the Herald's College for his new title and to Ulster King of arms and his officials for the insignia of St. Patrick, calls up a story of how a similar exhibition of independence was dealt with by George IV. A certain knight of Windsor received the order of St. Michael and St. George, and after the investiture a bill for the usual amount of fees was sent to him, which he swore nothing would induce him to pay. There was no precedent for such a case, so a memorandum was sent to Sir William Knighton at Windsor, in order that the King's pleasure might be taken. The document was returned with the following endorsement by the King himself: "Stop the d—d fellow's pay until the claim is cleared."

THE WORLD OVER

Cresidy, a French horse that was looked upon as the coming racehorse when two years old, will soon appear in the new French circus as a trick horse. No one can ride him.

The most brilliant soiree given recently in Paris was that of the Princess Youriecsky, formerly the Princess Dolgorouki, widow of Alexander II. All the swell world was there.

An æsthetic Worcester horse will tear any cheap blanket that may be thrown over it into shreds, but seems immensely pleased when covered with one that is costly and beautiful.

Robert Morris, a Georgia murderer, has been sentenced to be hanged on April 16. When the Judge sentenced him he laughed, and to the Sheriff he said: "Send me plenty to eat, so that I will be heavy enough to break my neck when I fall."

A new gun, 50 calibre, has been tested in Kalamazoo, which, with one ounce of powder, drove a steel bullet two inches long through four ⅜ inch iron plates, and dented the fifth. It is said a cannon made on the same principle will throw a ball fifteen miles.

Barbara Robinson, a little uneducated nine-year-old negro girl of West Point, Ga., bids fair to rival Blind Tom as a pianist. She plays with wonderful correctness any composition that she has once heard. Like Tom she seems oblivious to everything else when listening to music or playing the piano.

A Georgia farmer, who was carefully rearing a nice litter of Berkshire pigs, couldn't account for the disappearance of all but three. One day he heard one squealing shrilly in the air and saw a big buzzard sailing off with it. The farmer shot the buzzard, and buzzard and pig fell to the ground dead.

The big snow storm in Maine packed the principle streets in Dixmont with a drift fifteen feet high, and so solid that horses could be driven over it. The young men and boys of the village tunneled this drift, and after two days' work, made a tunnel 175 feet long, 7 feet high, and 8 feet wide, through which teams were driven for several days.

At a recent Dunkard baptismal service at Jones's Falls, Md., one of the baptised persons, a young woman, was nearly strangled at the second dip, and so prostrated at the third that she had to be carried to a neighboring house and revived. A thirteen-year-old girl endured the ordeal with a smiling face. Each was in the ice cold water at least ten minutes.

Dr. Henry Collier, a Georgia dentist, was set upon the other night by three negroes, who demanded his money. Putting his hand in his pocket and saying, "Well, I suppose I'll have to give it to you," Dr. Collier pulled a pistol and did give it to them. He killed one, wounded another, captured the third and marched him to the lockup. The fourth footpad was lucky enough to get away.

A huge California hawk swooped down on a sleeping cat at Santa Rosa the other day, and bore it squealing and scratching high in the air. When about 500 feet high the hawk lost its grip, and the cat came down with fearful velocity, but the hawk caught it again just before it struck the the earth, and was carrying it off, when suddenly both fell like lead to the ground. The cat had bitten through the hawk's head killing it instantly, and the fall killed the cat.

R. B. Swankin of North Manchester, Ind., had the reputation of whipping his wife and abusing his children. One night a mob of men and boys went to his house and told him he must quit the town at once. They gave him time to pack two gripsacks, and then they marched him down the main street, a big fellow walking behind and cutting his legs with a cattle whip. When the town limits were reached he was stripped and soundly whipped with blacksnake whips. This is the second occurrence of the kind reported from Indiana within a few weeks.

Steamboat Frank, a Modoc Indian who was captured at the time of the Modoc war, and who is still a prisoner of the United States, is attending, by permit of the Government, the Oak Grove Seminary in Maine. He now calls himself Frank Modoc, and is studying for the ministry. He is making good progress in his studies, and is apparently a devout Christian. He is proud of his descent from a long line of Modoc chieftains, and conducts himself with true Indian dignity.

The prevention of decay in wood is said to be effectively accomplished by exhausting the air from the pores and filling them with a gutta percha solution, a substance which preserves the wood alike from moisture, water, and the action of the sun. The solution is made by mixing two-thirds of gutta percha to one-third of parafine, this mixture being then heated to liquify the gutta percha, when it is readily introduced into the pores of the wood, the effect of the gutta percha being, when it becomes cool, to harden the pores.

A goose farm is one of the curiosities of agriculture on the eastern shore of Virginia. Within an area of about 3,000 acres live 5,000 geese, of several varieties, attended by herders and regularly fed with corn, &c. The object is the collecting of down for quilts and pillows, and once in about six weeks a plucking takes place. Only the breast and the sides under the wings are plucked, and it requires the yield of nearly 100 geese to weigh a pound. The raw feathers are sent to Philadelphia for cleaning and sorting.

One of the clergymen of Louisville is at any rate consistent in his opposition to Sunday newspapers. To a church notice which he had printed in a Saturday evening newspaper he added a request to the Sunday newspapers not to copy it, and in a note to the editor wrote: I learn that my church announcements frequently appear in the Sunday papers. They are copied from the Saturday evening papers. I am conscientiously and out and out opposed to Sabbath desecration, and do not wish to appear to encourage Sunday papers by using them even in this way."

HOUSEHOLD.

Plain and Practical

DOUGHNUTS.—One cup of sugar, one cup of sweet milk, two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of lard, one teaspoonful of soda, two spoonfuls of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of nutmeg. Beat the sugar and lard together until light, then add the eggs well beaten. Mix with flour as soft as possible, and make it stiff enough to roll out.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—For a large loaf take one-half pint of rye meal, one pint of sifted Indian meal, one pint of sour milk, one-half gill of molasses, one spoonful of salt, and one large teaspoonful of soda. Mix all the ingredients except the soda, dissolve that in a little boiling water and add last, stirring the mixture thoroughly. Grease a brown bread tin, or pail, cover it, set it into a kettle of boiling water, and steam it four hours. Remove the lid, and set the pail in the oven a few minutes to brown the top of the bread.

SALLY LUNN.—One quart of flour, a piece of butter the size of an egg, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, two eggs, two cupfuls of milk, two teaspoonfuls of cream-tartar, one teaspoonful of saleratus, and a little salt.

Sift the cream-tartar, salt and saleratus with the flour; add the eggs, the butter melted in one-half of the milk. Dissolve the saleratus in the other half of the milk, and add all together very thoroughly. Bake in shallow pans.

WHITE ROLLS.—One cup of graham flour, one cup of white flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of melted butter, two cups of milk, baked in a hot oven in gem pans. Use Dover egg-beater to stir the whole mass to a creamy lightness at the last moment.

A GOOD CAKE.—One cup of sour cream, one cup of powdered sugar, one and one-half cups of flour, two eggs, one cup of raisins, one level teaspoonful of soda, one heaping teaspoonful of extract of vanilla. After mixing the other ingredients, add last the flour, and the raisins rolled in flour. Beat the mixture until it is creamy, then pour in the pans and bake at once.

Hints and Suggestions.

How many women there are, with small families to do for, who adopt hard ways to do their housework that it is impossible for them to enjoy any leisure.

Allow thirty minutes for boiling rice and forty five minutes for baking them. In boiling them, if for boiling, and put them in boiling water which shall just cover them. When done pour off every drop of the water and put a towel over the kettle a few minutes.

No prettier fashion of wearing the hair is seen, than a simple coronet, made of the hair being combed to the middle of the back, loosely braided, and pinned so as to give a graceful, fluffy appearance.

One bushel and twelve quarts of shelled corn, or its equivalent in other grain, will keep a fowl a year. And that the average hen will lay ten and a half dozen eggs per annum makes it certain for you to realize a profit of $1 20 to $1 75 per annum according as the prices of eggs, poultry and grain are varied by the market or locality.

Sometimes a wick becomes too short to carry up the kerosene and the latter runs out. If you have not time to put in a new wick a piece of cotton rag pinned in will answer every purpose and make a good feeder. If a hole should be burnt in the glass chimney paste on a piece of paper, which may often be done in a hurry, and it will answer its purpose for the time, or until you can get a new one. Sometimes the burners of the lamps get gummy and prevent the wicks moving freely. Boil them up in suds over a fire for a time and they will become entirely clean and work well.

A little turpentine in the wash-tub will make clothes very white, and will also remove incorrigible stains from white goods. A tablespoonful of turpentine to a boiler or or a teaspoonful to two gallons of water. There is no smell, the boiling process

If ink is spilled on the carpet put enough salt on it to absorb it. Take more salt and put on more salt, rubbing it well into the ink-spot. Repeat it until all the ink is taken up, then brush the salt well out. If properly done not a trace of ink will remain. If coal-oil is spilled use the same manner described above. I have tried both these remedies used with success.

Teething, feverish children can be quieted by bathing them in warm water in which you have dissolved a large spoonful of saleratus.

AMANDA L. BARTHOLOMEW.

A simple parsonage—plain and lowly—
Where ivies rambled up and down
With sweet-brier roses.
A place the earliest sunbeams hid,
Nor left, 'till shadowed by the mist
The Night unclosed.

'Twas here she wrought with patient care
A life whose incense filled the air
With gladness only.
Here heard her call to enter rest,
And left the home, a broken nest,
Bereft and lonely.

To children's hearts, and hearts grown old
With anguish, 'tis a lesson long,
And sad the learning,
That prayers not heaven can e'er answer
That loved ones drifted to that shore
Beyond returning.

We've learned farewell oft through death's portal
She—welcome—where there are no tears
But joys supernal
And closely folds earth's loving hands
Within the house not made with hands
Secure, eternal.

O Mother, with the soft brown eyes
In thy fair home beyond the skies
Am I expected?
Can'st thou not tell me at last,
When 'cross that threshold all have passed
I shall not be rejected!

N EGYPTIAN ROMANCE.

CHAPTER XLII.

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND—THE PRINCESS'S ULTIMATUM.

aving both Frank Donelly and his lovely in their respective prison cells, we will the war minister in his attempt to ure the liberation of the latter.

Behold Arabi Pasha, therefore, once more the connivance and with the active as- nce of Elmarr the buffoon, in the pres- e of the beautiful Egyptian princess, who ives her supposed female visitor with an ard show of joy and welcome, though heart is dark within her by reason that guesses why he has come.

ie lies in voluptuous abandon amidst aped up piles of amber satin cushions form her couch she waits for him to k, but though she is outwardly so com- nt and calm the labored heaving of her gnificent and almost nude breast, and the ose working of her little naked henna ed toes, as one moment she thrusts her ivory feet inside her embossed leather, filigree-worked slippers and then next them out again, sufficiently shows the ard, agitation of her mind. Her full, y arms are bare to the very shoulders, the golden circles that clasp them here there sink into their yielding softness, the heavy ebon masses of her perfum- mbound hair seem to flow all over her inky rivulets, causing her clear brown ly by no means unlovely skin to seem pos- ly fair by the contrast. In short, she d a woman capable in every way of ing a man's brain and scorching up his rt, and perhaps the knowledge of this ged her at the little effect her beauty ed to have upon her visitor.

"Have you run the peril of having your stricken from off your shoulders and mine being treated in like manner only to at me as a child looks at a medicine tle!" she exclaimed petulantly, after a moments of silence on both their parts. Why do you not hasten to confess that I so lovely that you could not keep away me, despite my advice that you should so until my brother had lost all power to you, until in fact you were on his throne be in your dungeon?"

"I would have done so, Zeeneh, had you taken an unfair advantage of me, had not surreptitiously got into your power whom you know is dear to me, and, as believe, to do her an injury. I know your rish nature well."

"The tiger is the most graceful of beasts, I thank you for the compliment of com- ing me to one. Yes, I have your lily ted Feringhee girl in safe custody, but ll swear to you if you like that the day on hich I deliver her over to you she shall be plump and as white as any houri of radise."

The promise sounded well to the ear, but ere was a something in the accentuation the words that the war minister did not e, and which caused him to rejoin with: "Zeneh, you speak fairly with your lips, t falsely from your heart. Though you mise to deliver the Frankish girl over to without a bruise or scar on her adorable h, you have yet resolved to punish her in me terrible manner or you would not have en at the trouble of bringing her hither. ou cannot swear to me that I am wrong."

"Tell me first, do you love this Feringhee her beauty or for her mind?"

"Allah! what a question. Why, for her uty, of course, for beauty is the gift of d, whereas mind, bah! that is what is cked into the head in youth by the peda- gogue and in after years by experience, and older and uglier a woman grows the more gets of it."

"Then give to me this girl's mind and I ll guarantee not to injure her beauty."

"You must be more explicit, Zeeneh, I now not yet what you mean."

"I will tell you, and indeed I am thinking much of doing you a service as of pleasur- myself, for as long as this Frankish girl ains her mind she will hate you, by reason that she loves another, and, furthermore, in grieving for that other she will fret herself in and weep away the brightness of her yes, so that in time she will be scarcely orth the possession. But when once I have taken away from her that useless thing, her mind, she will no longer fret, for her grief will depart with her knowledge, and she will grow as attached to you as a dog would do. I will bathe her each day in milk, so that she shall retain her snows, and maintain her plumpness with cream and oil and rahat al loncoum, and when I give her to you she shall, as I said before, be as white and lovely as one of the prophet's houris."

"But you studiously avoid telling me how you intend to kill her mind?"

The princess's eyes flashed, and her great brown bosom heaved as she rejoined:

"I will have her held down naked on the floor for hours at a time, whilst stingless scorpions and huge hairy spiders, whose poison bags have been drawn, creep to and fro over the snowy whiteness of her flesh, and equally harmless but still more tickling centipedes shall each drag his hundred clinging legs over the same fair, broad pathway, whilst every other hideous insect and reptile that Egypt knows, yet all equally harmless, shall join those that I have already mentioned on the smooth and glossy premises, and the more she writhes and pants the closer they will cling, until at last they will drive her mad, mad, mad."

She almost shrieked the last words, so great was her excitement; but at this full disclosure of her terrible and fiendish intentions her visitor grew equally agitated.

"You beautiful fiend, I dare you to prosecute your foul intentions on this innocent English girl. I also command you to give her up to me at once—at once, I say!"

But his words only infuriated the princess still more.

She sprang to her feet, with a rattle and clatter of all her bracelets and bangles and a quiver of her plump, glossy limbs, and confronting her visitor in an attitude of defiance exclaimed, tauntingly:

"You dare me? You command me? Why, at the mere clapping of my hands the eunuch guard would rush to my aid and in a single minute lay your head at my feet. I refuse to give the Feringhee girl up to you. I have and I will hold; for the eagle high-poised in air is not wont to give up the prey which he grasps in his talons at the bidding of the wingless, earth-prowling wolf. I have promised that you shall receive the girl from my hands as white as a lily and as beautiful as a houri, and if you dare to menace me again it will only cause me to regret that I have promised so much."

The war minister saw that threats were of no avail, so he next tried diplomacy.

"Can I not buy her at a price? I mean to say, her immunity from harm?" he asked.

The princess seemed annoyed and yet attracted by the question.

She felt, indeed, like the dog in the fable, strongly inclined to drop the substance in her greed to snap at the larger shadow.

But a moment's reflection seemed to open up to her a way by which to secure both mouthfuls, and looking fixedly at the war minister, so that she might detect the slightest intention on his part to deceive her, she said slowly and distinctly:

"You might be able to redeem her with the blood of her entire race, the blood of all, I mean, who still remain in Egypt. Will you shed it for her sake?"

"Allah, Allah! How can you have conceived so deep a hatred against her race?"

"Because its women are free like the flowers and able to show their loveliness to the world and win what is to our sex the supremest of all delights, admiration. I hate their women because they can do this, whilst I can not, and I hate their men because the only one of them who ever beheld my beauty was moved thereby, but preferred that of the girl who is at present my prisoner, and whom even you would like, if you only dared, to place above my head."

"Zeeneh, I cannot command a wholesale massacre of Christians merely to please a woman."

"The question is not that of pleasing a woman, but of preserving a girl."

Arabi Pasha winced but made out: "I cannot do it even for that, Zeeneh."

"Then, by Allah and the prophet I will do unto the girl what I have threatened."

"To the care of Allah and the Prophet I must consign her, then, rather than commit so great a crime. I will not stain the sacredness of our cause by unnecessary bloodshed, no matter how you may seek to drive me to it."

The princess was not so enraged at this speech as her visitor had feared she would be, perhaps by reason that she was gratified to learn that the war minister did not love the English girl to such an extent as willingly to commit a gigantic crime for her sake.

"Well, do as you please," said she; "this is no business of mine. Whatever betides, one the day that Egypt belongs solely to the Egyptians, and you are hailed as its Khedive, I will become your Valide Khanoum and hand over to you, as the most beautiful of your slave girls, the Feringhee maiden whom I now hold in sure custody. This palace will than be yours and no woman in the harem will be able to draw her curtain against you. Until that time arrives, however, you know full well that it would be death to seek her whom you would release if you could, and as your life belongs not to yourself, but to the nation, you will hardly care to jeopardize it in order to save the wits of a girl who would now be far happier without them, and of much less trouble to you in the possession as well. Is it not better to have her smiling blankly on thee than to have her forever weeping, moaning and upbraiding? Go to, thou art a fool. Depart and leave me free to enjoy my pleasures, which heaven knows are few enough, imprisoned forever within stone walls or behind a hideous face veil when I take the air. But I mean to have some delightful hours with the Feringhee wench ere I have to give her up to thee, and not of a single one of them will I be robbed. I have even a slab of black marble for her snowy nakedness to be stretched on, and thou mayest picture to thyself how radiant it will look and how I shall enjoy its quivering as the loathsome things creep over it. Now go, for I would not speak another word though you stayed for hours."

As Arabi Pasha knew that the strong willed woman would keep her word he groaned deeply and suffered Elmarr to lead him away in the same manner as she had introduced him.

CHAPTER XLIII.

THE PRINCESS AND THE BUFFOON ARE FRIGHTENED BY THE DEVIL.

Thus was our beautiful Nellie left entirely to the mercy of the woman who hated her.

Arabi Pasha had quitted the palace wondering how it was possible to serve her and much fearing that his visit to the seraglio had done her more harm than good.

He went back to his house in the arsenal and wrote a letter to Mr. and Mrs. Trezarr at Cairo, stating that he had discovered where their daughter was, but not a word about her marriage to the young dragoon officer, and inclosing a safe conduct under his hand and seal he urged them to come on to Alexandria at once; for he had a faint idea in his head of a way in which they might be able to deliver her without his own name being at all mixed up in the matter, for the Princess Zeeneh being his active ally in the rebellion he dared neither expose her nor provoke her to expose him, since the one course would be dishonorable and the other might yet prove dangerous.

Meanwhile Nellie remained a prisoner in that innermost of the three rooms, which seemed to form at all events a portion of the Princess Zeeneh's especial suite, and to which none of the other ladies of the seraglio not even the Khedive's chief wife, had any right of access. And as it happened, this was in reality a somewhat unusual case.

Notwithstanding all the threats that the princess had used towards her and her deep and bitter grief at what was supposed had been the terrible fate of her husband, Nellie's bodily fatigue was so great that no sooner had she grown weary of looking forth from the window and thrown herself down on a pile of soft cushions in a corner than she sank into a deep and profound sleep, nor awoke therefrom until night had usurped the place of day and her prison room was enveloped in profound darkness.

For a moment she could not remember where she was, and when the knowledge came back to her she grew frightened at the pitchy blackness by which she was surrounded, but at length catching sight of two friendly stars looking down upon her, she crept over to the window so as to feel nearer to them, for the Arab belief that the stars are the eyes of the angels was a pleasant thought to ponder over at a time like the present.

No sooner had she reached the window than she saw what looked like other stars, each having a shimmering reflection, but she knew that these were the lights of the three British ironclads.

As she knelt there, leaning on her arms, and almost panting for air, for the night was intensely close and sultry, she could hear the little wavelets lapping the foundations of her prison wall, and also after a while another sound which somehow or other suggested to her the idea of the digging of graves.

Yes, it certainly resembled the measured strokes of spades, the dull thud of earth as it fell on earth, and now and then there was a murmur as of subdued voices and a faint rolling and creaking, such as might have been caused by the passage to and fro of hand-barrows.

Pressing her face as close against the window as she was able, she looked down to right and left and soon became aware that a number of tiny, glow-worm like lights were moving to and fro almost underneath that side of the palace, and about two hundred yards to the right of the window she was looking out from, but hardly had she made this discovery when the door of her room was suddenly opened and the flash of a lamp almost blinded her.

Only for a moment, by reason of its suddenness and its excessive brightness, and then Nellie recognized behind it the Princess Zeeneh and the horrid woman with the sickly leer. This witch followed her mistress and fastened the door behind her.

"Put down the lamp on that low bracket," said the princess, and directly she was obeyed she turned fiercely upon the English girl and added:

"Go you over to that pile of cushions directly under the light. You need not choose your attitude, because we shall put you in several before we have done with you. We are going to tickle you, little one, that is all, to-night."

She laughed bitterly as she uttered the last word, for she had resolved to torture her prisoner by degrees.

Nellie did as she was bidden; but the next command was that she should strip herself, and this, rather than be roughly handled by the two women, she also commenced to do, and indeed with somewhat of alacrity, for a hope arose within her that her naked loveliness would soften her persecutors' hearts towards her and force them to treat her gently.

She began to doubt its power, however, when upon the removal of her dress (one that she had obtained of Marie) and the consequent exposure of her exquisite neck, arms and shoulders, the princess merely gave vent to a contemptuous laugh, and raising her own great, brown but by no means unlovely bosoms, drew forth from underneath them a withered flower and a gem that seemed to flash with rainbow hued flames.

"Behold, you thrice accursed Kaffir, the ring that I gave him when I lowered my lineage, my rank, my faith and my pride in the very dust for his sake. Yes, I risked death and far worse, ineffable disgrace, to behold him yet again, but when the summons of the lotus had brought him unto my presence and I was ready to surrender all things up unto him, aye, even to the wrecking of my faith by marriage with a Ghiour, he flung my love and my wondrous condescension back in my face, and had the effrontery to tell me that 'twas an earthworm like thee who had dared to enter into competition for his love with a daughter of the Pharaohs and who had furthermore borne away the prize. Prize, indeed! It would have been one that would have destroyed my soul. Yet, as surely as that in his insulting and contemptuous indifference to my charms he cast even my love gift, this ring, upon the floor ere he withdrew forever from my presence, I will kill thy mind, even though I dare not bruise thy body. Dare not, did I say? By Allah! I will dare if I choose. Strip, accursed Feringhee!—strip!"

The great tears rose to Nellie's eyes and trinkled down on to her beautiful breasts.

Her fingers were busy with her corset clasps now, but they trembled so that they could not undo them.

But the princess was in no hurry, for she found it pleasant to gloat over her prisoner's plump and quivering whiteness, on the rounding of her arms, the dimpling of her shoulders as she fought with the obstinate corset clasps.

But presently one gave way, then another, then another.

Nellie looked down upon her beauteous self with a sigh, and then up at the two women in silent questioning, for she felt that her loveliness was pleading far more eloquently for pity and gentle treatment than words could do.

She could hardly imagine that any one could possess sufficient cruelty to redden it even with slaps, and thus it was almost with a smile of victory that she looked up, but the expression of the face changed into one of terror as the princess screamed out;

"I cannot keep my hands off her. She makes me giddy and my heart beat to look at her. She must owe such beauty to the devil, for she can have got it in no other way. She must have sold herself to the fiend to win my Feringhee lover from me. I do not wonder now that she succeeded, let the devil protect her now if he can."

With these words she flung herself on the poor girl, and thud, thud, thud went her fists against the yielding, palpitating flesh, whereupon the lovely victim uttered a shrill scream, and in an instant a vivid and ghastly glare lighted up the entire chamber, causing both her assailants to shriek in turn and rush therefrom in the most abject state of terror.

CHAPTER XLIV.

SAVED BY THE ELECTRIC FLASH—HAS SHE AN AMULET?

The ghastly white glare that had suddenly invaded Nellie's prison chamber, and which seemed brighter than the sun at noonday, was in fact the electric light, flashed along the coast from the British ironclad Superb, so that it might be ascertained whether in disobedience to the Sultan's orders and the promise of the Egyptian notables the forts were being still further strengthened and armed.

This, to the Egyptians, perfectly novel method of illumination suddenly flashed upon the working party, whose spades and barrows Nellie had heard, and whose glow-worm-like lanterns she had seen, as it was afterwards ascertained gave them such a scare that they threw down their tools and rushed pell mell into the town, screaming out that "there was a new sun and it had come out of the water."

Since a body of men were so alarmed at the strange sight, it is by no means surprising that the sudden and terrible glare caused the Princess Zeeneh to leave off pummeling Nellie and to jump to the rapid conclusion that, as the foul fiend had bestowed such beauty upon her, he was coming in person in order to see that she wasn't robbed of it, and the same idea having seized upon the buffoon, their helter-skelter retreat was the most natural thing in the world.

They locked the room door in their rear, and when this had been done the princess summoned up sufficient courage to stoop down and peer through the keyhole.

But though the light had by that time quitted the room again, the fact did not at all reassure her, but rather the reverse, and she said to the buffoon in answer to her question whether they shouldn't now go in again and finish what they had intended to do:

"I am afraid Shaitan only left because we left. If we went in again he would come again also, and perhaps show us his terrible form or even tear us to pieces. You may depend upon it, Elmarr, that the Kaffir has an amulet about her by which she summons the fiend whenever she needs him, and I noticed that instead of trying to clutch my wrists as I struck at her, she merely shielded her breasts with one fat white arm and dived her other hand down amongst the clothing which she had just taken off. It was assuredly to feel for the amulet, and the moment that she grasped it that fearful light came, which must have been the reflection of the flames of hell, and the next instant Shaitan himself would have been clutching us if we had not got away as quickly as we did. I'll never try any tricks on her again until that amulet is got away from her. Be that your task, good Elmarr."

The buffoon looked by no means overpleased with the job that had been set her.

"Inshallah, I don't feel like disturbing her again to-night," said she. "No, not even to bring the light away, I would not do it for the brightest jewel in your highness's casket."

"I do not require it of you, good Elmarr. Let her have the lamp and the rest of the night as well to herself. But when day comes it will be a very different matter. The devil and his imps have little or no power in the daylight, and as you will be the Kaffir's sole attendant, you must then get the amulet either by guile or by force. Strike her, bite her, do anything to her in order to force her to give it up to you, for now that I have looked upon her I cannot bring myself to spare her. I throw my promise to the winds. I will not only tickle, but I will thump and claw as well, aye, and I will whip her, too. Oh, how I will whip her for daring to be more lovely than myself, and how she shall writhe and palpitate and quiver in the licking, burning smarting coils of the thong.

Left alone, Nellie even rushed to the window to learn the cause of the light, for she herself was somewhat alarmed thereby, fancying that the palace might be in flames.

When, however, she saw that it was streaming forth from the black side of one of the huge British ironclads and the extremity of its rays moving slowly along the coast, all her alarm vanished.

She now knew what it was and guessed its object as well, and the thought that brave and chivalrous fellow countrymen were working it and studying its results, while she was a hapless captive in a Mohammedan harem, threatened hourly with persecutive torture and, perhaps, murder, affected her so deeply that she retreated with faltering steps to her pile of cushions, and sinking thereon contemplated with tears and sobs 'neath the mellow light of the oil lamp the pink splotches on her plump, dimpled shoulders and full, rounded right arm, where the furious princess' blows had fallen on her, moaning piteously "Oh, how could she? How could she have done it?"

And so she gradually sank down at full length among the yielding cushions, and falling again asleep awoke no more until the morning.

FEARFUL MURDERS BY A BOY.

He Kills His Father, Mother, Brother, And Sister.

One of the most horrible murders ever known was perpetrated the other morning near Osage Mission, Kansas. Mr Mendell, living thirteen miles northeast of that town, was awakened about 3 o'clock by a scream. He went to the door and was met by Willie Sells, the son of a neighbor, J. W. Sells. The boy cried out:

"Mr. Mendell, a man is at our house with a hatchet, and has hurt father and mother. I don't know how badly."

Mr. Mendell went with the boy, arousing J. T. Rice, another neighbor, on the way. Upon reaching Sell's house a most horrible sight met their eye. In the bed in the north room lay Walter, Willie's eldest brother and bed-fellow, aged 19, his throat cut and the entire top of his head chopped off, exposing the brain, and his left eye hanging upon his cheek. Passing into the south and main room, where a light was burning, they stumbled over the prostrate form of Mr. Sell's, his head crushed and almost severed from his body. Near by lay Mrs. Sells, a lady of 43 years, her head mashed and a fearful gash in her throat. On the bed in the southeast corner of the room lay Ina, Willie's sister, aged 14, killed in the sameway as the others. Lying near Mr. Sells's head was a bloody butcher knife, and on a chair a hatchet, covered with blood.

The boy said that he had been awakened by something, and looking up saw a low, heavyset man with dark hair, cut close, standing in the door. This man stepped in, and, reaching over Willie, struck Walter, who lay on the back of the bed. Willie jumped out and dressed while the man was still in the room. The man rushed out of one door while Willie rushed out of the other, and started up the road on a run, Willie after him. A short distance off stood a man on horseback, holding another horse, upon which the man vaulted, and both made off. Willie then went on to Mr. Mendell's.

After the bodies had been discovered Mr. Rice took Willie home with him, where he slept soundly until morning. A Coroner's jury was impanelled, and the subsequent investigation brought fourth from the boy. Suspicion rested upon him, and he was put on the stand. He swore that he had not washed his hands since the murder, but inspection showed that, while his hands and wrists were clean, there was a water mark above which his forearms were deeply encrusted with blood which appeared to have spattered up his sleeves. Around his finger nails, too, was blood. Upon removing his trousers, his drawers were seen to be spattered with blood, and his bare feet were covered with the same tell-tale marks. His feet fitted all the bloody footmarks to be found. The boy stoutly denied being the murderer, and maintained a bold front throughout.

The conclusion of the inquest was postponed until next day. The boy was smuggled into a buggy by Police Judge Cambern and Deputy Sheriff Locke and driven to jail in Erie for fear of lynching, which appeared imminent. On the way to Erie he said to Mr. Cambern:

"Those fellows tried to get me to say that I did it, but I thought it would be best not to admit it."

There is hardly a doubt that the boy committed the dreadful crime. It is known that Mr. Sells had in his pocketbook $100 in gold and $170 in bills, which were not disturbed, besides three watches. John Hall of Erie has been appointed guardian of the boy.

The Two Angels.

FROM THE GERMAN.

Darkness falls. The voice of day is dying,
Twilight slowly creeps across the sky.
Lo, two brother angels earthward flying—
Sleep and Death—with errands from on high.

One of them, in heavenly beauty glowing,
Scatters grains of slumber far and wide,
Which the rising breezes gently blowing
Waft from house to house on every side.

Soon the weary all are soundly sleeping;
Pain at last the bed of sickness flies,
Sweet repose has hushed the mourner's weeping
Kind oblivion closed his tearful eyes.

Now the aged, weary, care-o'erladen,
And the infant on his mother's arm,
And the ruddy youth and blooming maiden
Sweetly rest without a thought of harm.

"When they waken, brother, they will gladly Praise me for the good which I bestow."
"None to me," the other answered sadly,
"Thanks will render. I am called their foe."

"Nay, for all the good will praise thee, brother,
When unto a brighter life they rise,
When their blessed spirits meet each other
In the shining fields of Paradise."

Conjugal Devotion.

Not long ago as an elderly couple were out walking, a lady on the other side of the street slipped and fell down. The old gentleman rushed across the street, raised his hat and offered to assist her in any possible way. His wife followed him across at a slow pace, and, witnessing his devotion to the stranger, shook her fist at him. "It's all right—it's all right!" he whispered. "Yes, I know it is!" she exclaimed hotly. "Here an unknown woman hurts her toe, and you plough across the street to eat her up with kindness. The other day, when I fell down stairs, you stood and laughed, and wanted to know if I was practising for a circus!"

Nearly every day somebody unearths an "old rhyme" of a meteorological character, such as, "If February gives much snow, a fine summer it doth foreshow"; or, "If March is full of wind and rain, the farmer will have a good crop of grain." These "old rhymes" are now manufactured in every enterprising newspaper office, and they are verified quite as often as the "old rhymes" made a century ago. Here's one, for instance, that may be depended upon: "If in June, July and August no rain there be, a very dry summer you'll surely see."

The Lover's Fatal Blunder.

"Louise," said he, as they sat in the parlor together a few evenings before the rising of the honeymoon—"I ought to tell you that I belong to a Masonic lodge, and have to attend its sessions; so dearest, when we are married you mustn't fret if some evenings I have to be away from my little wifey-pifey." And the designing villain chuckled at his prudence.

"Of course I won't, William," she said softly; "how many lodges do you belong to?"

"Only one, darling," he answered.

"And when does it meet? How often? On what evening?"

"On, once a week—on—on Thursdays."

"Very well; then I shall have you at home every other evening in the week—that will be so nice."

And as she took out her tiny note-book and made a memorandum on the subject, he felt that, after all, he had made a mistake.

MARKDALE MARCH 25 1886

OUR RAILWAY FACILITIES.

Our County is making steady progress, and developing in public improvements as well as individual and local enterprise. Any stranger travelling through our country cannot be but favorobly impressed. The churches and public schools which dot the country throughout, are shure indications of civil and religious progress, without which no community or nation can make substantial advancement.

We wish especially, however, to notice our railway advantages. Those who do not travel, to any great extent from home, (and they are the great majority) are not fully aware of, neither can they appreciate, our railway advantages. Many would be ready to doubt your word, if you should state the fact that the C. P. R. is the longest railway in the world. It is not only the longest, but the best equipped; and for management all the way through, even to the train men, it is noted far and wide for courtesy and gentlemanly conduct,

A person on returning from British Columbia a short time ago, after an absence of several years, expressed his astonishment at our railway advantages; he said he had heard of a narrow guage railway being built back into Grey County, but he found the most comfortable coaches, the most obliging train officials and the greatest general comfort on this line, that he had met with all the way from B. C. Another man we met in Toronto a few weeks since on his way to Markdale from Penetanguishene on the Nortnern Railway, he said he had left that place, 103 miles from Toronto, and it took eight hours to reach the city, and he was nearly frozen to death into the bargain; while he reached Markdale, 10 miles shorter distance, in four hours less time and had every comfort besides.

Those instances are just given to enable those who have not the delightful experience of travelling on those inferior roads, to appreciate our own line, the C. P. R.

PARLIMENTARY.

The great portion of the past two weeks has been taken up in the Riel question.

The members of the big debating society had a grand opportunity to air their eloquence, and good debating has been done on both sides of the house.

A division is likely to take place on this important question to-day, when the Government will doubtless be sustained.

UNSEATED.

Mr. Howland, who was elected Mayor of Toronto Last January with a tremendous majority over Mr. Manning, the largest property holder in the city, has been unseated, not having the necessary property qualification.

It is very doubtful whether Mr. H. can qualify so as to be in a position to offer himself again, while Mr. Manning is about to take a trip across the Atlantic with his family, and will not be a candidate. Ald. Defoe, John Turner and John Withrow are spoken of, with the latter the most likely man.

Going to Penetang.

Mr. D. J. Shanahan has purchased the extensive carriage manufacturing and harness business from Mr. J. Mundy, of Penetanguishene, and leaves Markdale this week for that town.

Mr. Shanahan has been five years in our village, during which time he has, by close application to business, excellent workmanship, honorable dealing and commendable enterprise, built up a trade second to none in the County, and had it not been for the fire of twelve months ago, which consumed his large carriage works, including a splendid stock of material for the following seasons operations, Mr. S. would have no idea of leaving our town. We sincerely regret to loose such a citizen, not only on account of his enterprise and integrity as a business man, but for his enviable social qualities; Mrs. Shanahan is also one of our most respected lady citizens, and we are sure we speak the sentiments of the whole community when we wish them and family every success in their new home.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—There are a few persons who attend the Methodist church, Markhale, who appear totaly void of respect for either the sanctuary or themselves, and make a public exhibition of their ignorance by keeping up a continual whisper in time of service. Should we have to refer again to them, we will give names.

PROPRIETY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Before leaving Markdale I wish to return thanks to the people of the village and surrounding district for their liberal patronage during the four years I did business in Markdale. I very much regret leaving your prosperous town, and sociable kind-hearted people, and would not have thought of doing so, had I not had the misfortune of getting burned out. In my absence howsver, I shall never forget the many kindnesses which we have received as a family from all classes, and especially during my wifes recent illness. With kind regards to all

I am respectfully &c.,

D. J. SHANAHAN.

Kimberley.

From a Correspondent.

There was a meeting here last week to have a talk on our politics, quite a number turned out. William Stuart was appointed chairman. He said the meeting was called to discuss the political situation and to see if we could devise some means to put a stop to the waste of the people's money and the resources of this country. Our fathers left us as good a form of Government as any on the face of this earth for an enlightened people, but altogether unsuited for half civilized nations. We have as much liberty and power as we generally make good use of by our votes, we can drive any Government from power and every man has a vote that is worthy of it. Now gentlemen let us see if the present system of conducting our business is satisfactory. In 1877 our Dominion debt was seventy-five million, in 1886 it is two-hundred and nine millions beside; we had some fine land and timber, we have not much of that now; What has become of it? given away to companies, friends, supporters, &c.

Mr. Hammond was the next speaker. He confined himself mostly to provincial extravagance. He denounced expenditure on the Lieutenant Governor's residence.

Mr. T. Carruthers gave the expenses on Governor General and Ridau Hall, amounting to over two million dollars in the last sixteen years.

The sallery grants was discussed and condemned in severe terms.

The following resolutions were past:

Resolved that this meeting pledges itself not to be influenced by partisan consideration in choosing our future representative to Parliament, but that the wishes of the people shall be the guide to our representative.

That the meeting protests against the expenditure of Ontario Lieutenant Governor's house, and favor the complete abolishing of same, and further expenditure incurred by paying Deputies in the different departments out of the public funds.

That this meeting is in favor of the abolishing of the Dominion Senate as it is a useless and expensive body.

Township Council met on Saturday last here. There were two accounts laid on the table for repairing Dr. Oldeham's cutter, both of which got a six month's hoist.

The Chatsworth News did not come to hand last week.

Mr. Robt. Freeborn has sold his horse "England's Wonder" for the American market.

Rev. Mr. Perry is still unable to attend to circuit work. Rev. Mr. Godfrey, of Brookholm, took his place last Sunday.

Mr. Thos. Armstrong lost a fine young mare last Sunday. Cause, inflamation.

Mr. M. Smith & Son's. have shipped from here, 200 cords of broom handle timber to Central Prison, Toronto. Also six cords shoe last timber.

Miss Douglas, Memonite, has been holding meetings at Griffins Corners and old Williamsford for some time.

A spelling school is held in our village every Monday evening. Misses. Horton, Smith and Moore are leading characters.

On Tuesday there was shipped from here for Winnipeg, one car house hold effects and 8 horses. They were from near Hanover, and saved $18 on the horses by taking this line.

Mr. Lyman Anderson has bought out the Berkeley shingle factory, and is moving the machinery to Holland Centre. Berkeley is fast coming into our corporation.

The Irish Question.

"Phat de ye think av the Oirish Home Rule, that the papers have talked so much abute racintly?" said Dennis McTosey, as O'Phesey gathered up a tray full of glasses, which the crowd had just emptied.
